Every Radical Republican principle which the party is now fighting to maintain, Judge Warmoth has consistently maintained for years; has fought and suffered for them.

many if not all of them, Taliaferro was opposed to until a short time ago, and he never even came out as a Radical Republican until the Tribune nominated him for governor. He was even a conservative when elected president of the constitutional convention. Is this the reason why the Tribune supports him and opposes Judge Warmoth? It looks so. Fosdick, Monroe, Field, Wells, Voorhies, Adams, and Andy Johnson prefer Taliferro to Warmoth, so does the Tribune.

Colored men do you go with Johnson, Monroe, Adams, Wells, and the Tribune, or with Durant, Kelley, Wilson, Waples, and the Republican party?

Hon. O. J. Dunn.

When General Sheridan was looking round for a representative of the colored race who had the capacity, honesty, and influence to represent worthily their interests, many gentlemen of high standing and worth proposed to him the name of O. J. Dunn. Among these gentlemen the editors of the Tribune were prominent and influential, perhaps the most so. They then indorsed O. J. Dunn as in every way a worthy and capable representative of the colored race, as an honorable gentleman and a true Radical. His official and private conduct since has been in strict accordance with the high indorsement of these gentlemen. Why then, we ask, if Mr. Dunn was honorable, reliable, capable, and radical enough for the Tribune in August, 1867, and is the same now, does it oppose him?

Because he accepted the regular nomination of the Republican party for lieutenant-governor, bestowed upon him without his solicitation.

We have not a word to say against Major Dumas. He is an honorable gentleman. We think, however, that if he wished to be lieutenant governor he would have done better to have accepted the nomination of the Republican party. After he declined that, offered him in the spirit of conciliation and kindness, the Tribune is very inconsistent to abuse and villify Mr. Dunn, whom it has formerly indorsed so highly.

Mr. Dunn is a man who will do honor to any position. He has shown himself to be one of the most able, dignified, and upright legislators that has for a long time sat in the city council. He has been true to the interests of the colored men. He will be the next lieutenant governor.

Arkansas.

The new constitution in this state is defeated.

Colored men, do you wish Louisiana to go with Alabama and Arkansas?

If it does farewell to all your hopes! If reconstruction fails it will be through division in your ranks.

Your greatest enemies are those who seek to decoy you into opposition to the regular Republican ticket.

The Taliaferro ticket is aided and abetted by the rebels and the Times.

The rebels seek to defeat the constitution, therefore a vote for Taliaferro is a vote against the constitution. This is the way it stands: If the regular ticket is defeated, a rebel ticket will be elected. Therefore every vote cast for Taliferro is the same as a vote for the rebel ticket.

If the rebel ticket is elected, they will use their power to have the constitution rejected, to defeat the constitutional amendment in the legislature, and to have a new convention without colored suffrage.

So a vote for Taliaferro is a vote against the constitution.

This is your last hope, colored men, the election of the regular ticket throughout.

The Tribune.

In looking over the files of this paper we find the following assumption: "We to-day present the following ticket." "We will complete the ticket as we find time." "We will have a new central committee. "We will mark out such a policy, and select the candidates for the party." Is this the language of a member of a great party, or of a dictator and despot?

CONSTITUTION

—OF THE—

STATE OF LOUISIANA.

Adopted in Convention at New Orleans, Saturday, March 7, 1868.

PREAMBLE.

We, the people of Louisiana, in order to establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this constitution.

CONSTITUTION.

TITLE I.—BILL OF RIGHTS.

Article 1. All men are created free and equal, and have certain inalienable rights; among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. To secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

Art. 2. All persons, without regard to race, color, or previous condition, born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and residents of this state for one year, are citizens of this state. The citizens of this state owe allegiance to the United States; and this allegiance is paramount to that which they owe to the state. They shall enjoy the same civil, political, and public rights and privileges, and be subject to the same pains and penalties.

Art. 3. There shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in this state, otherwise than for the punishment of crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

Art. 4. The press shall be free; every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of this liberty.

Art. 5. The right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition the government, or any department thereof, shall never be abridged.

Art. 6. Prosecutions shall be by indictment or information. The accused shall be entitled to a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the parish in which the offense was committed, unless the venue be changed. He shall not be compelled to give evidence against himself; he shall have the right of being heard by himself or counsel; he shall have the right of meeting the witnesses face to face, and shall have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor. He shall not be tried twice for the same offense.

Art. 7. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient securities, unless for capital offenses, where the proof is evident, or the presumption great, or unless after conviction, for any crime or offense punishable with death or imprisonment at hard labor. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended.

Art. 8. Excessive bail shall not be required; excessive fines shall not be imposed; nor cruel or unusual punishments inflicted.

Art. 9. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated; and no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, or the person or things to be seized.

Art. 10. All courts shall be open; and every person for injury done him in his land, goods, person, or reputation shall have adequate remedy by due process of law, and justice administered without denial or unreasonable delay.

Art. 11. No law shall be passed fixing the price of manual labor.

Art. 12. Every person has the natural right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience. No religious test shall be required as a qualification for office.

Art. 13. All persons shall enjoy equal rights and privileges upon any conveyance of a public character; and all places of business, or of public resort, or for which a license is required by either state, parish, or municipal authority, shall be deemed places of a public character, and shall be opened to the accommodation and patronage of all persons, without distinction or discrimination on account of race or color.

Art. 14. The rights enumerated in this title shall not be construed to limit or abridge other rights of the people not herein expressed.

TITLE II.—LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

Art. 15. The legislative power of the state shall be vested in two distinct branches; the one to be styled the house of representatives, the other the senate, and both the general assembly of the state of Louisiana.

Art. 16. The members of the house of representatives shall continue in office for two years from the day of the closing of the general elections.

Art. 17. Representatives shall be chosen on the first Monday in November every two years, and the election shall be completed in one day. The general assembly shall meet annually on the first Monday in January, unless a different day be appointed by law, and their sessions shall be held at the seat of government.

Art. 18. Every elector under this constitution shall be eligible to a seat in the house of representatives; and every elector who has reached the age of twenty-five years, shall be eligible to the senate; Provided, that no person shall be a representative or senator unless at the time of his election he be a qualified elector of the representative or senatorial district from which he is elected.

Art. 19. Elections for members of the general assembly shall be held at the several election precincts established by law.

Art. 20. Representation in the house of representatives shall be equal and uniform; and after the first general assembly elected under this constitution shall be ascertained and regulated by the total population, each parish in the state being entitled to at least one representative. A census of the state by state authority shall be taken in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-five, and every ten years thereafter. In case of informality, omission, or error in the census returns from any parish or election district, the general assembly may order a new census taken in such parish or election district; but until the state census of eighteen hundred and seventy five, the apportionment of the state shall be made on the basis of the census of the United States for the year eighteen hundred and seventy.

Art. 21. The general assembly, at the first session after the making of each enumeration, shall apportion the representation amongst the several parishes and representative districts, on the basis of the total population, as aforesaid. A representative number shall be fixed, and each parish and representative district shall have as many representatives as the number of its total population will entitle it to have; and an additional representative for any fraction exceeding one-half of the representative number. The number of representatives shall never exceed one hundred and twenty, nor be less than ninety.

Art. 22. Until an apportionment shall be made in accordance with the provisions of article 20, the representation in the senate and house of representatives shall be as follows:

For the parish of Orleans:

And the state shall be divided into the following senatorial districts, to wit:

The first, second, and third representative districts of New Orleans shall form one senatorial district, and elect three senators.

The fourth, fifth, and sixth representative districts of New Orleans shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The seventh, eighth, and ninth representative districts of New Orleans and the parish of St. Bernard shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The tenth representative district of New Orleans shall form one district, and elect one senator.

Orleans right bank and the parish of Plaquemines shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Jefferson, St. Charles, and St. John Baptist shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Ascension and St. James shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Assumption, Lafourche, and Terrebonne shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Vermillion and St. Mary shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Calcasieu, Lafayette, and St. Landry shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Livingston, St. Helena, Washington, and St. Tammany shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Pointe Coupee, East Feliciana, and West Feliciana shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parish of East Baton Rouge shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of West Baton Rouge, Iberville, and St. Martin shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Concordia and Avoyelles shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Tensas and Franklin shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Carroll, Madison, and Morehouse shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Ouachita and Caldwell shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Jackson and Union shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Bossier, Bienville, and Claiborne shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parish of Caddo shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of De Soto, Natchitoches, and Sabine shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parish of Rapides shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Catahoula and Winn shall form one district, and elect one senator.

Thirty-six senators in all.

Art. 23. The house of representatives shall choose its speaker and other officers.

Art. 24. Electors in all cases except treason, felony, or breach of the peace, shall be privileged from arrest during their attendance on, going to, and returning from elections.

Art. 25. At its first session under this constitution, the general assembly shall provide by law that the names and residence of all qualified electors shall be registered, in order to entitle them to vote; but the registry shall be free of cost to the elector.

Art. 26. No person shall be entitled to vote at any election held in this state, except in the parish of his residence, and at the election precinct in which he is registered; Provided, That no voter in removing from one parish to another shall lose the right to vote in the former until he has acquired it in the latter.

Art. 27. The members of the senate shall be elected for the term of four years; and when assembled, the senate shall have power to choose its own officers, except as hereinafter provided.

Art. 28. The general assembly shall divide the state into senatorial districts whenever it apportions representation in the house of representatives.

Art. 29. No parish shall be divided in the formation of a senatorial district, the parish of Orleans excepted; and whenever a new parish shall be created it shall be attached to the senatorial district from which most of its territory is taken, or to another contiguous district, at the discretion of the general assembly, but shall not be attached to more than one district. The number of senators shall be thirty-six, and they shall be apportioned among the senatorial districts according to the total population of said districts.

Art. 30. In all apportionments of the senate the total population of the state shall be divided by the number thirty-six, and the result produced by this division shall be the senatorial ratio entitling a senatorial district to a senator.

Single or contiguous parishes shall be formed into districts having a population the nearest possible to the number entitling a district to a senator; and if the apportionment to make a parish or district fall short of, or exceed the ratio, then a district may be formed having not more than two senators; but not otherwise. No new apportionment shall have the effect of abridging the term of service of any senator already elected at the time of making the apportionment. After an enumeration has been made, as directed in the twentieth article, the general assembly shall not pass any law, till an apportionment of representation in both houses of the general assembly shall be made.

Art. 31. At the first session of the general assembly after this constitution goes into effect, the senators shall be divided equally by lot into two classes; the seats of the senators of the first class to be vacated at the expiration of the term of the first house of representatives; those of the second class at the expiration of the term of the second house of representatives; so that one-half shall be chosen every two years successively. When a district shall have elected two senators, their respective terms of office shall be determined by lot between themselves.

Art. 32. The first election for senators shall be held at the same time with the election for representatives; and thereafter there shall be elections of senators at the same time with each general election of representatives, to fill the places of those senators whose term of office may have expired.

Art. 33. Not less than a majority of the members of each house of the general assembly shall form a quorum to transact business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and shall have full power to compel the attendance of absent members.

Art. 34. Each house of the general assembly shall judge of the qualifications, election, and returns of its members, but a contested election shall be determined in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

Art. 35. Each house of the general assembly may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish a member for disorderly conduct, and with a concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member, but not a second time for the same offense.

Art. 36. Each house of the general assembly shall keep and publish weekly a journal of its proceedings; and the yeas and nays of the members on any question at the desire of any two of them, shall be entered on the journal.

Art. 37. Each house may punish by imprisonment any person not a member for disrespect and disorderly behavior in its presence, or for obstructing any of its proceedings; such imprisonment shall not exceed ten days for any one offense.

Art. 38. Neither house shall adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which it may be sitting, during the sessions of the general assembly, without the consent of the other.

Art. 39. The members of the general assembly shall receive from the public treasury a compensation for their services, which shall be eight dollars per day during their attendance, going to, and returning from the sessions of their respective houses. This compensation may be increased or diminished by law, but no alteration shall take effect during the period of service of the members of the house of representatives by which such alteration shall have been made. No session shall extend beyond the period of sixty days, to date from its commencement; and any legislative action had after the expiration of said period of sixty days shall be null and void; but the first general assembly that shall convene after the adoption of this constitution may continue in session for one hundred and twenty days.

Art. 40. The members of the general assembly, in all cases except treason, felony, or breach of the peace, shall be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the sessions of their respective houses, and going to or returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either house shall not be questioned in any other place.

Art. 41. No senator or representative during the term for which he was elected, nor for one year thereafter, shall be appointed to any civil office of profit under this state which shall have been created, or the emoluments of which may have been increased during the time such senator or representative was in office.

ART. 42. No bill shall have the force of a law until on three several days it be read in each house of the general assembly, and free discussion allowed thereon, unless four-fifths of the house where the bill is pending may deem it expedient to dispense with this rule.

ART. 43. All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the house of representatives, but the senate may propose amendments as in other bills; Provided, it shall not introduce any matter under the color of an amendment which does not relate to raising revenue.

ART. 44. The general assembly shall regulate by whom and in what manner writs of election shall be issued to fill the vacancies which may occur in either branch thereof.

ART. 45. On the confirmation or rejection of the officers to be appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, the vote shall be taken by yeas and nays; and the names of the senators voting for and against the appointments respectively shall be entered on the journals to be kept for the purpose, and made public on or before the end of each session.

ART. 46. Returns of all elections for members of the general assembly shall be made to the secretary of state.

ART. 47. In the year in which a regular election for a senator of the United States is to take place the members of the general assembly shall meet in the hall of the house of representatives on the second Monday following the meeting of the general assembly, and proceed to said election.

TITLE III.—EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

ART. 48. The supreme executive power of the state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Louisiana. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and together with the lieutenant governor, chosen for the same term, be elected as follows: The qualified electors for representatives shall vote for governor and lieutenant governor at the time and place of voting for representatives; the returns of every election shall be sealed up and transmitted by the proper returning officer to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives on the second day of the session of the general assembly then to be holden. The members of the general assembly shall meet in the house of representatives to examine and count the votes. The person having the greatest number of votes for governor shall be declared duly elected: but in case of a tie vote between two or more candidates, one of them shall immediately be chosen governor by joint vote of the members of the general assembly. The person having the greatest number of votes polled for lieutenant governor shall be lieutenant governor; but in case of a tie vote between two or more candidates, one of them shall be immediately chosen lieutenant governor by joint vote of the members of the general assembly.

ART. 49. No person shall be eligible to the office of governor or lieutenant governor who is not a citizen of the United States, and a resident of this state two years next preceding his election.

ART. 50. The governor shall be ineligible for the succeeding four years after the expiration of the time for which he shall have been elected.

ART. 51. The governor shall enter on the discharge of his duties on the second Monday in January next ensuing his election, and shall continue in office until the Monday next succeeding the day that his successor shall be declared duly elected, and shall have taken the oath or affirmation required by the constitution.

ART. 52. No member of congress or any person holding office under the United States government shall be eligible to the office of governor or lieutenant governor.

ART. 53. In case of impeachment of the governor, his removal from office, death, refusal or inability to qualify, or to discharge the powers and duties of his office, resignation or absence from the tate, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term, or until the governor, absent or impeached, shall return or be acquitted, or the disability be removed. The general assembly may provide by law for the case of removal, impeachment, death, resignation, disability, or refusal to qualify, of both the governor and the lieutenant governor, declaring what officer shall act as governor; and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability be removed, or for the remainder of the term.

ART. 54. The lieutenant governor or officer discharging the duties of governor, shall, during his administration, receive the same compensation to which the governor would have been entitled had he continued in office.

ART. 55. The lieutenant governor shall by virtue of his office be president of the senate, but shall only vote when the senate is equally divided. Whenever he shall administer the government, or shall be unable to attend as president of the senate, the senators shall elect one of their own members as president of the senate for the time being.

ART. 56. The governor shall receive a salary of eight thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly on his own warrant.

ART. 57. The lieutenant governor shall receive a salary of three thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly upon his own warrant.

ART. 58. The governor shall have power to grant reprieves for all offenses against the state, and, except in cases of impeachment, shall, with the consent of the senate, have power to grant pardons, remit fines and forfeitures after conviction. In cases of treason he may grant reprieves until the end of the next session of the general assembly, in which the power of pardoning shall be vested. In cases when the punishment is not imprisonment at hard labor, the party upon being reprieved by the governor shall be released if in actual custody until final action by the senate.

ART. 59. He shall be commander-in-chief of the militia of this state, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States.

ART. 60. He shall nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the senate appoint all officers whose offices are established by the constitution, and whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for; Provided, however, That the general assembly shall have a right to prescribe the mode of appointment to all other offices established by law.

ART. 61. The governor shall have power to fill vacancies that may happen during the recess of the senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of the next session thereof, unless otherwise provided for in this constitution; but no person who has been nominated for office and rejected by the senate shall be appointed to the same office during the recess of the senate.

ART. 62. He may require information in writing from the officers in the executive department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.

ART. 63. He shall, from time to time, give the general assembly information respecting the situation of the state, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he may deem expedient.

ART. 64. He may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the general assembly at the seat of government, or at a different place if that should have become dangerous from an enemy or from epidemic; and in case of disagreement between the two houses as to the time of adjournment, he may adjourn them to such time as he may think proper, not exceeding four months.

ART. 65. He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

ART. 66. Every bill which shall have passed both houses shall be presented to the governor; if he approve he shall sign it; if he do not he shall return it with his objections to the house in which it originated, which shall enter the objections at large upon its journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of all the members present in that house shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent with the objections to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of the members present in that house it shall be a law. But in such cases the vote of both houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of members voting for or against the bill shall be entered on the journal of each house respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the governor within five days after it shall have been presented to him, it shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly, by adjournment, prevent its return, in which case the said bill shall be returned on the first day of the meeting of the general assembly after the expiration of said five days, or be a law.

ART. 67. Every order, resolution, or vote, to which the concurrence of both houses may be necessary, except on a question of adjournment, shall be presented to the governor, and before it shall take effect be approved by him, or, being disapproved, shall be repassed by two-thirds of the members present.

ART. 68. There shall be a secretary of state, who shall hold his office during the term for which the governor shall have been elected. The records of the state shall be kept and preserved in the office of the secretary; he shall keep a fair register of the official acts and proceedings of the governor, and when necessary shall attest them; he shall, when required, lay the said register and all papers, minutes, and vouchers relative to his office before either house of the general assembly, and shall perform such other duties as may be enjoined on him by law.

ART. 69. There shall be a treasurer of the state, and an auditor of public accounts, who shall hold their respective offices during the term of four years. At the first election under this constitution, the treasurer shall be elected for two years.

ART. 70. The secretary of state, treasurer, and auditor of public accounts shall be elected by the qualified electors of the state, and in case of any vacancy caused by the resignation, death, or absence of the secretary, treasurer, or auditor, the governor shall order an election to fill said vacancies; Provided, The unexpired term to be filled be more than twelve months; when otherwise, the governor shall appoint a person to perform the duties of the office thus vacant until the ensuing general election.

ART. 71. The treasurer and the auditor shall receive a salary of five thousand dollars per annum each. The secretary of state shall receive a salary of three thousand dollars per annum.

ART. 72. All commissions shall be in the name and by the authority of the state of Louisiana; and shall be sealed with the state seal, signed by the governor, and countersigned by the secretary of state.

TITLE IV.—JUDICIARY DEPARTMENT.

ART. 73. The judicial power shall be vested in a supreme court, in district courts, in parish courts, and in justices of the peace.

ART. 74. The supreme court, except in cases hereinafter provided, shall have appellate jurisdiction only; which jurisdiction shall extend to all cases when the matter in dispute shall exceed five hundred dollars; and to all cases in which the constitutionality or legality of any tax, toll, or impost of any kind or nature whatsoever, or any fine, forfeiture, or penalty imposed by a municipal corporation shall be in contestation, whatever may be the amount thereof; and in such cases the appeal shall be direct from the court in which the case originated to the supreme court; and in criminal cases, on questions of law only, whenever the punishment of death, or imprisonment at hard labor, or a fine exceeding three hundred dollars is actually imposed.

ART. 75. The supreme court shall be composed of one chief justice and four associate justices, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum. The chief justice shall receive a salary of seven thousand five hundred dollars, and each of the associate justices a salary of seven thousand dollars annually, payable quarterly on their own warrants. The chief justice and the associate justices shall be appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, for the term of eight years. They shall be citizens of the United States, and shall have practiced law for five years, the last three thereof next preceding their appointment in the state. The court shall appoint its own clerks, and may remove them at pleasure.

ART. 76. The supreme court shall hold its sessions in the city of New Orleans from the first Monday in the month of November to the end of the month of May. The general assembly shall have power to fix the sessions elsewhere during the rest of the year; until otherwise provided, the sessions shall be held as heretofore.

ART. 77. The supreme court, and each of the judges thereof, shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus at the instance of persons in actual custody in cases when they may have appellate jurisdiction.

ART. 78. No judgment shall be rendered by the supreme court without a concurrence of a majority composing the court. Whenever the majority can not concur in consequence of the recusation of any member of the court, the judges not recused shall have power to call upon any judge or judges of the district courts, whose duty it shall be when so called upon to preside in the place of the judge or judges recused, and to aid in determining the case.

ART. 79. All judges, by virtue of their office, shall be conservators of the peace throughout the state. The style of all process shall be "The state of Louisiana." All prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the state of Louisiana, and conclude "against the peace and dignity of the same."

ART. 80. The judges of all courts whenever practicable shall refer to the law in virtue of which every definitive judgment is rendered; but in all cases they shall adduce the reasons on which their judgment is founded.

ART. 81. The judges of all courts shall be liable to impeachment for crimes and misdemeanors. For any reasonable cause the governor shall remove any of them, on the address of two-thirds of the members elected to each house of the general assembly. In every such case the cause or causes for which such removal may be required shall be stated at length in the address, and inserted in the journal of each house.

ART. 82. No duties or functions shall ever be attached by law to the supreme or district courts, or the several judges thereof, but such as are judicial; and the said judges are prohibited from receiving any fees of office, or other compensation than their salaries, for any official duties performed by them.

ART. 83. The general assembly shall divide the state into judicial districts, which shall remain unchanged for four years, and for each district court one judge, learned in the law, shall be elected for each district, by a plurality of the qualified electors thereof. For each district there shall be one district court, except in the parish of Orleans, in which the general assembly may establish as many district courts as the public interests may require. Until otherwise provided there shall be seven district courts for the parish of Orleans, with the following original jurisdiction: The first, exclusive criminal jurisdiction; the second, exclusive probate jurisdiction; the third, exclusive jurisdiction of appeals from justices of the peace; the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh district courts, exclusive jurisdiction in all civil cases, except probate, when the sum in contest is above one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. These seven courts shall have such further jurisdiction, not inconsistent herewith, as shall be conferred by law.

The number of districts in the state shall not be less than twelve nor more than twenty. The clerks of the district courts shall be elected by the qualified electors of their respective parishes, and shall hold their office for four years.

ART. 84. Each of said judges shall receive a salary to be fixed by law, which shall not be increased or diminished during his term of office, and shall never be less than five thousand dollars. He must be a citizen of the United States, over the age of twenty-five years, and have resided in the state and practiced law therein for the space of two years next preceding his election. The judges of the district courts shall hold their office for the term of four years.

ART. 85. The district courts shall have original jurisdiction in all civil cases when the amount in dispute exceeds five hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. In criminal cases their jurisdiction shall be unlimited. They shall have appellate jurisdiction in civil ordinary suits, when the amount in dispute exceeds one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest.

ART. 86. For each parish court, one judge shall be elected by the qualified electors of the parish. He shall hold his office for the term of two years. He shall receive a salary and fees, to be provided by law. Until otherwise provided, each parish judge shall receive a salary of one thousand two hundred dollars per annum, and such fees as are established by law for clerks of district courts. He shall be a citizen of the United States and of this state.

ART. 87. The parish courts shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the justices of the peace in all cases when the amount in controversy is more than twenty-five dollars, and less than one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. They shall have exclusive original jurisdiction in ordinary suits, in all cases when the amount in dispute exceeds one hundred dollars and does not exceed five hundred dollars, subject to an appeal to the district court in all cases when the amount in contestation exceeds one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. All successions shall be opened and settled in the parish courts; and all suits in which a succession is either plaintiff or defendant may be brought either in the parish or district court, according to the amount involved. In criminal matters the parish courts shall have jurisdiction in all cases when the penalty is not necessarily imprisonment at hard labor or death, and when the accused shall waive trial by jury. They shall also have the power of committing magistrates and such other jurisdiction as may be conferred on them by law. There shall be no trial by jury before the parish courts.

ART. 88. In all probate matters, when the amount in dispute shall exceed five hundred dollars, exclusive of interest, the appeal shall be directly from the parish to the supreme court.

ART. 89. The justices of the peace shall be elected by the electors of each parish, in the manner to be provided by the general assembly. They shall hold office for the term of two years, and their compensation shall be fixed by law. Their jurisdiction in civil cases shall not exceed one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest, subject to an appeal to the parish courts in all cases when the amount in dispute shall exceed ten dollars, exclusive of interest. They shall have such criminal jurisdiction as shall be provided for by law.

ART. 90. In any case when the judge may be recused, and when he is not personally interested in the matters in contestation, he shall select a lawyer having the qualifications required for a judge of his court to try such cases. And when the judge is personally interested in the suit, he shall call upon the parish or district judge, as the case may be, to try the case.

ART. 91. The general assembly shall have power to vest in the parish judges the right to grant such orders and to do such acts as may be deemed necessary for the furtherance of the administration of justice; and in all cases the power thus granted shall be specified and determined.

ART. 92. There shall be an attorney general for the state, who shall be elected by the qualified electors of the state at large. He shall receive a salary of five thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly on his own warrant, and shall hold his office for four years. There shall be a district attorney for each judicial district of the state, who shall be elected by the qualified electors of the judicial district. He shall receive a salary of fifteen hundred dollars, payable quarterly on his own warrant, and shall hold his office for four years.

ART. 93. There shall be a sheriff and coroner elected by the qualified electors of each parish, except the parish of Orleans. In the parish of Orleans there shall be elected by the qualified electors of the parish at large one sheriff for the criminal court, who shall be the executive officer of said court, and shall have charge of the parish prison. There shall also be elected by the qualified electors of the parish at large one sheriff, who shall be the executive officer of the civil courts, and who shall perform all other duties heretofore devolving upon the sheriff of the parish of Orleans, except those herein delegated to the sheriff of the criminal court. The qualified electors of the city of New Orleans, residing below the middle of Canal street, shall elect one coroner for that district, and the qualified electors of the city of New Orleans, residing above the middle of Canal street, together with those residing in that part of the parish known as Orleans right bank, shall elect one coroner for that district. All of said officers shall hold their office for two years; and receive such fees of office as may be prescribed by law.

ART. 94. No judicial powers, except as committing magistrates, in criminal cases, shall be conferred on any officers other than those mentioned in this title; except such as may be necessary in towns and cities; and the judicial powers of such officer shall not extend further than the cognizance of cases arising under the police regulations of towns and cities in the state. In any case where such officers shall assume jurisdiction over other matters than those which may arise under police regulations, or under their jurisdiction, as committing magistrates, they shall be liable to an action of damages in favor of the party injured, or his heirs; and a verdict in favor of the party injured shall, ipso facto, operate a vacation of the office of said officer.

TITLE V.—IMPEACHMENT.

ART. 95. The power of impeachment shall be vested in the house of representatives.

ART. 96. Impeachments of the governor, lieutenant governor, attorney general, secretary of state, auditor of public accounts, state treasurer, superintendent of public education, and of the judges of the inferior courts, justices of the peace excepted, shall be tried by the senate; the chief justice of the supreme court, or the senior associate judge thereof, shall preside during the trial of such impeachments. Impeachments of the judges of the supreme court shall be tried by the senate. When sitting as a court of impeachment the senators shall be upon oath or affirmation, and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the senators present.

ART. 97. Judgments in cases of impeachment shall extend only to removal from office, and disqualification from holding any office of honor, trust, or profit in the state; but the convicted parties shall nevertheless be subject to indictment, trial, and punishment according to law.

TITLE VI.—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

ART. 98. Every male person of the age of twenty-one years or upward, born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and a resident of this state one year next preceding an election, and the last ten days within the parish in which he offers to vote, shall be deemed an elector, except those disfranchised by this constitution, and persons under interdiction.

ART. 99. The following persons shall be prohibited from voting and holding any office: All persons who shall have been convicted of treason, perjury, forgery, bribery, or other crime punishable in the penitentiary, and persons under interdiction.

All persons who are estopped from claiming the right of suffrage by abjuring their allegiance to the United States government, or by notoriously levying war against it, or adhering to its enemies, giving them aid or comfort, but who have not expatriated themselves, nor have been convicted of any of the crimes mentioned in the first paragraph of this article, are hereby restored to he said right, except the following: Those who held office, civil or military, for one year or more under the organization styled "The Confederate States of America;" those who registered themselves as enemies of the United States; those who acted as leaders of guerrilla bands during the late rebellion; those who in the advocacy of treason wrote or published newspaper articles or preached sermons during the late rebellion, and those who voted for and signed an ordinance of secession in any state. No person included in these exceptions shall either vote or hold office until he shall have relieved himself by voluntarily writing and signing a certificate setting forth that he acknowledges the late rebellion to have been morally and politically wrong, and that he regrets any aid and comfort he may have given it; and he shall file the certificate in the office of the secretary of state, and it shall be published in the official ournal;

Provided, That no person who prior to the first of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, favored the execution of the laws of the United States popularly known as the reconstruction acts of congress, and openly and actively assisted the loyal men of the state in their efforts to restore Louisiana to her position in the Union, shall be held to be included among those herein excepted. Registrars of voters shall take the oath of any such person as prima facie evidence of the fact that he is entitled to the benefit of this proviso.

ART. 100. Members of the general assembly and all other officers, before they enter upon the duties of their offices, shall take the following oath or affirmation: "I, (A. B.,) do solemnly swear (or affirm,) that I accept the civil and political equality of all men, and agree not to attempt to deprive any person or persons on account of race, color, or previous condition, of any political or civil right, privilege, or immunity enjoyed by any other class of men. That I will support the constitution and laws of the United States and the constitution and laws of this state, and that I will faithfully and impartially discharge and perform all the duties incumbent on me as —— according to the best of my ability and understanding. So help me God."

ART. 101. Treason against the state shall consist only in levying war against it, or in adhering to its enemies—giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason except on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on his confession in open court.

ART. 102. All penalties shall be proportioned to the nature of the offense.

ART. 103. The privilege of free suffrage shall be supported by laws regulating elections, and prohibiting under adequate penalties all undue influence thereon from power, bribery, tumult, or other improper practice.

ART. 104. No money shall be drawn from the treasury but in pursuance of specific appropriations made by law. A statement and account of receipts and expenditures of all public moneys shall be made annually, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law; and the first general assembly convening under this constitution shall make a special appropriation to liquidate whatever portion of the debt of this convention may at that time remain unpaid or unprovided for.

ART. 105. All civil officers of the state at large shall be voters of and reside within the state; and all district or parish officers shall reside within their respective districts or parishes, and shall keep their offices at such place therein as may be required by law.

ART. 106. All civil officers shall be removable by an address of two-thirds of the members elect to each house of the general assembly, except those whose removal is otherwise provided for by this constitution.

ART. 107. In all elections by the people the vote shall be taken by ballot; and in all elections by the senate and house of representatives, jointly or separately, the vote shall be given viva voce.

ART. 108. None but citizens of the United States and of this state shall be appointed to any office of trust or profit in this state.

ART. 109. The laws, public records, and the judicial and legislative proceedings of the state shall be promulgated, and preserved in the English language; and no law shall require judicial process to be issued in any other than the English language.

ART. 110. No ex post facto or retroactive law, nor any law impairing the obligation of contracts, shall be passed; nor vested rights be divested, unless for purposes of public utility, and for adequate compensation made.

ART. 111. Whenever the general assembly shall contract a debt exceeding in amount the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, unless in case of war, to repel invasion, or suppress insurrection, it shall, in the law creating the debt, provide adequate ways and means for the payment of the current interest, and of the principal when the same shall become due; and the said law shall shall be irrepealable until principal and interest be fully paid; or unless the repealing law contain some adequate provision for the payment of the principal and interest of the debt.

ART. 112. The general assembly shall provide by law for all change of venue in civil and criminal cases.

ART. 113. The general assembly may enact general laws regulating the adoption of children, emancipation of minors, and the granting of divorces; but no special law shall be passed relating to particular or individual cases.

ART. 114. Every law shall express its object or objects in its title.

ART. 115. No law shall be revived or amended by reference to its title; but in such case the revived or amended section shall be re-enacted and published at length.

ART. 116. The general assembly shall never adopt any system or code of laws by general reference to such system or code of laws; but in all cases shall specify the several provisions of the law it may enact.

ART. 117. No person shall hold or exercise at the same time more than one office of trust or profit except that of justice of the peace or notary public.

ART. 118. Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state; all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law; the general assembly shall have power to exempt from taxation property actually used for church, school, or charitable purposes. The general assembly may levy an income tax upon all persons pursuing any occupation, trade, or calling. And all such persons shall obtain a license as provided by law. All tax on income shall be pro rata on the amount of income, or business done. And all deeds of sale made or that may be made by collectors of taxes, shall be received by courts in evidence as prima facie valid sales. The general assembly shall levy a poll tax on all male inhabitants of this state over twenty-one years old, for school and charitable purposes, which tax shall never exceed one dollar and fifty cents per annum.

ART. 119. No liability, either state, parochial, or municipal, shall exist for any debts contracted for or in the interest of the rebellion against the United States government.

ART. 120. The general assembly may determine the mode of filling vacancies in all offices for which provision is not made in this constitution.

ART. 121. The general assembly shall pass no law requiring a property qualification for office.

ART. 122. All officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their offices until their successors shall have been inducted into office; except in cases of impeachment or suspension.

ART. 123. The general assembly shall provide for the protection of the rights of married women to their dotal and paraphernal property, and for the registration of the same; but no mortgage or privilege shall hereafter affect third parties unless recorded in the parish where the property to be affected is situated. The tacit mortgages and privileges now existing in this state shall cease to have effect against third persons after the first day of January, eighteen hundred and seventy, unless duly recorded. The general assembly shall provide by law for the registration of all mortgages and privileges.

ART. 124. The general assembly, at its first session under this constitution, shall provide an annual pension for the veterans of eighteen hundred and fourteen and eighteen hundred and fifteen residing in the state.

ART. 125. The military shall be in subordination to the civil power.

ART. 126. It shall be the duty of the general assembly to make it obligatory upon each parish to support all paupers residing within its limits.

ART. 127. All agreements, the consideration of which was confederate money, notes, or bonds, are null and void; and shall not be enforced by the courts of this state.

ART. 128. Contracts for the sale of persons are null and void; and shall not be enforced by the courts of this state.

ART. 129. The state of Louisiana shall never assume nor pay any debt or obligation contracted or incurre aid of the rebellion; nor shall this state ever in any manner claim from the United States or make any allowance or compensation for slaves emancipated or liberated in any way whatever.

ART. 130. All contracts made and entered into under the pretended authority of any governments heretofore existing in this state, by which children were bound out without the knowledge or consent of their parents, are hereby declared null and void; nor shall any child be bound out to any one for any term of years, while either one of its parents live, without the consent of such parent, except in cases of children legally sent to the house of correction.

ART. 131. The seat of government shall be established at the city of New Orleans, and shall not be removed without the consent of two-thirds of the members of both houses of the general assembly.

ART. 132. All lands sold in pursuance of decrees of courts shall be divided into tracts of from ten to fifty acres.

ART. 133. No judicial powers shall be exercised by clerks of courts.

ART. 134. No soldier, sailor, or marine in the military or naval service of the United States shall hereafter acquire a residence in this state by reason of being stationed or doing duty in the same.

TITLE VII.—PUBLIC EDUCATION.

ART. 135. The general assembly shall establish at least one free public school in every parish throughout the state, and shall provide for its support by taxation or otherwise. All children of this state between the ages of six (6) and twenty-one (21) shall be admitted to the public schools or other institutions of learning sustained or established by the state, in common, without distinction of race, color, or previous condition. There shall be no separate schools or institutions of learning established exclusively for any race by the state of Louisiana.

ART. 136. No municipal corporation shall make any rules or regulations contrary to the spirit and intention of article one hundred and thirty-five (135.)

ART. 137. There shall be elected by the qualified voters of this state a superintendent of public education, who shall hold his office for four years. His duties shall be prescribed by law, and he shall have the supervision and the general control of all public schools throughout this state. He shall receive a salary of five thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly on his own warrant.

ART. 138. The general exercises in the public schools shall be conducted in the English language.

ART. 139. The proceeds of all lands heretofore granted by the United States for the use and support of public schools, and of all lands or other property which may hereafter be bequeathed for that purpose, and of all lands which may be granted or bequeathed to the state, and not granted or bequeathed expressly for any other purpose which may hereafter be disposed of by the state, and the proceeds of all estates of deceased persons to which the state may be entitled by law, shall be held by the state as a loan, and shall be and remain a perpetual fund on which the state shall pay an annual interest of six per cent, which interest, with the interest of the trust fund deposited with this state by the United States, under the act of congress approved June the twenty-third, eighteen hundred and thirty-six, and the rent of the unsold lands, shall be appropriated to the support of such schools, and this appropriation shall remain inviolable.

ART. 140. No appropriation shall be made by the general assembly for the support of any private school, or any private institution of learning whatever.

ART. 141. One half of the funds derived from the poll tax herein provided for shall be appropriated exclusively to the support of the free public schools throughout the state, and the university of New Orleans.

ART. 142. A university shall be established and maintained in the city of New Orleans. It shall be composed of a law, a medical, and a collegiate department, each with appropriate faculties. The general assembly shall provide by law for its organization and maintenance; Provided, That all departments of this institution of learning shall be opened in common to all students capable of matriculating. No rules or regulations shall be made by the trustees, faculties, or other officers of said institution of learning, nor shall any laws be made by the general assembly violating the letter or spirit of the articles under this title.

ART. 143. Institutions for the support of the insane, the education and support of the blind and the deaf and dumb, shall always be fostered by the state, and be subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by the general assembly.

TITLE VIII.—MILITIA.

ART. 144. It shall be the duty of the general assembly to organize the militia of the state; and all able-bodied male citizens between the ages of eighteen and forty five years, not disfranchised by the laws of the United States and of this state, shall be subject to military duty.

ART. 145. The governor shall appoint all commissioned officers, subject to confirmation or rejection by the senate, except the staff officers, who shall be appointed by their respective chiefs, and commissioned by the governor. All militia officers shall take and subscribe to the oath prescribed for officers of the United States army and the oath prescribed for officers in this state.

ART. 146. The governor shall have power to call the militia into active service for the preservation of law and order, or when the public safety may require it. The militia when in active service shall receive the same pay and allowances as officers and privates, as is received by officers and privates in the United States army.

TITLE IX.—MODE OF REVISING THE CONSTITUTION.

ART. 147. Any amendment or amendments to this constitution may be proposed in the senate or house of representatives, and if the same shall be agreed to by two-thirds of the members elected to each house, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be entered on their respective journals, with the yeas and nays taken thereon; and the secretary of state shall cause the same to be published three months before the next general election for representatives to the general assembly, in at least one newspaper in every parish in the state in which a newspaper shall be published. And such proposed amendment or amendments shall be submitted to the people at said election; and if amajority of the voters at said election shall approve and ratify such amendment or amendments, the same shall become a part of this constitution. If more than one amendment shall be submitted at one time, they shall be submitted in such manner and form that the people may vote for or against each amendment separately.

TITLE X.—SCHEDULE.

ART. 148. The ordinance of secession of the state of Louisiana, passed twenty-sixth of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, is hereby declared to be null and void. The constitution adopted in eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and all previous constitutions in the state of Louisiana, are declared to be superseded by this constitution.

ART. 149. All rights, actions, prosecutions, claims, contracts, and all laws in force at the time of the adoption of this constitution, and not inconsistent therewith, shall continue as if it had not been adopted; all judgments and judicial sales, marriages, and executed contracts made in good faith, and in accordance with the existing laws in this state, rendered, made, or entered into, between the twenty-sixth day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, and the date when this constitution shall be adopted are hereby declared to be valid, except the following laws:

"An act to authorize the widening of the new canal and basin," approved March fourteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven.

"An act to amend and re-enact the one hundred and twenty-first section of an act entitled, 'An act relative to crimes and offenses,'" approved December twentieth, eighteen hundred and sixty-five.

"An act for the punishment of persons for tampering with, persuading, or enticing away, harboring, feeding, or secreting laborers, servants, or apprentices," approved December twenty-first, eighteen hundred and sixty-five.

"An act to punish, in certain cases, the employers of laborers and apprentices," approved December twenty-first, eighteen hundred and sixty-five.

"An act in relation to exemption from state, parish, and city taxes for the years eighteen hundred and sixty-two, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and eighteen hundred and sixty-five, in certain cases." Certified sixteenth March, eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

"An act granting ferry privileges to C. K. Marshall, his heirs, or assigns." Approved March tenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

"An act to authorize the board of levee commissioners of the levee district in the parishes of Madison and Carroll to issue bonds," etc., etc. Approved March twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven.

Section third of "An act to organize the police of New Orleans, and to create a police board therein." Approved twelfth February, eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

ART. 150. The laws relative to the duties of officers shall remain in force, though contrary to this constitution, and the several duties be performed by the respective officers, until the organization of the government under this constitution.

ART. 151. The general assembly shall provide for the removal of causes now pending in the courts of this state to courts created by or under this constitution.

TITLE XI.—ORDINANCE.

ART. 152. Immediately upon the adjournment of this convention this constitution shall be submitted for ratification to the registered voters of the state, in conformity to the act of congress passed March second, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, entitled "An act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel states," and the acts supplementary thereto.

ART. 153. The election for the ratification of the constitution shall be held on Friday and Saturday, the seventeenth and eighteenth days of April, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, at the places now prescribed by law; and the polls shall be kept open from 7 o'clock A. M. to 7 o'clock P. M. At that election all those in favor of ratifying the constitution shall have written or printed on their ballots "For the constitution," and those opposed to ratifying the constitution shall have written or printed on their ballots "Against the constitution."

ART. 154. In order to establish a civil government, as required by act of congress, passed March twenty-third, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, an election shall be held at the same time and place at which the constitution is submitted for ratification for all state, judicial, parish, and municipal officers, for members of the general assembly, and for congressional representatives, at which election the electors who are qualified under the reconstruction acts of congress shall vote, and none others; Provided, That any elector shall be eligible to any office under any municipal corporation in this state.

ART. 155. At the election for the ratification of the constitution, and for officers of the civil government as required by congress, all registered electors may vote in any parish where they have resided for ten days next preceding said election, and at any precinct in the parish, upon presentation of their certificates of registration, affidavit, or other satisfactory evidence that they are entitled to vote as registered electors.

ART. 156. The same registrars and commissioners who shall be appointed by the commanding general of the fifth military district to superintend the election for the ratification or rejection of the constitution shall also, at the same time and place, superintend the election for all officers and representatives herein ordered; provided they be authorized so to act by the commanding general. And in case the commanding general should not so authorize said registrars and commissioners, the committee of seven appointed by this convention to take charge of the whole matter of the ratificatinn of the constitution and the election of civil officers shall appoint one registrar for each parish in the state, except the parish of Orleans, and one in each district of the parish of Orleans, counting Orleans right bank as one district, who shall, each in his parish or district, appoint a sufficient number of commissioners of election to hold the said election for the said civil officers and representatives at the same time and place as herein provided for.

Art. 157. Returns shall be made in duplicate, sworn to by the commissioners holding the election, and forwarded within three days thereafter to the registrars of the parish or district. The registrars shall immediately forward one copy of said returns to the chairman of the committee of seven, appointed by this convention, who shall, within ten days after the last return has been received, make proclamation of the result of said election.

Art. 158. All civil officers thus elected shall enter upon the discharge of their duties on the second Monday after the return of their election shall have been officially promulgated, or as soon as qualified according to law, and shall continue in office for the terms of their respective offices herein prescribed, said terms to date from the first Monday in November following the election.

Art. 159. The general assembly, elected under this constitution, shall hold its first session in the city of New Orleans on the third Monday after the official promulgation aforesaid, and proceed immediately upon its organization to vote upon the adoption of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States, proposed by congress, and passed June thirteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-six; said general assembly shall not have power to enact any laws relative to the per diem of members, or any other subject, after organization, until said constitutional amendment shall have been acted upon.

Art. 160. All registrars and commissioners appointed under this constitution shall, before entering upon their duties, take and subscribe the oath of office prescribed by congress, approved July second, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office;" the said oath of office shall be administered to each registrar by the chairman of the committee of seven and to each commissioner by the registrar appointing him.

Art. 161. All registrars, commissioners, and other officers necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this ordinance, except as otherwise provided for by the reconstruction acts of congress, shall be paid out of any funds raised by virtue of the tax ordinance adopted by the convention, December twenty-fourth, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, not otherwise appropriated.

New Orleans, La., March 11, 1868.

I certify that the foregoing is a correct copy of the constitution as taken from the official records of the convention.

HUGH J. CAMPBELL,
Minute Clerk.

The Church Union.—This is said to be the largest religious paper in the world. It is edited in number one style by a corps of editors of marked ability. It contains one of Beecher's sermons each week, which alone is worth far more than the subscription price of the paper, which is only $2 50 per annum. Address publishers of the Church Union, Box 6129, New York.

MARRIED:

TURNER—McKERSEY—In Shreveport, La., on the 20th of February, by Rev. John D. Smith, Mr. William Turner to Miss Maria McKersey.

PERKINS—LEWIS—In Shreveport, La., on the 12th of March, by Rev. John D. Smith, Mr. John Perkins to Miss Laura Lewis.

ABRAHAM—WHITE—In the country, six miles from Shreveport, La., on the 25th of January, by Rev. John D. Smith, Mr. Daniel Abraham to Miss Louisa White.

SMITH—WASHINGTON—In Shreveport, La., on the 14th of April, 1867, by Rev. Starling Gillem, Rev. John D. Smith to Miss Fanny Washington.

Rev. Dr. Newman will preach in his church to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock and in the evening at 7½.

Information wanted, by William Smith, of his sister Jane Smith. She was formerly called Jane Lettle. Her father's name was Barnebas Smith. Jane was at one time living at or near Galveston, Texas.

Send information in care of Rev. Evans Green, pastor of Poet Street Methodist Episcopal Church, New Orleans.

South Carolina Conference Proceedings.

In the transmission of the telegraphic report which we published last week a few errors were made in the figures, which we are now able to correct by the full official returns, which are now before us. The corrected figures make a better showing for the conference:

| | This Year. | Increase. |
|---|---|---|
| Traveling preachers | 39 | 13 |
| Local preachers | 132 | 29 |
| Members in full connection | 13,688 | 5,896 |
| Probationers | 4,512 | 2,636 |
| Total members | 18,200 | 8,535 |
| Adult baptisms | 1 616 | 697 |
| Infant baptisms | 1,617 | 440 |
| Church edifices | 56 | 22 |
| Parsonages | 6 | 6 |
| Value of church property | $103,525 | $41,725 |
| Sunday schools | 77 | 44 |
| Officers and teachers | 329 | 163 |
| Scholars | 6,3.2 | 2,230 |

As mentioned last week, these figures indicate a very prosperous state of our work in that portion of the South. During the year one preacher, Rev. W. J. Cole was called to his reward. His early ministry was in the Canadian Wesleyan conference. In November, 1865, he reached Charleston, and immediately, and with marked success, commenced and thenceforward prosecuted a successful and highly appreciated ministry. He died in peace July 13, 1867, aged 24.

The next session of the conference is to be held in Camden, South Carolina. The following are the appointments of the preachers:

Charleston District, T. Willard Lewis, presiding elder—Charleston circuit, A. Webster, W. O. Weston; Mount Pleasant, F. Smith; Beaufort circuit, G. Newcomb, S. W. Hamton; Cooper river, T. Evans; Edisto island, H. D. Owens; John's and Wadmelaw islands, J. Hamilton; Ashappo, to be supplied; Summerville, J. A. Sasportas; Wockamaw and Georgetown, Z. G. Duncan; Mount Holly, W. OF THE

LOUISIANA.

SEVENTY-FIFTH DAY.

To strike out, ninth line, before the word "race," the word "exclusive," and insert after the word "established" the word "exclusively."

Recommended by the
COMMITTEE.

The following amendment was laid on the table:

Article 134—to strike out, first and second lines, the words "at least one free public school in each parish," and insert the words "a system of free public schools throughout the state."

W. H. COOLEY,
P. B. S. PINCHBACK,
T. S. CRAWFORD.

Mr. Packard was called to the chair.

Article 134, as amended, was adopted, as follows:

TITLE VIII.—PUBLIC EDUCATION.

ART. 134. The general assembly shall establish at least one free public school in every parish throughout the state, and shall provide for its support by taxation or otherwise. All children of this state, between the ages of six (6) and twenty-one (21) shall be admitted to the public schools or other institutions of learning sustained or established by the state in common, without distinction of race, color, or previous condition. There shall be no separate schools or institutions of learning established exclusively for any race by the state of Louisiana.

Article 135 was adopted, as follows:

ART. 135. No municipal corporation shall make any rules or regulations contrary to the spirit and intention of article 134.

The following amendments to article 136 were laid on the table:

ART. 136. To strike out the entire article.

W. H. COOLEY,
T. S. CRAWFORD.

If the article is adopted, we propose to strike out, first and second lines, the words "elected by the qualified voters of this state," and insert the words, "appointed by the governor."

W. H. COOLEY,
R. WAPLES,
T. S. CRAWFORD.

To strike out all after the word "law," fourth line.

Recommended by the COMMITTEE.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to amend by striking out the words, "and salary," in the third line, and add at the end "he shall receive a salary of $5000 per annum, payable quarterly on his own warrant."

Mr. Smith moved to lay the amendment on the table.

The amendment was adopted—yeas 35, nays 22—as follows:

Yeas: Antoine, Belden, Bertonneau, Brown, Burrel, Cromwell, Douglass, U. Dupart, François, Gardiner, Thos. Isabelle, Jackson, Jones, Kelso, Lange, Leroy, R. Lewis, Martin, McLeran, Morris, Moses, Oliver, Packard, Pierce, Pinchback, Pollard, Snaer, Steele, Tinchant, Underwood, Valfroit, Vidal, Wickliffe, Williams, Wilson—35 yeas.

Article 136, as amended, was adopted, as follows:

ART. 136. There shall be elected by the qualified voters of this state a superintendent of public education, who shall hold his office for four years. His duties shall be prescribed by law, and he shall have the supervision and the general control of all public schools throughout the state. He shall receive a salary of five thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly on his own warrant.

The following recommendation was laid on the table:

ART. 137. To strike out the entire article.

W. H. COOLEY,
W. R. CRANE.

Article 137 was adopted, as follows:

ART. 137. The general exercises in the public schools shall be conducted in the English language.

The following recommendation of the committee was adopted:

ART. 138. To strike out the entire article, and substitute article 137 of the majority report.

Recommended by the COMMITTEE.

Article 137, majority report, as follows, was adopted in lieu of article 138:

ART. 138. The proceeds of all lands heretofore granted by the United States for the use and support of public schools, and of all lands or other property which may hereafter be bequeathed for that purpose, and of all lands which may be granted or bequeathed to the state, and not granted or bequeathed expressly for any other purpose, which may hereafter be disposed of by the state, and the proceeds of all estates of deceased persons to which the state may be entitled by law, shall be held by the state as a loan, and shall be and remain a perpetual fund on which the state shall pay an annual interest of six per cent, which interest, with the interest of the trust fund deposited with this state by the United States, under the act of congress approved June 23, 1836, and the rent of the unsold lands, shall be appropriated to the support of such schools, and this appropriation shall remain inviolable.

The following recommendation of the committee was adopted:

ART. 139. To strike out the entire article, as its substantial provisions are all expressed in article 137, majority report, as previously recommended by the committee.

Recommended by the COMMITTEE.

Mr. Twitchell moved to adopt the following as an additional article of the constitution:

ART. —. All children of the state, between the ages of six and twenty-one, not residing within a convenient distance of any established public school, shall draw their proportion of the public school fund.

It was laid on the table.

The following recommendation of the committee was adopted:

ART. 140. To strike out all after the word "whatever," in the third line.

Recommended by the
COMMITTEE.

Article 140, as amended, was adopted as follows:

ART. 140. No appropriation shall be made by the general assembly for the support of any private school, or any private institution of learning whatever.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to adopt the following as an additional article of the constitution.

ART. —. One-half of the funds derived from the poll tax herein provided for shall be appropriated exclusively to the support of the free public schools throughout the state, and the University of New Orleans.

Adopted.

Article 153, as amended, was adopted, as follows:

ART. 153. In order to establish a civil government as required by act of congress, passed March 23, 1867, an election shall be held at the same time and place at which the constitution is submitted for ratification or rejection for all state, judicial, parish, and municipal officers for members of the general assembly, and for congressional representatives, at which election the electors who are qualified under the reconstruction acts of congress shall vote, and none others; Provided, That any elector shall be eligible to any office under any municipal corporation in this state.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to adopt the following as an article of the constitution in the place of article 154.

ART. 154. At the election for the ratification of the constitution, and for officers of the civil government, as required by congress, all registered electors may vote in any parish where they have resided for ten days next preceding said election, and at any precinct in the parish, upon presentation of their certificate of registration, affidavit, or other satisfactory evidence that they are entitled to vote as registered electors.

Adopted.

Articles 155 and 156 were adopted, as follows:

ART. 155. The same registrars and commissioners who shall be appointed by the commanding general of the fifth military district to superintend the election for the ratification or rejection of the constitution, shall, also, at the same time and place, superintend the election for all officers and representatives herein ordered, provided they be authorized so to act by the commanding general. And in case the commanding general should not so authorize said registrars and commissioners, the committee of seven, appointed by this convention to take charge of the whole matter of the ratification of the constitution and the election of civil officers, shall appoint one registrar for each parish in the state, except the parish of Orleans, and one in each district of the parish of Orleans—counting Orleans, right bank, as one district—who shall each, in his parish or district, appoint a sufficient number of commissioners of election to hold said election for said officers and representatives, at the same time and place as herein provided for.

ART. 156. Returns shall be made in duplicate, sworn to by the commissioners holding the election, and forwarded within three days thereafter, to the registrars of the parish or district. The registrars shall immediately forward one copy of said returns to the chairman of the committee of seven, appointed by this convention, who shall, within ten days after the last return has been received, make proclamation of the result of said election.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to adopt the following as an article of the constitution, in the place of article 157:

ART. 157. All civil officers thus elected shall enter upon the discharge of their duties on the second Monday after the return of their election shall have been officially promulgated, or as soon as qualified according to law, and shall continue in office for the terms of their respective offices herein prescribed, said terms to date from the first Monday in November following the election.

Mr. Cooley moved to amend by adding the words "eighteen hundred and sixty-seven" after November, in the last line, and striking out the words "following their election."

Mr. Wickliffe moved to lay the amendment of Mr. Cooley on the table.

Adopted—yeas 35, nays 22—as follows:

Yeas: Baker, Blackburn, Blandin, Burrel, Cromwell, Douglass, U. Dupart, François, Gardiner, Harper, Harris, Hempstead, Ingraham, Jones, Lange, Leroy, Marie, Massicot, Meadows, McLeran, Moses, Oliver, Packard, Pierce, Pinchback, Poindexter, Pollard, Reagan, Schwab, Thibaut, Twitchell, Underwood, Vidal, Wickliffe, Williams, Wilson—35 yeas.

Nays: Belden Bertonneau, Bonnefoi, Brown, Butler, Cooley, Crane, Crawford, Dearing, P. G. Deslonde, G. Duparte, Duplessis, Esnard, Fuller, Ferguson, Harrison, R. H. Isabelle, Thomas Isabelle, Mushaway, Riard, Riggs, Rodriguez—22 nays.

The substitute of Mr. Wickliffe for article 157 was adopted, as follows:

All civil officers thus elected shall enter upon the discharge of their duties on the second Monday after the return of their election shall have been officially promulgated, or as soon as qualified according to law, and shall continue in office for the terms of their respective offices herein prescribed, said terms to date from the first Monday in November following the election.

Mr. Crane moved to adopt the following recommendation:

Article 158—To strike out, second line, the words "Baton Rouge" and insert the words "New Orleans."

W. CRANE.
R. WAPLES.

Mr. Lange moved to lay the motion on the table.

Lost.

The amendment was adopted.

The following recommendation was adopted:

To strike out the words "Baton Rouge," and insert the words "New Orleans."

Mr. Cooley moved to adopt the following recommendation by members of the committee:

Article 158—To strike out all after the word "1866," in sixth line.

R. WAPLES,
W. R. CRANE,
W. H. COOLEY.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to lay the motion on the table.

Adopted.

Article 158, as amended, was adopted as follows:

ART. 158. The general assembly elected under this constitution shall hold its first session in the city of New Orleans on the third Monday after the official promulgation aforesaid, and proceed immediately upon its organization to vote upon the adoption of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States, proposed by congress, and passed June 13, 1866. Said legislature shall not have power to enact any laws relative to the per diem of members or any other subject after organization until said constitutional amendment shall have been acted upon.

Mr. Waples moved to amend article 159 by striking out, in the sixth line, the words "herein provided for."

Adopted.

Article 159, as amended, was adopted, as follows:

ART. 159. All registrars and commissioners appointed under this constitution shall, before entering upon their duties, take and subscribe the oath of office prescribed by congress, approved July 2, 1862, entitled "an act to prescribe an oath of office;" the said oath of office shall be administered to each registrar by the chairman of the committee of seven, and to each commissioner by the registrar appointing him.

Article 160 was adopted, as follows:

ART. 160. All registrars, commissioners, and other officers necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this ordinance, except as otherwise provided for by the reconstruction acts of congress, shall be paid out of any funds raised by virtue of the tax ordinance adopted by the convention, December 24, 1867, not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. Cooley moved to adopt the following as an article of the constitution:

ART. —. Nothing contained in article 148 shall be construed as a repeal of the laws excepted therein, as it is not intended by the convention either to ratify or disapprove of them.

Mr. Harris moved to lay the motion of Mr. Cooley on the table.

Adopted.

Title XII. was adopted as a whole.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to adopt the constitution as a whole.

Adopted—yeas 71, nays 6—as follows:

Yeas: Antoine, Baker, Belden, Bertonneau, Blackburn, Blandin, Bonnefoi, Brown, Burrel, Butler, Crane, Cromwell, Cuney, Depasseau, P. G. Deslonde, Joseph Deslonde, Donato, Douglass, G. Duparte, U. Dupart, Duplessis, Esnard, François, Fuller, Gardiner, Guichard, Harper, Harris, Hempstead, Ingraham, R. H. Isabelle, Thomas Isabelle, Jackson, Jones, Kelso, Lange, Leroy, J. B. Lewis, Richard Lewis, Marie, Martin, Massicot, Meadows, McLeran, Morris, Moses, Mushaway, Myers, Newsham, Oliver, Packard, Pierce, Pinchback, Poindexter, Pollard, Reagan, Reese, Riard, Riggs, Rodriguez, Schwab, Snaer, Thibaut, Twitchell, Underwood, Valfroit, Vidal, Waples, Wickliffe, Williams, Wilson—71 yeas.

Nays: Cooley, Crawford, Dearing, Ferguson, Harrison, Vandergriff—6 nays.

The yeas and nays being called upon the adoption of the constitution as a whole, Mr. Blackburn, of Claiborne, voted "yes," with the following protest against some of of its features:

PROTEST.

MR. PRESIDENT: I desire to give some reasons for dissenting from portions of the constitution now about to be submitted to the people for their approval or rejection, while at the same time I shall agree to vote for the adoption, and sign the instrument as a whole, and recommend its ratification; and what I say may not be entirely original in either thought or language, but is nevertheless gathered from mature meditation upon what I have read and experienced, and will, I trust, be deemed appropriate, and worthy to be spread upon the journal of the convention.

Then, Mr. President and gentlemen of the convention, allow me to say in the forcible and telling language of one of the ablest writers of the age, that the great false idea from which we have suffered and are suffering so much, viz: "That if you can only get a certain law or constitutional provision passed, your object will be accomplished," is an idea drawn from aristocratic societies, and has in truth neither use nor practical application in this country. In aristocracies the opinions of but few men are expressed in legislation; and they are generally maturely weighed, and form a part of a deliberately framed policy before they are embodied in legislation. The acts in which they are clothed are therefore likely to stand, and do stand, and often work important social changes, no matter how unwise they may be, or what the people think of them. But in a democracy like ours, there is no use in legislating in advance of the popular sentiment, by which I mean a patriotic and enlightened public sentiment. True, the legislator may be a better man than his fellows, and he may seem to have a splendid opportunity of setting the world to rights, and it may be that he is only trying to enforce some principle to which, though the people may not be prepared for it yet, they will one day work up; but he will, under such circumstances, not only not help the cause he has at heart, but hinder it, if he seeks to base his legislation on simply his own ideas of right, and not on firm popular and well matured public conviction.

If there is one thing which experience is teaching modern nations more thoroughly than another it is the comparative worthlessness of all mere political arrangements on paper, whether constitutions, treaties, or legislative acts. The mere fact that they are laws passed and recorded with the proper formalities seems of itself to gain for them neither durableness nor authority. I believe I alluded to this fact, and instanced the practical futility of the Civil Rights bill in localities where the popular sentiment is opposed to its execution, in discussing an important provision in the Constitution which was passed against my solemn protestation and earnest advice—a provision, the "importance" of which, I may say, consists in its folly and impracticability. The pages of our legislation are dotted and marred everywhere with those worthless and mischievous paper guarantees, formed in folly and against reason and the public approbation. Of all the treaties which have been made between civilized nations since 1800, not one has the least force except what it draws from the support and approval of public opinion at the present day. The treaties of 1815 were supposed to have made the settlement of Europe, arranged in that year, perpetual. They began to be rent in twain, however, fifteen years later, and now not a shred remains. The treaty of Paris was supposed to have driven Russia out of the Black Sea and settled the "Eastern Question." But what is the treaty worth to-day?

Forty years ago, about the time when the British and American Constitutions were furnishing models for "charters" to such of the other nations of the earth as longed for constitutional government, there was a widespread belief among politicians that if you only gave a country a well drawn constitution, properly engrossed, attested, and sworn to, its happiness was sure. France, Greece, Belgium, and the Spanish and American republics all sought this imaginary, short, and easy road to liberty and prosperity. And during the anti-slavery struggle in this country, each side flattered itself that if it could only procure the embodiment of its views in an act of Congress, or in a judicial decision, the struggle would be over. When the ordinance of 1789 was passed, the Northwest was supposed to be henceforward secured to freedom. When the Missouri compromise was made, the conflict between the rival systems of labor was believed by the authors of the measure, and by a large portion of the public, to be at an end. The Fugitive Slave Law was looked upon as another great quieter of controversy. But none of these measures could compare with the Dred Scott decision! We all know the shouts of triumph that came from the throats of the devotees of slavery, as that was hurled at the heads of Republicans. There it was, duly rendered in full court on final appeal, with reasons given, and every form complied with; what was there left for the friends of freedom to do but to submit and be silent? But where are all these "settlements" now? And the temperance reformers all over the North have for many years been fully satisfied that if they could only get drinking prohibited by law, they would confer one of the greatest of benefits on the community; and they were ever ready and willing to have the law passed any way, by stratagem, by surprise, in a fit of excitement or enthusiasm. The great thing was to make drinking illegal; this done, no matter what the moderate drinker said or felt, the good cause was triumphant. But we all know what the end of these unnatural efforts has been. And the late so-called acts of secession in the Southern states form another striking example of the folly of legislative "snap-judgments," as against the moral sentiment of the patriotic and enlightened masses in a free country; and if necessary, we might even come down and enumerate some of the practical inconsistencies and wordy impossibilities, not to say self-destroying injustice, to be found in the reconstruction acts under which we are now operating,

In fact, the mere passing of an act in a democracy, if it is not the expression of the popular will—and by this I mean the popular will formed by careful reflection, by time, and by a fair consideration of all the arguments for and against the proposed measure—may be said to be not only worthless, but injurious; because it leads to that incessant unrest and uncertainty, that want of fixity in policy, want of respect for vested rights, and that constant doing and undoing which are every year more and more the characteristics and curses of our legislation, both congressional and state.

These brief allusions may clearly indicate, outside of any party consideration, my objections to some features of the constitution which this convention is now submitting to the qualified voters of the state for their action. But with all its faults, I consider that it contains much more of good than of evil, and shall therefore vote for its adoption as a whole, and heartily recommend its ratification, believing that it may prove, at least, a stepping-stone to better days—and feeling, too, that any change in this country at the present time, whether in a political, financial, social, or moral sense, can not fail to be for the better.

Respectfully submitted, with the request that it go upon the record—under the rule that a member has the privilege of explaining his vote in writing.

W. JASPER BLACKBURN,
Claiborne Parish.

Mr. Crawford recorded the following reasons for his vote:

PROTEST OF T. S. CRAWFORD, OF CALDWELL AND OUACHITA.

The undersigned member of the constitutional convention of the state of Louisiana respectfully submits the following as some of the reasons which impel him to vote against the adoption of the constitution framed by this convention:

1. In the bill of rights, social equality is attempted to be enforced, and the right of citizens to control their own property is attempted to be taken from them.

2. A judicial system has been adopted, which; in my opinion, is radically defective, and will render uncertain and insecure the rights to property and the lives and liberties of the people.

3. A system of public education has been adopted, which, in my opinion, will force heavy contributions from the taxpayers of the state, and will entirely prevent any public schools from being carried into effect, and tend to prevent the rising generation from being educated, and to entail upon the state a large class of ignorant inhabitants, and will subject the state to the exclusive control of the ignorant and uneducated.

4. A system of proscription is adopted which attempts to deprive a large class of citizens of the privilege of voting or holding office who are liable to pay taxes and assist in bearing the burden of government, and the manner of restoration is calculated to invite the mean and unprincipled to participate in voting and holding office, and to drive away the good and honorable.

5. The oath of office is inconsistent with the constitution, is absurd, disgraceful, and ridiculous.

6. The direct tendency of the constitution as a whole, is to engender andperpetuate a state of strife between the citizens of the state, to such an extent as will lead to hostile collisions, anarchy and, the utter subversion of all law and governments; that the adoptionof the constitution will drive many good citizens from, and prevent emigration to the state, retard her progress, destroy her internal improvements, blight her prosperity, and destroy her peace and happiness.

He respectfully asks that these reasons be entered upon the journal of the convention.

T. S. CRAWFORD.

Mr. Harrison recorded the following reasons for his vote:

In addition to the reasons assigned by Judge Crawford, I vote against the constitution because:

1. I am opposed to any disfranchisement.

2. In my opinion, the whole plan of reconstruction is agraian and adverse to Christian civilization.

(Signed) THOMAS P. HARRISON, of Morehouse and Carroll.

Mr. Ingraham recorded the following reasons for his vote:

I vote yes with the profound conviction that the constitution secures to all people of this state equal justice.

Mr. Twitchell recorded the following reasons for his vote:

I vote for the constitution, protesting against title eight, believing that in the present condition of the state a just division of the public school fund among the children of the state is the only proper course to be pursued.

(Signed) M. H. TWITCHELL.

Mr. Bertonneau moved that absent members be allowed to record their vote on the adoption of the constitution.

It was adopted.

Mr. Waples moved that the phraseology of article ninety-eight be changed so as to read as follows:

ART. 98. The following persons shall be prohibited from voting and from holding any office: All persons who shall have been convicted of treason, perjury, forgery, bribery, or other crime punishable in the penitentiary, and persons under interdiction.

All persons who are estopped from claiming the right of suffrage, by abjuring their allegiance to the United States government, or by notoriously levying war against it, or adhering to its enemies, giving them aid or comfort, but who have not expatriated themselves, nor have been convicted of any of the crimes mentioned in the first paragraph of this article, are hereby restored to the said right, except the following: Those who have held office, civil or military, for one year or more, under the organization styled "the confederate states of America;" those who registered themselves as enemies of the United States; those who acted as leaders of guerrilla bands during the late rebellion; those who, in the advocacy of treason, wrote or published newspaper articles, or preached sermons during the late rebellion; and those who voted for and signed an ordinance of secession in any state. No person included in these exceptions shall either vote or hold office until he shall have relieved himself by voluntarily writing and signing a certificate setting forth that he acknowledges the late rebellion to have been morally and politically wrong, and that he regrets any aid and comfort he may have given it, and he shall file the certificate in the office of the secretary of state, and it shall be published in the official journal; provided, that no person who prior to the first of January, 1868, favored the execution of the laws of the United States, popularly known as the reconstruction acts of congress, and openly and actively assisted the loyal men of the state in their efforts to restore Louisiana to her position in the Union, shall be held to be included among those herein excepted. Registrars of voters shall take the oath of any such person as prima facie evidence of the fact that he is entitled to the benefits of this proviso.

Mr. Cooley moved that a committee of three be appointed to superintend the enrolling of the constitution.

Adopted.

By Mr. Wickliffe:

Motion, That the chairman of the committee on enrollment be instructed and authorized to employ additional clerks, so as to have three copies of the constitution ready for the signature of the members to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Adopted.

The president appointed the following members upon the committee on the enrollment of the constitution.

Messrs. Wickliffe, Blackburn, and Ingraham.

Mr. Valfroit recorded the following reasons for his vote:

I vote yes for the adoption of the whole constitution as it stands, for I don't see anything in it that restrains the rights of any loyal citizens of the state of Louisiana nor of the United States. And, moreover, I believe that this constitution is the only one that will secure our sacred rights, and bring the blessing of Almighty God upon our noble state, and give us our rights and liberty, and the unity of minds and hearts hereafter forever.

(Signed) P. F. VALFROIT,
Delegate of Ascension parish.

Mr. Baker recorded his vote as follows:

The removal of prejudices and time-honored civilized customs, by mere acts of legislation, is not encouraged by the teachings of history; keeping this fact in view, I must, as a practical man dissent from some of the provisions of the constitution as adopted, but I vote for the instrument as a whole, believing that a return to civil rule is preferable for the people of Louisiana, even upon a basis which may be temporary or some of the features of which may be unjust—to that increased ruin and desolation—moral and political, into which they must soon drift under our present status of anarchy and military despotism.

L. W. BAKER,
of Bossier.

Mr. Dearing recorded the following reasons for his vote:

In casting my vote against this constitution, I desire briefly to explain my motives and sentiments. I am not actuated by any captious opposition to the will of the majority, for against that will far greater abilities than mine have strugled in vain upon this floor, and if it be subsequently ratified by the people, I shall of course yield to it with the submission and good grace, I hope, that is due by every citizen to the doctrines of our institutions, that the majority must govern; not that I think the majority are always right. For I contend that in such an important and delicate a matter as the framing of the social contract under which all are to live and be governed, the feeling, the convictions, and even the prejudices of any respectable minority should be treated with some regard, and some spirit of mutual concession.

In the bill of rights the attempt that is made at legislating on social equality will do no good to any one, and is calculated to open up the way for much turmoil; it attempts to deprive persons of vested rights, and the voluntary control of their property. It will prevent the introduction of capital, prevent emigration, and retard the progress of the state.

The judiciary is faulty in many respects. I am opposed to the articles on franchise, oath of office, also the articles on public education. And, also, the making of the seat of government at New Orleans. I am opposed to the whole title on ordinance.

The constitution contains, I know, many valuable provisions which I should regret to lose, but as I can not here separate the good that is in it from what I consider to be the overweighing rubbish, I feel myself compelled to vote against the whole.

GEORGE W. DEARING, JR.,
of Rapides.

Mr. Fuller recorded his vote as follows:

I vote for the constitution, protesting against article thirteen, article ninety-eight, and article ninety-nine.

I am strongly opposed to disfranchisement.

HENRY W. FULLER.

Mr. Martin recorded his reasons for his vote as follows:

I vote yes for the adoption of the constitution as a whole, with a protest against the proposed substitute offered by Mr. Waples, known as article ninety-eight of the constitution, and adopted as the disfranchisement clause, for the following reasons:

1. That I do consider and believe that men of my race are equal to the white race, and that they are endowed of all manly and intelligent faculties; and that they are able to fight their way through without using any proscriptive means against their opponents.

2. Because I think that this article is in conflict with the fourteenth article of the reconstruction act.

3. Because those who have voluntarily engaged in rebellion and insurrection against the United States are not deprived of their rights of citizenship.

4. Because said article embodies contrary principles of republicanism.

Respectfully submitted, with the request that it will be spread upon the minutes, agreeably to resolutions adopted to said effect, allowing members the explanation of their vote.

THOMAS W. MARTIN, of Jefferson.

The convention adjourned until to-morrow at 10 A. M.

A true copy:

WM. VIGERS,
Secretary.

SEVENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

NEW ORLEANS, March 3, 1868.

The convention met pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by the president at 10 A. M.

The roll was called, and the following members answered to their names:

President J. G. Taliaferro; Messrs. Antoine, Baker, Belden, Bertonneau, Blackburn, Blandin, Bonseigneur, Bonnefoi, Brown, Burrel, Butler, Cooley, Crane, Crawford, Cromwell, Cuney, Dearing, Depasseau, P. G. Deslonde, J. Deslonde, Donato, Douglass, G. Duparte, U. Dupart, Duplessis, Esnard, François, Fuller, Gardiner, Guichard, Harper, Harrison, Hempstead, R. H. Isabelle, T. Isabelle, Jones, Kelso, Lange, Leroy, Marie, Martin, Meadows, McLeran, Morris, Moses, Murrel, Mushaway, Myers, Newsham, Packard, Pinchback, Pollard, Reagan, Reese, Riard, Riggs, Roberts, Rodriguez, Schwab, Snaer, Thibaut, Twitchell, Underwood, Valfroit, Vandergriff, Vidal, Waples, Wickliffe, Williams, Wilson—71 members present.

Prayer by the Rev. Josiah Fiske.

The minutes were read and adopted.

ORIGINAL RESOLUTIONS.

By Mr. Pinchback:

Resolved, That the warrant clerk be authorized to issue warrants for one hundred and fifty dollars each to Sandy Rose, Jeff Stokes, and Allen Vincent.

Mr. Underwood offered the following substitute:

Motion, That the enrolling clerks, committee clerks, and warrant clerk be allowed each two hundred and fifty dollars. The sergeant and assistant sergeant-at-arms, each, one hundred and fifty dollars. Doorkeeper one hundred dollars, as an additional compensation for the faithful performance of their duties during the session of this convention.

Mr. Hempstead moved to amend by adding after the words "doorkeeper" "each page fifty dollars."

Mr. Wickliffe offered the following substitute:

Resolved, That E. Gauthier, A. Gury, J. R. Verbois, Ernest Longpre, and G. W. Mader, clerks, be allowed the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars each, as compensation for additional services rendered, and that the warrant clerk be authorized to issue warrants to the said parties for the respective amounts.

Adopted—yeas 52, nays 11—as follows:

Yeas: Antoine, Belden, Bertonneau, Blackburn, Bonnefoi, Brown, Burrel, Cooley, Cromwell, Dearing, P. G. Deslonde, U. Dupart, François, Guichard, Harper, Harris, Hempstead, Ingraham, R. H. Isabelle, Jones, Lange, Leroy, Marie, Martin, Massicot, Meadows, Morris, Moses, Murrel, Mushaway, Newsham, Oliver, Packard, Pinchback, Poindexter, Pollard, Reagan, Riggs, Roberts, Rodriguez, Schawb, Smith, Snaer, Thibaut, Tinchant, Twitchell, Underwood, Vidal, Wickliffe, Williams—52 yeas.

Nays: Butler, Crane, Crawford, Cuney, Douglass, G. Duparte, Ferguson, McLeran, Myers, Riard, Waples—11 nays.

Mr. Smith recorded his vote yes upon the constitution as a whole.

Mr. Tinchant recorded the reasons for his vote yes upon the constitution as follows:

Most sincerely hoping that the loyal people of this state will through their legislature soon wipe out any of the disfranchising clauses of this constitution, and most earnestly believing that under the constitution, on the adoption of which I am about to vote, all the rights and privileges of all men, without distinction of race, color, or previous condition, shall be fully secured and warranted forever in this state, I cheerfully record my vote in the affirmative.

By Mr. Ferguson:

Resolved, That each member of the convention be allowed an extra compensation of $2000. The warrant clerk will issue warrants accordingly.

Laid on the table as ridiculous and irrelevant.

By Mr. Hempstead:

The warrant clerk is hereby authorized to issue warrants in sums of fifty dollars each for the pages of this convention.

Mr. Cooley moved to amend by inserting $25 in place of $50.

Adopted.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

By Mr. Underwood:

Resolved, That the resolution adopted by this convention on the seventeenth of December, 1867, giving the publication of the official journal of this convention to several newspapers of this state, be amended by striking out the words "St. Landry Progress," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Assumption Progress."

Mr. Bonseigneur moved to lay on the table.

Lost.

Mr. Crawford asked for a division of the question, so as to take the vote separately on the first and second clauses of the resolution.

The first clause was adopted as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution adopted by this convention on the 17th of December, 1867, giving the publication of the official journal of this convention to several newspapers of his state, be amended by striking out he words "St. Landry Progress."

The second clause, as follows, was adopted:

And inserting in lieu thereof the words "Assumption Progress."

Yeas 39, nays 24, as follows:

Yeas: Baker, Blackburn, Burrel, Cuney, Douglass, U. Dupart, Duplessis, François, Guichard, Harper, Harris, Hempstead, Ingraham, Landers, Lange, Marie, Martin, Massicot, McLeran, Morris, Murrel, Newsham, Oliver, Packard, Pinchback, Poindexter, Pollard, Reagan, Roberts, Schwab, Snaer, Thibaut, Tinchant, Twitchell, Underwood, Valfroit, Vidal, Wickliffe, Williams—39 yeas.

Nays: Antoine, Bertonneau, Blandin, Bonseigneur, Bonnefoi, Brown, Butler, Cooley, Crane, Crawford, Cromwell, P. G. Deslonde, Donato, G. Duparte, Fuller, Ferguson, R. H. Isabelle, Jones, J. B. Lewis, Mushaway, Myers, Riggs, Rodriguez, Vandergriff, Waples—24 nays.

Mr. Tinchant moved to reconsider the last vote.

Mr. Cooley moved to reject the vote of any member who may be pecuniarily interested in the passage of the resolution.

Mr. Pinchback raised the point of order that the motion of Mr. Cooley should not be entertained.

The chair ruled adversely.

Mr. Pinchback appealed.

The chair was sustained.

Mr. Vidal asked to be excused from voting.

Mr. Cooley moved that his request be granted.

Adopted.

The motion to reconsider did not prevail—yeas 22, nays 43—as follows:

Yeas: Blandin, Bonseigneur, Bonnefoi, Cooley, Crane, Crawford, Dearing, Depasseau, Donato, Duparte G., Ferguson, Harrison, Isabelle R. H., Kelso, Mushaway, Pinchback, Pollard, Rodriguez, Tinchant, Vandergriff, Waples, Williams—22 yeas.

Nays: Baker, Blackburn, Burrel, Cromwell, Cuney, Deslonde P. G., Douglass, Dupart U., Duplessis, Gardiner, Guichard, Harper, Harris, Hempstead, Ingraham, Jones, Landers, Lange, Leroy, Lewis R., Marie, Martin, Massicot, Meadows, McLeran, Morris, Moses, Murrel, Myers, Newsham, Oliver, Packard, Pierce, Poindexter, Reagan, Riard, Roberts, Schwab, Snaer, Thibaut, Twitchell, Underwood, Wickliffe—43 nays.

Mr. Simon Jones registered his vote upon the motion to reconsider the vote taken upon the adoption of the resolution repealing that of December 17, 1867, relative to the St. Landry Progress:

I vote no, because the convention has passed the resolution against my vote, and I do not feel it my duty to reverse the decision of the convention.

By Mr. Oliver:

Resolved, That the sergeant-at-arms be allowed an extra compensation for his services of two hundred dollars, and each assistant sergeant-at-arms, the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars: and for which sums, the warrant clerk issue warrants to them as provided by the resolutions of this convention.

Laid on the table.

By Mr. Harper:

Motion, That the warrant clerk be authorized to issue warrants of $250 each, to Messrs. G. Krubbe, J. J. Lane, and Catlin, for faithful reportorial services rendered to the convention.

Laid on the table.

By Mr. Newsham:

That each regular attendant of the lobby who has neglected his business in his attendance here receive as compensation the per diem allowed as member of convention, and that every other man without money receive any amount of warrants.

The chair decided the motion to be irrelevant and tending to cast ridicule upon the proceedings of the convention, and that it should be laid aside.

Mr. R. H. Isabelle moved to amend by adding "and the vendors of ginger cakes in the lobby."

Laid aside as ridiculous and irrelevant.

By Mr. Ferguson:

Resolved, That $500 be allowed to each member of the lobby for their good behavior.

Laid aside as irrelevant and ridiculous.

By Mr. R. H. Isabelle:

Resolved, That the warrant clerk of this convention be and he is hereby authorized to issue warrants in sums of $100 each to Messrs. G. Krubbe, J. J. Lane, and G. Catlin, for their impartial reports of proceedings of this convention.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to amend by adding:

Resolved, also, That my old hat and boots be given to Town Talk for his efficient services as a perfect brick.

Laid aside as ridiculous and irrelevant.

Mr. Crawford moved to amend by adding "to the person who wrote under the nom de plume of Town Talk in 1865."

Laid aside as ridiculous and irrelevant.

Mr. Crane was called to the chair.

By Mr. Cooley:

ORDINANCE.

Be it ordained by the constitutional convention of the state of Louisiana, That the collection of the penalty imposed by ordinance of this convention of date the fourth January, 1868, is hereby extended to the first April next, and the same not to be exacted by the different tax collectors of the city of New Orleans, Orleans right bank, and parish of Jefferson, until the said first April, 1868.

It is further ordained, That the warrants issued by authority of this convention, for the payment of per diem and mileage of delegates, and the pay of its officers, except the official printer or printers, shall be receivable in payment of all taxes and licenses due to the state of Louisiana; and when paid in the treasury of the state on account of any state tax or license, the same shall be placed by the treasurer of the state to the debit of the convention "fund" on his books, and shall be paid out of said fund, for the benefit of the general fund of the state.

Be it further ordained, That all country members of this convention, who have caused the warrants issued in their favor to be recorded and registered in the office of the auditor of public accounts, shall cause the said registry to be canceled, and obtain from said auditor a certificate to the effect that they have no warrant registered in his office for payment, in order to obtain payment for their per diem from the sheriffs of their respective parishes, and without said certificate from the auditor it shall not be lawful for the sheriffs of the respective parishes to pay any of their warrants.

Mr. Packard moved to amend by striking out "April first," and inserting in lieu thereof "March twenty."

Accepted by the mover.

The ordinance, as amended, was adopted as follows:

Be it ordained by the constitutional convention of the state of Louisiana, That collection of the penalty imposed by ordinance of this convention of date of January 4, 1868, is hereby extended to the twentieth March next, and the same shall not be exacted by the different tax collectors of the city of New Orleans, Orleans right bank, and parish of Jefferson until the said March 20, 1868.

It is further ordained, That the warrants issued by authority of this convention for the payment of the per diem and mileage of delegates and the pay of its officers, except the official printer, or printers, shall be received in payment of all taxes and licenses due to the state of Louisiana; and when paid into the treasury of the state on account of any state tax or license, the same shall be placed by the treasurer of the state to the debit of the convention fund on his books, and shall be paid out of said fund for the benefit of the general fund of the state.

Be it further ordained, That all country members of this convention who have caused the warrants issued in their favor to be recorded and registered in the office of the auditor of public accounts shall cause the said registry to be canceled and obtain from said auditor a certificate to the effect that they have no warrant registered in his office for payment, in order to obtain payment for their per diem from the sheriffs of their respective parishes; and without said certificate from the auditor it shall not be lawful for the sheriffs of the respective parishes to pay any of their warrants.

Yeas 46, nays 15, as follows:

Yeas: Bertonneau, Blandin, Bonseigneur, Bonnefoi, Brown, Burrel, Cooley, Crane, Crawford, Dearing, Depasseau, Donato, Douglass, G. Duparte, Duplessis, Esnard, François, Gardiner, Guichard, Harper, Harrison, Hempstead, R. H. Isabelle, Thos. Isabelle, R. Lewis, Marie, Martin, Massicot, Morris, Myers, Packard, Pierce, Pinchback, Poindexter, Pollard, Reagan, Reese, Riard, Roberts, Rodriguez, Schwab, Thibaut, Twitchell, Valfroit, Waples, Wickliffe, Wilson, Williams—46 yeas.

Nays: Blackburn, Cuney, Demarest, P. G. Deslonde, U. Dupart, Ferguson, Harris, Lange, Leroy, Meadows, Moses, Murrel, Steele, Underwood, Vidal—15 nays.

Mr. William Murrel registered his vote yes on the adoption of the constitution as a whole, because it embodies the highest principles of justice, humanity, and equality before the law.

Mr. Brown moved to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. Pinchback moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Adopted.

The convention, pending the enrollment of the constitution, adjourned until Thursday at 12 M.

SEVENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

NEW ORLEANS, March 5, 1868.

The convention met pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by the president at 10 A. M.

The roll was called, and the following members answered to their names:

President J. G. Taliaferro, Messrs. Antoine, Baker, Burrel, Butler, Cooley, Crawford, Cromwell, Cuney, Dearing, Demarest, Depasseau, J. Deslonde, G. Duparte, U. Dupart, Duplessis, François, Fuller, Ferguson, Guichard, Harris, Harrison, Hempstead, Ingraham, T. Isabelle, Jackson, Jones, Kelso, Lange, R. Lewis, Marie, Martin, Massicot, Meadows, McLeran, McMillan, Moses, Myers, Newsham, Oliver, Packard, Pierce, Reagan, Reese, Roberts, Schwab, Snaer, Twitchell, Underwood, Valfroit, Vidal, Waples, Wickliffe, Williams, Wilson—62 members present.

Prayer by the Rev. Josiah Fiske.

The minutes were read and adopted.

The president stated that having been absent from the convention at the time that the vote was taken upon the adoption of the constitution as a whole, he now desired to record his vote yes upon its adoption, and the secretary was ordered to record it accordingly upon the minutes.

President Taliaferro voted yes upon the adoption of the constitution as a whole.

Mr. Waples called up his motion of March 2 to change the phraseology of article ninety-eight.

Mr. Bertonneau moved to lay it on the table.

Lost—yeas 26, nays 40—as follows:

Yeas: Belden, Bertonneau, Blandin, Bonseigneur, Brown, Butler, Cooley, Crane, Crawford, Demarest, P. G. Deslonde, J. Deslonde, Douglass, G. Duparte, Duplessis, Ferguson, Guichard, Kelso, Massicot, Myers, Pinchback, Pollard, Riggs, Rodriguez, Steele, Williams—26 yeas.

Nays: Antoine, Baker, Blackburn, Burrel, Cromwell, Cuney, Donato, U. Dupart, François, Gardiner, Harper, Harris, Hempstead, Ingraham, R. H. Isabelle, Jones, Landers, Leroy, Lange, R. Lewis, Meadows, McLeran, McMillan, Moses, Murrel, Newsham, Oliver, Packard, Pierce, Reagan, Reese, Roberts, Schwab, Snaer, Twitchell, Underwood, Valfroit, Vidal, Waples, Wickliffe, Wilson—40 nays.

Mr. Waples moved the previous question upon its adoption.

Mr. Cooley raised the point of order, that this motion sought to accomplish indirectly what could not be done directly by a motion of this nature, viz: to alter the substance of an article of the constitution, under the pretense of changing its phraseology, and that the object sought could only be attained by a motion to repeal or to reconsider, and that therefore the motion for the previous question should not be entertained.

The chair decided that the point of order was well taken and that the motion was not in order.

Mr. Waples appealed.

The chair was not sustained.

The motion for the previous question was seconded by a majority of the delegates present.

The question recurring upon the changes in the phraseology of article ninety-eight, proposed by Mr. Waples, they were adopted—yeas 37, nays 28—as follows:

Yeas: Antoine, Baker, Blackburn, Burrel, Jos. Deslonde, François, Gardiner, Harper, Harris, Hempstead, Ingraham, R. H. Isabelle, Jackson, Jones, Landers, Leroy, Marie, Meadows, McLeran, Moses, Murrel, Newsham, Packard, Pierce, Pollard, Reagan, Reese, Roberts, Schwab, Twitchell, Underwood, Valfroit, Vidal, Waples, Wickliffe, Williams, Wilson—37 yeas.

Nays: Belden, Bertonneau, Blandin, Bonsigneur, Bonnefoi, Butler, Cooley, Crane, Crawford, Dearing, Depasseau, P. G. Deslonde, Douglass, G. Duparte, Duplessis, Fuller, Kelso, Martin, Massicot, McMillan, Mushaway, Myers, Pinchback, Riard, Riggs, Rodriguez, Smith, Tinchant—28 nays.

And the article, as thus amended, reads as follows:

ART. —. The following persons shall be prohibited from voting or from holding any office: all persons who shall have been convicted of treason, perjury, forgery, bribery, or other crime punishable in the penitentiary, and persons under interdiction.

All persons who are estopped from claiming the right of suffrage by abjuring their allegiance to the United States government, or by notoriously levying war against it, or adhering to its enemies, giving them aid and comfort, but who have not expatriated themselves, nor have been convicted of any of the crimes mentioned in the first paragraph of this article, are hereby restored to the said right, except the following: Those who have held office, civil or military, for one year or more, under the organization styled "the confederate states of America;" those who registered themselves as enemies of the United States; those who acted as leaders of guerrilla bands during the late rebellion; those who, in the advocacy of treason, wrote or published newspaper articles, or preached sermons during the late rebellion; and those who voted for and signed an ordinance of secession in any state. No person included in these exceptions shall either vote or hold office until he shall have relieved himself by voluntarily writing and signing a certificate setting forth that he acknowledges the late rebellion to have been morally and politically wrong, and that he regrets any aid and comfort he may have given it; and he shall file the certificate in the office of the secretary of state, and it shall be published in the official journal; Provided, That no person who, prior to the first of January, 1868, favored the execution of the laws of the United States, popularly known as the reconstruction acts of congress, and openly and actively assisted the loyal men of the state in their efforts to restore Louisiana to her position in the Union, shall be held to be included among those herein excepted. Registrars of voters shall take the oath of any such person as prima facie evidence of the fact that he is entitled to the benefits of this proviso.

Mr. McMillan was called to the chair.

Mr. Cooley moved to repeal section two of the ordinance proposed by him March 3, and adopted, reading as follows:

It is further ordained, That the warrants issued by authority of this convention, for the payment of per diem and mileage of delegates, and the pay of its officers, except the official printer or printers, shall be receivable in payment of all taxes and licenses due to the state of Louisiana; and when paid in the treasury of the state on account of any state tax or license, the same shall be placed by the treasurer of the state to the debit of the convention "fund" on his books, and shall be paid out of said fund for the benefit of the general fund of the state.

Mr. Bertonneau moved to lay the motion to repeal on the table.

Adopted.

Mr. Jones moved to take from the table Mr. Brown's motion to reconsider the vote upon the adoption of the ordinance offered by Mr. Cooley March 3.

Mr. Blandin moved to indefinitely postpone the motion to take from the table.

The motion to postpone prevailed.

Mr. Crawford moved that when the convention adjourns to-day, it do adjourn sine die.

Mr. Jones moved to lay the motion on the table.

The chair decided the motion to lay on the table the motion to adjourn sine die not in order.

The motion of Mr. Crawford did not prevail.

The following bill, reported by the committee on contingent expenses was ordered to be paid. Bill of Mr. Joyce for $24.

Mr. Cooley moved to adopt the following ordinance:

Be it ordained by the constitutional convention of the state of Louisiana, That a committee of three members of the convention be appointed by the president with power to supervise and direct the collection of the tax levied by ordinance of the twenty-fourth December, 1867, and to take all measures necessary to enforce and compel the collection thereof, and, if necessary, to employ counsel to represent the convention in any court or courts of this state or of the United States, and to warrant upon the treasurer of the state, payable out of the convention fund for fees of counsel, other expenses incurred by them in carrying the object of their appointment, and the per diem of said members so appointed as said committee shall continue as fixed by the rules of the convention until the first of April, 1868, and shall be payable upon their own warrant.

Mr. Bertonneau moved to amend as follows:

And that said committee be empowered to settle all other accounts of this convention.

Mr. Packard offered the following as a substitute for the proposed ordinance:

To strike out all after the words "be it ordained," and insert "that the board of registration created by ordinance adopted by the convention February 15, 1868, shall have authority to enforce the collection of the taxes levied by the several ordinances of the convention, and to perform any and all duties appertaining to the same."

The substitute was adopted.

By Mr. Packard:

Resolved, That when we adjourn, it shall be subject to the call of the board of registration, appointed by the convention by virtue of the ordinance adopted fifteenth of February, 1868, in case of the non ratification of the constitution, or for any cause prior or subsequent to election for the ratification of said constitution.

Resolved, That any business which may be left unfinished by the convention, such as the discharging of clerks, the printing and publication and circulation of the constitution, etc., the settlement for the official printing, etc., shall be performed by said board of registration.

Resolved, That said board shall have authority to enforce the collection of the taxes levied by the several ordinances of the convention, and to perform any and all duties appertaining to the same.

Mr. R. H. Isabelle moved to amend by substituting the following:

Provided, That in case this convention be not reassembled within twelve months after adjournment as above mentioned, it shall be considered as being adjourned sine die.

The amendment, with the consent of the convention, was accepted by the mover, and was ordered to be incorporated with the original resolution.

Mr. Packard asked and obtained the consent of the convention to strike out of the resolution proposed by him the abbreviation "etc." wherever it occurs.

Mr. Pinchback moved to lay the resolution of Mr. Packard on the table.

Adopted—yeas 40, nays 17—as follows:

Yeas: Belden, Bertonneau, Blandin, Bonseigneur, Bonnefoi, Brown, Butler, Cooley, Crane, Crawford, Cromwell, Demarest, Depasseau, Deslonde P. G., Duparte G., Dupart U., Duplessis, François, Gardiner, Kelso, Lange, Martin, Massicot, Meadows, McMillan, Murrel, Mushaway, Myers, Pinchback, Poindexter, Reese, Riard, Riggs, Rodriguez, Steele, Tinchant, Valfroit, Vandergriff, Waples, Williams—40 yeas.

Nays: Burrell, Douglass, Harper, Harris, Hempstead, Jackson, Jones, Landers, Leroy, Marie, Newsham, Packard, Pollard, Reagan, Underwood, Vidal, Wilson—17 nays.

Mr. Demarest recorded the following explanation of his vote upon the adoption of the constitution as a whole:

I vote yes for the adoption of the constitution, with a protest against the disfranchising clause, as the motto of my party is universal suffrage.

A. J. DEMAREST, St. Mary.

Mr. Meadows moved that the convention do now proceed to the election of the board of registrars provided for in the ordinance of the constitution.

Adopted.

The convention adjourned until to-morrow at 11 A. M.

The Boston Journal says: "A report has been printed that President Johnson would escape impeachment, even if found guilty, through the influence of the Masonic members of the senate." If he depends upon this loophole his chances are very small, for a man's Masonic obligations are not political in the slightest degree.

The warrants drawn on the treasury for expenses of the government during February amount to $24,000,000.

A PARODY.

Let me kiss you for your mother—
For your sister—cousin—aunt—
Or for somebody or other
Whom I long to kiss and can't.
I could wish my love beside me,
As I've you beside me now;
But the pleasure is denied me,
So I'll kiss you anyhow.

You have silken yellow tresses,
While my love's are black as night;
And your eyes—e'en Love confesses—
Are a dozen times as bright;
But I covet from another
What another can not grant;
So I'll kiss you for your mother—
Or your sister—cousin—aunt!

The senate chamber on the fourth of March 1865, and the fourth of March 1868, is thus pictured by the Washington correspondent of the St. Louis Republican:

The day was an unusually bright one, and the ladies, who were in the majority in the audience, were attired as for a state occasion, very nearly resembling in brilliancy of array the scene of just three years ago to-day, when Mr. Johnson was inaugurated vice-president in the same chamber, and when admittance was vouchsafed only by tickets, and restricted to the select and favored. The same damask chairs, old and faded as they look, that now stand to receive seven men, charged with the maintenance of the articles of impeachment against President Johnson, were arranged in precisely this order this day and hour three years ago, and were occupied by the cabinet of President Lincoln and members of the supreme court, to whom Vice-President Johnson addressed words memorable because inappropriate. There are those present to day who can recall that scene, and to whom the ceremony of to day is interesting as showing how sharply these two pages in our national history stand out in contrast.

The St. Louis Republican has an editorial expressing sympathy for General Hancock and the rebel element in this city, concluding thus:

We do not see therefore that General Hancock is required by any sense of duty to remain at a post, the retention of which imposes so immense a personal sacrifice. His ability and means for doing good there have been exhausted. Should he remain, he can only be a register of decrees which he feels to be unjust and injurious; an instrument of measures which, in the honesty of his heart, he can not but believe are tending to the ruin of the people in those subject provinces. As an obedient soldier of the republic, he feels every disposition to do his duty in any sphere where his acts are not brought into constant collision with his convictions of right and expediency. There are many such spheres, and to one of them we hope he will be soon transferred.

The state of Vermont is entitled, like other states of the Union, to two United States senators and her proportionate number of representatives; but in the present congress she is represented by no less than fourteen of her sons. Besides the five senators and representatives there are two other natives of Vermont in the senate—Mr. Cragin, of New Hampshire, and Mr. Howard, of Michigan—and seven in the house. Among the latter are Mr. Thaddeus Stevens, of Pennsylvania, who was born in Vermont in 1792, Mr. Phelps, of Maryland, and Mr. Eldridge, of Wisconsin.

General Hancock is a Pennsylvanian, but the loyal press of that state do not afford him much support at the present time. The Pittsburg Gazette says:

General Hancock desires to be relieved from the command of the fifth military district. The public interests will be promoted by granting his request. It is not necessary to pronounce any opinion upon the integrity and patriotism of General Hancock in his present command. The facts that the friends of speedy reconstruction upon a loyal basis in the states of his district have been able to find absolutely nothing in his policy to encourage them, while the rebel element not only welcomed him with joy, but has sustained all his official acts, and will mourn, as for a lost friend, over his withdrawal from the command, suffice to render his retirement acceptable to the friends of the Union everywhere.

In Virginia, twenty five out of 105 delegates, or less than one-fourth, are colored men. In North Carolina, thirteen out of 120, less than one-ninth. In Mississippi, twelve out of 128. In Louisiana, the delegates are about equally divided. In Florida, twenty out of eighty are colored. In Georgia, fifteen out of 195 or one-thirteenth, are colored. In Alabama, eighteen are colored, about one-fifth of the whole body. In Arkansas, five out of seventy-eight are colored. In South Carolina the two races are about equal in the convention.

The Albany (New York) Journal says:

General Hancock "went up like a rocket." Circumstances indicate that he may "come down like a stick." General Grant's order to reinstate the municipal officers at New Orleans, whom General Hancock suspended, must be exceedingly mortifying to the gallant commander. And this mortification must be all the more intense from the fact that his order of suspension was issued while he was basking in the glowing heat of the president's bombastic eulogy, and as a demonstration of his right to the appellation of the "second Washington."

We do not believe that he would intentionally swerve a hair's breadth from the line of duty, as he understands it. His misfortune is a want of intellectual breadth; entire destitution of skill in and knowledge of civil affairs; an undue susceptibility to flattery, and a want of self-reliance, as the result of a conscious want of adaptation to any work outside the routine of military life. If he had not been tampered with by men who knew his weaknesses, and who wished to use him as an instrument to accomplish their mischievous purposes; or if he had had discreet friends to counsel him, he would have retained in New Orleans all the lustre he gleaned upon the scene of battlefields with which his name is so honorably associated.

The rapid and steady progress of impeachment has electrified the Union men of the South. The news came in good time, just as the rebels were rejoicing over the success of their plans in Alabama, and expecting new aid and comfort from Andrew Johnson. The Republican papers of the South come to us filled with gratitude to congress, while their cruel enemies once more realize the folly of opposing the great organizations which, having conquered them on the battle field, will as surely conquer them at the ballot box.—Washington Chronicle.

The New Orleans REPUBLICAN raises the name of Edward H. Durell, of that state, for the vice-presidency, and his claims are urged by a correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette. If the Southern states should promptly reorganize under the reconstruction acts, there might be strong reasons for giving the vice-presidency to that section. Milwaukee Sentinel.

It is a suggestive fact that the men who failed to carry such states as Maryland and Kentucky out of the Union have returned to those states and disfranchised the men who kept them in the Union.

Life Among the Mormons.

Life Among the Mormons and a March to their Zion, by an officer of the United States Army. Cloth, pp. 219. New York, 1868. Morehead, Simpson & Bond. New Orleans, sold by Gresham. Price, $1 25.

This neat volume, issued by a new publishing house and appropriately illustrated embodies, (with considerable additions,) the series of interesting letters, communicated to this journal in 1866, written from the plains and Utah. To our older readers, it supplies an opportunity of preserving, in a convenient form for reference, the valuable matter contained in these letters—which so instructed them at the time. The genial and unostentatious style of the brave and accomplished author gives an especial charm to his subjects. The late war did much for the participants in it, in the way of developing habits of keen and philosophical observation of men and things aronnd them, and we have in this book a pleasing illustration of the fact. Our author begins his narrative by stating that he started for Utah from Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, with troops destined to garrison that territory: he leads us pleasantly through the plains of the far west, ever and anon, diversifying his succint narrative with pleasant anecdote and philosophic reflection. But, in his remarks on the present overland system of travel, he leads us to conclude that the completion of the Pacific railroad is a consummation devoutly to be desired by all present or prospective travelers over the plains, whether to Utah, Colorado, or California. He himself was not subject, however, to these annoyances, since the troops traveled as a train by themselves, guided by their own judgment and convenience. The party was quite too numerous to be troubled by the treacherous Indians, but we have interesting allusions to meetings with them, as also adventures with antelope, prairie dog, and rattlesnake.

The greater part of the work is given up to the consideration of the social, religious, and political workings of the Mormon creed, and the writer seems to have had special advantages for observing the details of their system.

The journey's record complete, leaving the writer in the midst of the Mormonites, he then proceeds to give us a history of the sect since their stay in Utah, with a full account of the difficulties occurring there just previously to the recent civil war, and which, but for it, must have resulted disastrously for Brigham Young as bringing upon him, and his associates the wrath of an outraged government.

Mormonism had its rise in New Hampshire in 1830, when Joseph Smith claims to have received and translated the "Book of Mormon." Their early location and spread was in Missouri and Illinois; from the latter state they were driven, after the mobbing and slaying of Smith at Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1844.

Their exodus to Utah occurred in 1848, the abode left being on the Missouri river. Their sufferings in the first winter were intense. Even on the journey their provisions gave out, and they were compelled to resort to eating beetles, grasshoppers, and wild herbs. But with an enthusiasm worthy of a better cause they persevered, and have now made the bleak and barren so-called "Promised Land" to blossom, and every plant to abundantly give of its increase. When they first occupied the Salt Lake region it was Mexican territory, but we shortly afterward acquired it by treaty with Mexico. In 1849 the Mormens adopted a so-called "Constitution for the State of Deseret," and applied for admission to the federal Union, but they still remain under territorial government. Brigham Young, the present Mormon chief, first becomes prominent in 1835, when he was elected president of the "Twelve Apostles." His accession to supreme power is described as follows:

After the death of Joseph Smith Sidney Rigdon, one of his counsellors, assumed the presidency; but before he had ruled a year he was deposed by Brigham. It appears that no "revelation" had been recorded providing for successor in the event of the death of the prophet, and Rigdon being next highest in rank naturally claimed the position. As there was then no one individual to receive a revelation that would satisfy the clashing interests of aspirants, Brigham Young proposed to show the will of God concerning the succession by a miraculous demonstration. So on one occasion Brigham went into the pulpit to preach as he had often done before, and upon rising before the congregation he assumed the appearance, manner, and tone of voice of Joseph Smith, the martyr, so perfectly as to quite electrify the people. Whereupon it was at once conceded that the mantle had fallen upon him, and he was by acclamation declared to be the president of the church. This made poor Rigdon to be an imposter, and he was cut off and delivered over to the buffetings of Satan. Brigham Young's course met the disapprobation of Emma Smith, who had been the PUBLIC wife of Joseph. She contended then, as she does now, that her husband had expressly declared that at his death his mantle would fall upon his oldest son, and he become the leader in Israel. The people loved Joseph and revered his memory, and had it not been for the powers of mimicry of Young the counsel of Emma would probably have prevailed, and long ere this he would have been a subject of Joseph II., or more probably the church would long since have ceased to exist."

As regards the published creed of the Mormons given at length in the text of the book our author says:

This strange admixture of doctrines culled from the tenets of almost every religious as well as Pagan sect, is modified from time to time to better suit their materialistic views, increase the despotism of the church, and sanction their lustful pleasures.

With an energy and a zeal worthy of a better cause, we find the Mormon missionaries pursuing in almost apostolic simplicity journeys to all parts of Great Britain, Sweden, Denmark, Norway, France, Germany, and even the sunny south of Europe, and from all these quarters and from the mountains of Switzerland come each year great numbers of new converts, pouring over, chiefly by way of Liverpool and New York, thence westward to the city of the saints, and the land of promise. These migrations are frequently superintended and accompanied by an "apostle." The deluded flock frequently find, long ere their journey's end, the utter hollow-heartedness of these false prophets.

But even Mormonism is not altogether bad. Army officers agree with Hepworth Dixon, that some of the Mormon leaders, even, possess good traits of character, and that the masses are more sinned against than sinning. The foul blot of polygamy, with its accompanying horrors, receives the full attention of a clear, calm, and philosophic mind, and the conclusions are deserving of careful consideration. One brief extract:

Certainly the Mormon woman knows that it is foreign to her nature to be made happy in such relations, and all, of both sexes, who have observed the workings of polygamy, know the tendency is to, and that it does, degrade woman. The female Mormon is early taught that she is the inferior of man in everything, and she aspires to be his equal in nothing. She becomes a wife, knowing that she is to be made a servant, rather than a companion and helpmate, and the true relations of the connubial state are "entirely perverted."

Among the vast accumulation of trashy books recently published, we look upon this little volume as a gem of purity and candor, as well as giving so much valuable information on a matter of growing interest. The Mormons are a powerful people, situate in a region remote and difficult of access; should they continue to defy the wishes of the nation in their shameful practices, one may readily see a cause for a serious commotion in the "cloud, the size of a man's hand," now hovering on the distant western horizon.

We recommend to our readers to buy this book and read it.

Travels in Western Africa.

NUMBER FIVE.

NEW ORLEANS, March 7, 1868.

REV. DR. NEWMAN:

In my last I stated that there are cheering as well as painful things to record of the interior of Western Africa. The reprobate, though numerically strong, are still the minority, and over many of them, the better thinking, sober-minded, and industrious Mohammedan, excercises no inconsiderable influence. This is particularly observable at the hours of devotion in the outward respect paid by the multitude of pagans, who are in heart estranged from the Koran. I found that Mohammedanism, that wonderful delusion, had spread over a large portion of the interior of Western Africa. Owing to the hindrances of climate, Africa has been shut out from the influences which have operated upon those countries which have outstripped the land of Ham in the race of civilization. They have been for the most part left to the fostering hand of nature alone, or dependent upon the slow and uncertain process of traditional information handed down with accumulating imperfections from one generation to another. The influence of those mighty agencies for promoting civilization, such as emigrations, extensive conquests, visits of foreign traders, etc., has been but little felt in the interior of Western Africa.

And had it not been for Mohamedanism, which, by making converts of the negroes, has penetrated as far as the western coast, even to the borders of the republic of Liberia, the natives throughout Soudan and Senegambia, the active and enterprising tribes in the valley of the Niger, the Jaloffs, Foulahs, Mandingoes of Musadora and Boporah, and Veys of Grand Cape Mount would, perhaps, have been sunk in the same moral degradation, the same intellectual torpor and lifelessness as the Hottentots, Booseys, or the aborigines on the banks of the Congo river.

The Vey people are intimately connected with the Mandingoes, the greatest trading people of the interior of Western Africa, who read, write, and keep accounts in the Arabic language, and whose commercial intercourse extends to the comparatively civilzed nations of Central Africa where the Arabic is vernacular. To these nations European missionary societies have been in vain seeking access through Egypt and Abyssinia for half a century. Liberia College has, through Messrs. Joseph J. Roberts, Edward W. Blyden, and H. R. W. Johnson, already begun to distribute among the Mandingoes Arabic books, from the press of the American mission, at Beyroot, in Syria. Much as I may lament the extraordinary development of the Moslem faith in the interior of Western Africa, I can not but admit that it has produced a religious sense among the people. It has taught them somewhat of the properties of life; it has inspired them in some measure with the power of self-restraint; and when we consider the long protracted darkness of centuries which has enveloped the land of Africa, it is a fact not without encouragement—nay, it is a cheering sign, and full of promise for the moral and political destinies of the African race—that we find tribes with a degree of veneration for divine things, with a certain amount, if limited, of acquaintance with the great hereafter, and a feeling of responsibility to a personal omniscient God; tribes who, if they have not so exalted and so informed a piety as the generality of Christians in America, who pretend to know so much of the negro's origin, yet have turned from idolatry and renounced fetichism. I affirm then, without fear of contradiction, that the faith of the Koran has achieved a preparatory work. It has taught the unity of God. It has initiated an intellectual and abstract worship without intermediate pictures and images. Hundreds of natives in the interior of Africa who are not professed followers of Islam, can repeat the four words of the Koran, Bismi illahi 'r-rahman 'r-rakim: "In the name of God the merciful and gracious," Allah Akbar, "God is great." It has engendered reverence for the great moral and spiritual characteristics of religion and a susceptibility to divine light. It is but the coming of Ismael before Isaac, the bastard before the child of promise. The Mandingoes and Veys seem to be more civilized than the other tribes nearer the seaboard. They dress after the manner of Arabs, and dislike liquor. They are tall, sprightly, and neat in their apparel, differing in features in many respects from those I had hitherto met. They were dextrous weavers of cotton cloths, which they sell. Iron ore exists in considerable quantity in the vicinity of Boporah, and the Mandingoes melt it in little thick earthenware pots of their own manufacture, using charcoal to temper the metal. Their towns were larger, better arranged, and neater than those of the Golah, Pesseys, and others through which I had passed. The patriarchal form of government prevails everywhere in the Mandingo and Vey settlements. Each village being ruled by a chief or by elders. The power of the chief is not despotic, but subject, in cases of life and death, at all events, to a council of elders. Polygamy exists throughout the whole interior of Western Africa. After making a few purchases of the Mandingoes, and being their guest for two weeks, I bade them adieu, and bright and early on the morning of February 16, 1861, took up my line of march toward the town of Tosoquinda, twenty-miles distant, belonging to a Golah named Marmorah, and contained about three thousand five hundred people. Marmorah is about forty-six years of age, quite intelligent, and is really king of the country, yet the revarence for the Mohammedans gives them a patriarchal government. He was raised by a Siberian physician, J. B. McGill, and when sober conforms to civilized habits. He has in his town a frame two-story building, the basement of which he uses as a store, it being filled with guns, powder, callicoes, cotton goods, rum, etc., of American and European manufacture. There were other fine and commodious buildings of native construction. Here I purchased forty-two bullocks, three cows, one heifer, two hundred bushels rice, ten bushels ground peas, three hundred and four native cloths, fifty billets camwood, three large and four small elephant's tusks, four sheep, four goats, ten dozen fowls, two hundred dollars in gold ornaments, and one white horse, and seventy-five gallons palm oil, for which I paid powder, guns, cutlasses, beads, tobacco, calicoes, and looking-glasses, etc., at one hundred per cent above cost. Horses are not reared at this place, but are brought from further interiorward by the Mandingoes, where they roam at will. (Upon my return to Monrovia I slaughtered one of the bullocks, and it weighed twenty-seven pounds to the quarter, and was about fifteen months old.) In this town of Marmorah's I counted over one thousand slaves, belonging to different tribes from that of the owners. An African king's or chief's wealth is estimated according to the number of his wives and slaves. Some of the slaves are wealthy in women and slaves, and have small towns, but are subject to Marmorah's will. Being anxious to further prosecute my explorations, I made arrangements with Marmorah to leave in his care all my purchasers until I returned. After which I shouldered my rifle and set out for Futa-Walla, a baracaded town, about thirty-five miles north of Tosoquinda. We passed several little towns of no importance; the forest abounded with leopards, deer, gazelle, monkeys, birds, and reptiles, some of the most venomous. I was struck with the with the beauty of the country, number of people, and varieties of dialect spoken by the different tribes. In every town through which I passed I found the natives anxious for trade, friendly, and good-hearted, but exceedingly superstitious. About 6½ o'clock P. M. the town of Futa-Walla appeard in sight. As they were hourly expecting a war upon them from the Golahs, they were strongly barricaded around with heavy timber about ten feet long, with a lattice work of twigs around the top raising it twenty-five feet from the ground over which the enemy can not climb to gain admittance. Around this fence, five feet from its base, are sharp pointed poisoned stakes to assist in keeping off the enemy. Once inside of the barricade I found that the population numbered some six thousand persons. The system of doing business here is similar to New York. Salt is their gold, and regulates the price of everything for sale.

A stick of salt contains about one quart, and is made of bamboo three feet long and eight inches square, the bamboo being closely tied together with twine of their own manufacture. The salt is either made on the beach near the city of Monrovia, by the natives, or it is purchased of the merchants. These "sticks," as they are called, are carefully enclosed in leaves, and placed over a fire for several days to dry, when they are put in bundles of from 100 to 150, just such sizes as the men can carry on their backs in a "king-jar," or native sedan. Salt is in this manner carried throughout the interior of western Africa. Nothing is sold in the town until market hours, which are from 6 A. M. to 2 P. M. The town is on a considerable elevation, and from it I had a splendid view of the surrounding country. It is governed by Wassa-Walla, a young man of twenty-nine years of age. I was treated with kindness and cordiality. At the expiration of three days, I proceeded toward Zinglise, which I reached after a hard day's travel. The population partook largely of the the Arabic character. They were not the negroes proper. They seemed adapted physically and intellectually for a better state. Indeed many of them possessed much intelligence; some had traveled extensively, and had good experience in trade and the ways of the world; and strangers coming often from the north of Africa have diffused much knowledge among these people. Mohammedism prevails all over this village; and there is great bigotry. The graceful palms, the beautiful cocoanut, with its clusters of fruit surrounding the parent stem; the luxuriant orchards of banna and plantain, loaded with huge bunches of ripening fruit, and long, broad leaves shining in the sunlight; the pyramidal bread fruit, the fragrant lime—all conspire to rivet the gaze of the stranger, and fill him with admiration. From Zingletre to Coasa the rout lay eastward. Cornfields abounded, magnificent tamarind trees rose in majestic beauty, and forests of ebony and other valuable timber, were seen on every hand. I found the soil of remarkable depth and fertility, ready to pay labor most amply, the natives almost living on its spontaneous productions. The Coasas are a powerful and haughty race, and form the ruling class in a large extent of territory, which they seem to to have occupied by conquest. Their slaves were less intelligent and spirited than the rest of the slaves, but not destitute of good qualities, physical and mental. There were kings and courts, and a body of counsellors always attend the royal head. The strictest etiquette is observed, and a slight inadvertency dooms the unfortunate offender, however high his station, to execution. Life and death are in the king's hand and depend on his wildest and most capricious whims. To the king of this village your humble servant owes a debt of gratitude, though it cost the lives of seven men. I may here mention the circumstance. At a short distance from Coasa was a large clear stream, to which I repaired for the ostensible purpose of bathing. Just as I was about to plunge in the stream I heard terrible screams proceeding from an opposite direction. I immediately clothed myself, seized my revolver and went to the spot from whence proceeded the screams, and there found a burly African tyrant unmercifully beating a bound frail woman. Acting upon the impulse of sympathy and forgetting my own danger I rushed to the villain and struck him to the ground with the butt of my revolver, and released the poor female, who immediately fled to the village. A few minutes after the man arose, and not speaking to me, or even showing any signs of anger, he left me alone. I then returned to the stream and disrobed myself, and plunged in. I had not been bathing more than half an hour ere a ball whistled past me, and I saw the smoke from a musket. Soon after I recognized my man with six other men equally as bad looking as himself. Believing that the years of my pilgrimage on the earth were numbered, I tried with all my might to reconcile myself to my fate, but the image of my wife and brother and parents rushed before me, and I think I may truly say I seemed to have gained new strength and courage. The fellow ordered me out of the water. I complacently obeyed. He then tied my hands behind me, and disarming me, marched me barefoot over sharp rocks to his small town, where a great deal of laughter was created at my expeuse. Towards midnight they became sleepy and negligent of me. I was sitting against an old palm tree, when I felt a slight touch, and turned to behold the female I had rescued, who in turn rescued me and guided me to the king. Balkie Kamie, who bade me lie in his hammock. I then heard some order given, and saw from my room a guard of twelve men, well armed, leave the town, guided by the female who had just rescued me. I heard or saw no more of the king until next morning about nine o'clock. I was told by a boy that the king wanted the American to come to him and eat breakfast, after which there would be a grand palaver. I went trembling, as well I might—a stranger in a strange land, surrounded by fifteen thousadd savagely painted warriors, armed cap-a-pie, and no protection but the escort of twenty Golah and Pessah boys, who would run if one of the Coosa raised a hand.

Once in the presence of the king, a look at his face banished all my fears. He kindly bade me be seated on a velvet cushion on the right of the female, whose name I learned was Sisiley. Soon as all the guards were stationed, the king ordered the prisoners to be brought forth. Now I comprehended what was about to be done. The prisoners were brought in, and after some moments the king asked me to look on the men and see if I knew them. I told him that I recognized seven of the prisoners; there were eighteen. He then requested me to make a statement of the difficulty between the prisoners and myself. I did so; and the woman immediately arose and charged the seven prisoners with violating the laws of hospitality by ill-treating me, the guest of King Balkie Kami.

Of course there was a long talk upon the subject. After the palaver the king ordered the seven culprits to to be shot and burned. And I assure you it was done with alacrity. All I could say in their behalf could not stay the judgment.

I left this place two days after, with fifty warriors as an escort, to the village of Balkie Bellisay, fifty miles north. But here I must leave your readers, and in my next will give an account of the town and inhabitants, etc. Respectfully,

FREDERICK K. HYDE.

NUMBER SEVEN.

RED RIVER SNAGS—THREE MILLION BALES—TEXAN MARTYRS OF FREEDOM.

March, 1868.

Red river is slowly rising under the influence of the recent heavy rains, and seven or eight feet of water is reported at the falls. Navigation was getting to be dangerous. Three steamboats have been sunk by snags within a few days between Shreveport and the mouth. The cost of one would have paid to remove the obstructions. It is strange, with all the trade of Red river, no dredge boat is employed. This rise of the river is happily coincident with the rise in cotton, which has brought from their hiding places several thousand bales, making the crop of last season nearly three million, and materially relieving the money market. Every steamer coming down the river is heavily laden with the precious staple, from ten to fifteen hundred bales being an ordinary load. Much of it is hauled a hundred miles or more by ox and mule teams from points in Texas, and on the way down from Shreveport the steamboat stopped frequently at out-of-the-way places for small lots of from one to a dozen bales. Everybody now wants to plant cotton, and laborers are in great demand, high wages being offered.

I had as fellow-passengers several Texans, registras of election, who had been to New Orleans with their returns. One was a brother Methodist preacher, of the M. P. church, and had much valuable information to impart regarding the condition of Western Texas before and since the war. He had been well acquainted with the martyr Bewley, and other ministers of the gospel who had been shot, hung, whipped—victims to the barbarism of slavery. Once under loyal rule, and there will be opened to us a vast field of usefulness in that mammoth state.

SHREVEPORT FRIENDS—REPUBLICAN ORGANIZATION—CHURCH BROKEN UP—PREACHER IN JAIL—ELECTION.

Shreveport is as dirty, ragged, wicked as ever, with some increase of business; for here, certainly, cotton is king. The itinerant fell among kind friends—young merchants who, having marched and fought for the Union during the war, are now storekeeping, and meanwhile doing good service in the work of reconstruction. Their cordial welcome and timely hospitality will be ever remembered. That sterling patriot and faithful bureau agent, General Flood, was still at his post, making his influence felt for good in all directions. Lieutenant Monroe, his assistant, and one of our hosts, finds enough to do in the present disturbed and impoverished condition of the freedmen. I had the pleasure of attending a meeting of the parish executive committee, and heard telling speeches by General Flood, Colonel Keating, Messrs. Smothers, Armstead, and others. Their organization is admirable, and their feeling harmonious. The parish was well canvassed by our young friend McLeran, who deserves much credit for his arduous labors in times of great peril.

Our work in Shreveport has been interrupted greatly by the loss of our place of worship, a poor shanty, but our all. Being United States property, it was sold by the quartermaster, and for several months the society have been out of doors. The membership had increased to a hundred and fifty. Much religious interest had prevailed, and numbers professed conversion. Of course the enemies of God and our country rejoiced. The sad condition of the missionary treasury in New York also gave occasion for taunts. "Where now are your Yankee friends, who are your best friends now?" But most of the little band kept together in church fellowship. The poverty and discouragement of all classes has prevented any move for a building in town, but in the country there are several excellent societies Brother Boyd had recently some experience of General Hancock's "civil authorities." One of his neighbor, a white man, because offended at him, opened fire at short range as Brother Boyd stood on his gallery. Next day on making complaint before a justice, the assailant was put under one hundred dollar bonds to keep the peace, but on leaving the office said he would kill the preacher. Boyd then asked the justice what he should do, and was told to defend himself. In the evening the battle was renewed, and after several shots were exchanged, the police came up, entered the white man's house, took a few drinks with him, and then entered the colored citizen's house, arrested him, and put him in jail for the night. A collection had to be taken in our church to pay this brother's jail fees and get him released. If a starving freedman shoots a hog belonging to the man who has had his labor several months without pay, the civil authorities are eager to punish him. These are specimes of the sort of government we mean to set aside on the 17th and 18th of April, and elect men who will do better, for it is next to impossible to do worse than the present state and parish officers.

AFRICAN ZION CHURCH—QUARTERLY CONFERENCE—UNFAITHFUL ITINERANT—CHURCH UNION.

The Zion brethren kindly offered their house for our use, and every night when the weather permitted I preached with much enjoyment. The rain and bad traveling hindered us greatly, and caused the postponement of their quarterly conference. Our business meeting was held at the house of Brother Boyd, Saturday evening. Five members were present, one new local preacher's license was granted, and two exhorters; others were renewed, one member was expelled, six appointments were reported with over a thousand members. On Sabbath four adults and one infant were baptised. The preacher appointed here by the Bishop at conference, has not reported to the presiding elder nor done any duty on the circuit, although he received sixty-two and a half dollars missionary money. He came to Shreveport, remained four days, did not preach nor hold an official meeting, borrowed money on the elders credit, and left the place. Of such material Methodist itinerants are not made. A good minister is much needed here; it is a grand work. The Zion African presiding elder called upon me and gave in all his charges of over a thousand members; he and his people are in earnst for union with the Northern church, do not desire to be longer known as Africans, and will use their influence to bring their brother Zioners to the same mind.

TO THE COLORED VOTERS OF LOUISIANA.

Colored men of Louisiana.—The grandest hour of your life is at hand! All that is dear to you in this world is at stake. If you fail to do your duty NOW, the tears and sweat of the next twenty-five years can not wash out the error. On the SEVENTEENTH and EIGHTEENTH DAYS of APRIL will be held the state, parish, and city elections. At that election you will be called upon to ratify the NEW CONSTITUTION. That constitution is your political BIBLE. By its provisions all your rights as MEN and CITIZENS are secured to you. It makes you the POLITICAL EQUAL of any and every WHITE MAN IN LOUISIANA. It declares that you and your children shall never be SLAVES again. It gives you the right of FREE SPEECH and FREE MEETINGS. It opens to you all places of public amusement, and gives you equal rights on all steamboats and railroad cars. By that constitution you may be elected to any office in the state; you may be armed and equipped as a part of the state militia, and your children may attend any public school in the state.

But you must vote for this constitution or you can not enjoy these rights. Remember that your old masters, the Democrats, do not offer you any kind of a constitution. They are opposed to your voting, and will do all they can to defeat the constitution which offers you so many blessings. Do not vote the ticket which they vote, and you will vote right. When they say NO, you say YES, and the constitution will be ratified, the state will be saved, and you will have all your rights.

The adoption of this constitution will bring prosperity to Louisiana. Our levees will be rebuilt; Northern men will come with money and settle among us; and the rich men of the North will invest their funds in the lands and trade of our state. You will then obtain higher wages for your labor, and in a short time you will be rich enough to buy a little farm. And in the possession of your property you will be protected by well organized courts and by a powerful militia force composed of Union men.

To secure the adoption of such a constitution it is your duty to make any sacrifice. You may live far from the polls, but if necessary walk a HUNDRED MILES to vote for so many rights. Your employer may threaten to discharge you if you leave off work to go to vote, but pay no attention to his threats, go and VOTE.

It will be better for you to have a constitution which will bring to you so many rights and blessings than to save a few dollars now. Your present loss will be your future gain. Do not be alarmed by threats of violence. Go quietly to the polls and vote, and no one will dare to hurt you. Do not fail to take your registration papers with you on the day of election, and if any of you have not registered, go at once and get your papers.

Colored men of Louisiana, you are in the majority in this state. You are EIGHTY THOUSAND strong. If you all vote one way the constitution will be adopted, but your greatest danger is you may divide among yourselves, and if you do, ALL is LOST. In your Union there is STRENGTH. All vote one way.

Let us warn yon of another danger. There are three tickets in the field—one Democratic, one Republican, and another that is said to be Republican. If you divide and vote on the two Republican tickets, the Democrats will run in between and carry the state. Suppose there are one hundred and twenty-five thousand votes polled. Now, suppose you divide, and forty thousand of you vote for Warmoth and forty thousand vote for Taliaferro and forty-five thousand Democrats vote for Baker. Now, these forty-five thousand Democrats united will do more than the eighty thousand Republicans divided can do. But how can you defeat the Democrats? Why, in a very simple way—by all voting for H. C. WARMOTH, O. J. DUNN, and the regular nominees of your party.

They are the regular candidates. They are your true friends. Congress wants them elected, and they are the only Republicans who can possibly be elected. Then, Republicans of Louisiana, arise in your might, adopt the Constitution, and elect the Radical Republican ticket. Your enemies will be defeated, and you will stand forth in all the pride and glory of true American citizens.—New Orleans Republican.

Hon. Hugh J. Campbell.

Hon. Hugh J. Campbell is the regular nominee for state senator of the second district. Let the readers of the Advocate and all of our friends south of Canal street rally around this true Republican. He is eminently fitted for the position, and he will prove a true friend to the colored people in the state senate.

Hon. E. C. Baxter.—This true Republican is the regular nominee for parish recorder in the parish of St. Tammany. We have known him long and known him well. He is a gentleman of sound judgment, and will discharge his duties with impartiality. The people of St. Tammany should be proud to have such a man in a position of trust, and our friends should vote for him to a man.

John Page

Is the regular nominee of the Republican party for the state legislature from the parish of Jefferson, He is a true man, and should receive the vote of every Republican.

Judge Fiske.

We understand that at the nominating convention held at Carrollton on the sixth of February last, Judge Josiah Fiske was regularly nominated as a candidate for judge of the second judicial district, embracing the parishes of Jefferson, St. Bernard, and Plaquemines.

We think that the Radicals could not have made a better choice. He was among the first in New Orleans to advocate the cause of the colored race, and has been a leader in the Radical party from its organization. Judge Fiske has been a practicing lawyer in Texas and Louisiana for more than twenty years. The last five years he has been practicing in New Orleans, where he has stood among the first at the bar. If he should be elected we have no doubt but that he will discharge the duties of that office faithfully and impartially, and that he will administer justice to all regardless of race or color in accordance with the law and testimony.

George A. Fosdick.

In last week's issue the name of George A. Fosdick is associated with that of Monroe and other notorious rebels. He objects to be classed with such men, but the classification was not with Monroe, the patron of massacres, but with Monroe, the conservative. For the sake of decent men we are glad to make this correction. In '64 and '65 Mr. Fosdick was a recognized Republican, but when Andy backslid he and others slid with him, and to-day they are all at the foot of the hill of popular favor. In the convention of '64, Mr. Fosdick was one of its most sensible members and he led the van of the Republicans, and is the author of the constitutional article extending suffrage to the blacks, and for which they owe him gratitude. Mr. Fosdick has been badly treated by the Democrats and we hope he will now return to the party that will restore Louisiana.

General Conference.

The religious and political interests which cluster around this mission do so absorb our time and tax to the uttermost our powers, that we have written but little on the necessary and probable action of the coming General Conference of our church, which meets in Chicago in May proximo. But we have read with care every line on the subject contained in our greater church weeklies of the North, and have noted our reflections en passant.

We can not for a moment so suppose that the General Conference will deny admission to the Southern delegates, and our supposition is based upon the sacredness of vested rights, the courtesy due those who for the time voluntarily waived their vested rights, and the importance of the experience of such men to the future legislation of the church. The right of representation is sacredly guaranteed to the Southern delegates by the constitution of the church, in which (to render it the more secure and inviolable), it is contained in the second article of "limitations and restrictions," limiting and restricting the powers of the general conference, and in part is as follows: "That no conference shall be denied the privilege of one delegate." The material point in the argument is, What constitutes a "conference" as contemplated by the above-recited law. According to the Book of Discipline an annual conference is composed of "All the traveling preachers, both those who are in full connection, and those who are on trial." (Page 48.) But only those who are in full connection are eligible to representation, for in declaring who shall compose the general conference it is stated: "yet so that such representatives shall have traveled at least four full calendar years from the time they are received on trial by an annual conference, and are in full connection at the time of holding the conference." (Page 45.) Thus we have a clear statement who shall compose an annual conference and the general conference. And the question may be further relieved of its embarrassment by considering what are the constitutional functions of an annual conference, and whether such functions are properly exercised by what are known as the Mission Conferences in the South. And this double question may be answered under one reply. The Southern conferences are composed of all the traveling preachers; the time of holding their sessions is fixed by the bishops; the place of the session is appointed by the conferences; the bishops preside at these conferences, and of the sixteen interrogatory replies to question five, all are put to these Southern annual conferences except numbers seven and fourteen, and these are not, because of the recency of said conferences. And it is equally true that our Southern preachers are subject to the three years rule; they are supported in part or in whole by the people; they obey the discipline as to reports and collections, and in a word the organization of the church in the South is as complete as in the North. And we submit the question whether the last general conference had the constitutional right to deprive the Southern conferences of representation without first having secured the repeal of the "second restrictive rule," which can be done only "upon the concurrent recommendation of three-fourths of all the members of the several annual conferences who shall be present and vote on such recommendation, and this change must have the approval of a two-thirds vote of the general conference."

It is certainly no mean commendation of the Southern delegates that they obeyed the bishops and entered "mission conferences," which were generally considered as stripped of their right of representation in the general conference, and thus in a sense these men waived for the present their "vested right." To them the good of the church and the glory of God were more than ecclesiastical rights and honors, and heroically they threw themselves into the thickest of the fight, at the front where the strife was deadliest, in an enemy's land, where persecutions, and perils, and hardships, were their daily experience. These men, who have "fought with the beasts at Ephesus," should be gladly received, as were the maimed confessors into the famous Council of Nicæ. A distinction has been made between "delegates" and "representatives," but they are terms used interchangeably in the constitution, and if one has any pre-eminence over the other it is the latter, for it occurs first in the law declaring who shall compose the general conference.

Much has been, editorially and otherwise, written on the legislation needed for the South; but how can the great council of the church move wisely and successfully in its legislative capacity, unaided by the personal experience and practical knowledge of those of her ministers for whose future guidance and that of their brethren such legislation is designed to affect. As in the first Christian council ever held, so in this, let our Peters, our Pauls, our Barnabases be admitted "to speak what they know and testify that which they have seen."

Young Men's Association.

A large and interested audience was in attendance on last Monday evening in our Chapel to witness the exercises of the association. President Bussey was in the chair. Brother Jayled in prayer. Mr. John Howell read a very fine essay on "Appearances," and which we regret we are unable to publish. Its sentiments were refined, its language chaste, and its author applauded. Messrs. Hitch, Houghton, James, and Brown ably discussed the question: "That we have a legal and a moral right to prohibit the sale of ardent spirits in Louisiana." Mr. Hitch is a close reasoner, and in his quiet way made a good argument on the affirmative. Mr. Houghton took the opposite side, and entertained and instructed the audience for half an hour. He declared that all his dead relations were proof of the salutary effects of whisky in cases of consumption, and he himself was a monument to New England rum as a medicine. But Mr. James knocked down the monument, and made an admirable argument for the affirmative. He was replied to by General Brown who thought he had a right to invest his capital in the manufacture of "ardent spirits." This no one questions provided said "spirits" are not used as a beverage. Evidently the question was mixed, for while no one questions the usefulness of alcohol as a medicine, and in mechanic arts, yet nearly all present favored a law prohibiting the sale of ardent spirits as a beverage.

We were glad to hear this question discussed, as it may be the beginning of a temperance movement in our city. By the civil power which we possess we should protect ourselves against the evils of intemperance. The people have this right and power, and they themselves are to blame if they do not exercise it. When we say civil government should do thus and so, we mean the people should act, for they are the government, and their legislators will legislate for God or the Devil just as the people say.

A Word to the Churches.

Your pastors have asked our counsel as to their duty and yours in the present political struggle; and our reply is both simple and direct: Vote for the ratification of the constitution and for H. C. Warmoth for governor of Louisiana. The constitution grants you many rights, and by its provisions you are entitled to all the rights of American citizens, and Judge Warmoth is the man to inaugurate the new government and administer the new constitution. The church has a profound interest in this election, and every preacher and member should use his utmost power to make it a Republican success. Nothing should keep our people from voting at this important election. If you can't walk to the polls then get some one to carry you. The peace of the conntry and the prosperity of the state depend upon the ratification of the new constitution, and therefore every Christian should be active in securing its adoption.

Our Legislature.

Republicans, look well to your candidates for the state legislature, for the admission of the state into congress does not depend wholly upon the ratification of the constitution, but upon the adoption of the fourteenth article or constitutional amendment, which is the keystone of the reconstruction arch; and it would be impossible for congress to admit the state in the face of the refusal to adopt the amendment.

Here, then, is danger, and this danger is likely to happen if the Republicans run two tickets for the state legislature, for the Democrats will run in between, and having a majority, will vote against the XIV article, and the state will not then be admitted. If you divide on any other question of the ticket, don't divide on the candidates for the legislature. Vote in a solid body for the men named in the Advocate and Republican, and all will be safe.

Watch the Registry.

We caution our friends to watch the registration. A noted rebel was heard to say that he had been assured by the registrar that he could register now. This man was excluded by General Sheridan, and would still be by any honest registrar. He well remarked afterward, "If I can register any bloody rebel in New Orleans can do so likewise."

Make an example of the first man who perjures himself, and also of the registrar who allows him to do so. Keep your eyes on these men, and let them know they are watched. We have a United States commissioner here who is just the man to attend to their cases.

Upon the recommendation of his excellency Governor Baker, of Louisiana, A. S. Morefield and H. Zeigler have been appointed by General Buchanan trustees of the city of Shreveport, Louisiana, in place of Jonas Robeson and E. B. Bennett, who failed to qualify.

The Republican Pioneer, published by Captain Mortimer F. Smith, is doing excellent campaign service in St. John the Baptist parish.

Colonel Boyd,

The Republican candidate for judge of the fourth district court, is a gentleman whose nomination does honor to the party, and whose election will reflect credit upon this city and state. With a deservedly high and well-established reputation as a lawyer, he is also a gentleman of thorough education and liberal attainments. We copy from the Republican the following sketch of his public life:

Colonel Boyd removed to Illinois a short time after, where he resided at the beginning of the war. He received a commission as colonel in one of the regiments of the Prairie state, and saw some very hard service in his country's cause. At Vicksburg he was shot through the lungs and so severely wounded that for many tedious weeks his life was despaired of by his surgeon.

It would take up more room than we have to spare to follow Colonel Boyd through a moiety of the notable events in which he has been engaged for the cause of the Union. Possessed, as he is, of a clear, strong, logical mind, with great power of analysis, a lawyer both by profession and peculiar adaptation, honest and upright in all his dealings with his fellow men, and of often proved loyalty to his country, he is not only a proper man to appoint to the present position, but is eminently qualified to adorn a much higher one.

Recently Colonel Boyd has been attorney for civil affairs in the state of Louisiana. The readers of the Republican are familiar with some of his legal views, as we have published several articles from his pen on the proper construction of the military bill, and recently one on the legality of the "rebel state" laws. He takes the affirmative of that question in matters not in conflict with the laws of the United States.

CONSTITUTION

—OF THE—

STATE OF LOUISIANA.

Adopted in Convention at New Orleans, Saturday, March 7, 1868.

PREAMBLE.

We, the people of Louisiana, in order to establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this constitution.

CONSTITUTION.

TITLE I.—BILL OF RIGHTS.

Article 1. All men are created free and equal, and have certain inalienable rights; among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. To secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

Art. 2. All persons, without regard to race, color, or previous condition, born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and residents of this state for one year, are citizens of this state. The citizens of this state owe allegiance to the United States; and this allegiance is paramount to that which they owe to the state. They shall enjoy the same civil, political, and public rights and privileges, and be subject to the same pains and penalties.

Art. 3. There shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in this state, otherwise than for the punishment of crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

Art. 4. The press shall be free; every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of this liberty.

Art. 5. The right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition the government, or any department thereof, shall never be abridged.

Art. 6. Prosecutions shall be by indictment or information. The accused shall be entitled to a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the parish in which the offense was committed, unless the venue be changed. He shall not be compelled to give evidence against himself; he shall have the right of being heard by himself or counsel; he shall have the right of meeting the witnesses face to face, and shall have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor. He shall not be tried twice for the same offense.

Art. 7. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient securities, unless for capital offenses, where the proof is evident, or the presumption great, or unless after conviction, for any crime or offense punishable with death or imprisonment at hard labor. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended.

Art. 8. Excessive bail shall not be required; excessive fines shall not be imposed; nor cruel or unusual punishments inflicted.

Art. 9. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated; and no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, or the person or things to be seized.

Art. 10. All courts shall be open; and every person for injury done him in his land, goods, person, or reputation shall have adequate remedy by due process of law, and justice administered without denial or unreasonable delay.

Art. 11. No law shall be passed fixing the price of manual labor.

Art. 12. Every person has the natural right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience. No religious test shall be required as a qualification for office.

Art. 13. All persons shall enjoy equal rights and privileges upon any conveyance of a public character; and all places of business, or of public resort, or for which a license is required by either state, parish, or municipal authority, shall be deemed places of a public character, and shall be opened to the accommodation and patronage of all persons, without distinction or discrimination on account of race or color.

Art. 14. The rights enumerated in this title shall not be construed to limit or abridge other rights of the people not herein expressed.

TITLE II.—LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

Art. 15. The legislative power of the state shall be vested in two distinct branches; the one to be styled the house of representatives, the other the senate, and both the general assembly of the state of Louisiana.

Art. 16. The members of the house of representatives shall continue in office for two years from the day of the closing of the general elections.

Art. 17. Representatives shall be chosen on the first Monday in November every two years, and the election shall be completed in one day. The general assembly shall meet annually on the first Monday in January, unless a different day be appointed by law, and their sessions shall be held at the seat of government.

Art. 18. Every elector under this constitution shall be eligible to a seat in the house of representatives; and every elector who has reached the age of twenty-five years, shall be eligible to the senate; Provided, that no person shall be a representative or senator unless at the time of his election he be a qualified elector of the representative or senatorial district from which he is elected.

Art. 19. Elections for members of the general assembly shall be held at the several election precincts established by law.

Art. 20. Representation in the house of representatives shall be equal and uniform; and after the first general assembly elected under this constitution shall be ascertained and regulated by the total population, each parish in the state being entitled to at least one representative. A census of the state by state authority shall be taken in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-five, and every ten years thereafter. In case of informality, omission, or error in the census returns from any parish or election district, the general assembly may order a new census taken in such parish or election district; but until the state census of eighteen hundred and seventy five, the apportionment of the state shall be made on the basis of the census of the United States for the year eighteen hundred and seventy.

Art. 21. The general assembly, at the first session after the making of each enumeration, shall apportion the representation amongst the several parishes and representative districts, on the basis of the total population, as aforesaid. A representative number shall be fixed, and each parish and representative district shall have as many representatives as the number of its total population will entitle it to have; and an additional representative for any fraction exceeding one-half of the representative number. The number of representatives shall never exceed one hundred and twenty, nor be less than ninety.

Art. 22. Until an apportionment shall be made in accordance with the provisions of article 20, the representation in the senate and house of representatives shall be as follows:

And the state shall be divided into the following senatorial districts, to wit:

The first, second, and third representative districts of New Orleans shall form one senatorial district, and elect three senators.

The fourth, fifth, and sixth representative districts of New Orleans shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The seventh, eighth, and ninth representative districts of New Orleans and the parish of St. Bernard shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The tenth representative district of New Orleans shall form one district, and elect one senator.

Orleans right bank and the parish of Plaquemines shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Jefferson, St. Charles, and St. John Baptist shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Ascension and St. James shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Assumption, Lafourche, and Terrebonne shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Vermillion and St. Mary shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Calcasieu, Lafayette, and St. Landry shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Livingston, St. Helena, Washington, and St. Tammany shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Pointe Coupee, East Feliciana, and West Feliciana shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parish of East Baton Rouge shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of West Baton Rouge, Iberville, and St. Martin shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Concordia and Avoyelles shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Tensas and Franklin shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Carroll, Madison, and Morehouse shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Ouachita and Caldwell shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Jackson and Union shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Bossier, Bienville, and Claiborne shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parish of Caddo shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of De Soto, Natchitoches, and Sabine shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parish of Rapides shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Catahoula and Winn shall form one district, and elect one senator.

Thirty-six senators in all.

Art. 23. The house of representatives shall choose its speaker and other officers.

Art. 24. Electors in all cases except treason, felony, or breach of the peace, shall be privileged from arrest during their attendance on, going to, and returning from elections.

Art. 25. At its first session under this constitution, the general assembly shall provide by law that the names and residence of all qualified electors shall be registered, in order to entitle them to vote; but the registry shall be free of cost to the elector.

Art. 26. No person shall be entitled to vote at any election held in this state, except in the parish of his residence, and at the election precinct in which he is registered; Provided, That no voter in removing from one parish to another shall lose the right to vote in the former until he has acquired it in the latter.

Art. 27. The members of the senate shall be elected for the term of four years; and when assembled, the senate shall have power to choose its own officers, except as hereinafter provided.

Art. 28. The general assembly shall divide the state into senatorial districts whenever it apportions representation in the house of representatives.

Art. 29. No parish shall be divided in the formation of a senatorial district, the parish of Orleans excepted; and whenever a new parish shall be created it shall be attached to the senatorial district from which most of its territory is taken, or to another contiguous district, at the discretion of the general assembly, but shall not be attached to more than one district. The number of senators shall be thirty-six, and they shall be apportioned among the senatorial districts according to the total population of said districts.

Art. 30. In all apportionments of the senate the total population of the state shall be divided by the number thirty-six, and the result produced by this division shall be the senatorial ratio entitling a senatorial district to a senator.

Single or contiguous parishes shall be formed into districts having a population the nearest possible to the number entitling a district to a senator; and if the apportionment to make a parish or district fall short of, or exceed the ratio, then a district may be formed having not more than two senators; but not otherwise. No new apportionment shall have the effect of abridging the term of service of any senator already elected at the time of making the apportionment. After an enumeration has been made, as directed in the twentieth article, the general assembly shall not pass any law, till an apportionment of representation in both houses of the general assembly shall be made.

Art. 31. At the first session of the general assembly after this constitution goes into effect, the senators shall be divided equally by lot into two classes; the seats of the senators of the first class to be vacated at the expiration of the term of the first house of representatives; those of the second class at the expiration of the term of the second house of representatives; so that one-half shall be chosen every two years successively. When a district shall have elected two senators, their respective terms of office shall be determined by lot between themselves.

Art. 32. The first election for senators shall be held at the same time with the election for representatives; and thereafter there shall be elections of senators at the same time with each general election of representatives, to fill the places of those senators whose term of office may have expired.

Art. 33. Not less than a majority of the members of each house of the general assembly shall form a quorum to transact business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and shall have full power to compel the attendance of absent members.

Art. 34. Each house of the general assembly shall judge of the qualifications, election, and returns of its members, but a contested election shall be determined in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

Art. 35. Each house of the general assembly may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish a member for disorderly conduct, and with a concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member, but not a second time for the same offense.

Art. 36. Each house of the general assembly shall keep and publish weekly a journal of its proceedings; and the yeas and nays of the members on any question, at the desire of any two of them, shall be entered on the journal.

Art. 37. Each house may punish by imprisonment any person not a member for disrespect and disorderly behavior in its presence, or for obstructing any of its proceedings; such imprisonment shall not exceed ten days for any one offense.

Art. 38. Neither house shall adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which it may be sitting, during the sessions of the general assembly, without the consent of the other.

Art. 39. The members of the general assembly shall receive from the public treasury a compensation for their services, which shall be eight dollars per day during their attendance, going to, and returning from the sessions of their respective houses, This compensation may be increased or diminished by law, but no alteration shall take effect during the period of service of the members of the house of representatives by which such alteration shall have been made. No session shall extend beyond the period of sixty days, to date from its commencement; and any legislative action had after the expiration of said period of sixty days shall be null and void; but the first general assembly that shall convene after the adoption of this constitution may continue in session for one hundred and twenty days.

Art. 40. The members of the general assembly, in all cases except treason, felony, or breach of the peace, shall be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the sessions of their respective houses, and going to or returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either house shall not be questioned in any other place.

Art. 41. No senator or representative during the term for which he was elected, nor for one year thereafter, shall be appointed to any civil office of profit under this state which shall have been created, or the emoluments of which may have been increased during the time such senator or representative was in office.

ART. 42. No bill shall have the force of a law until on three several days it be read in each house of the general assembly, and free discussion allowed thereon, unless four-fifths of the house where the bill is pending may deem it expedient to dispense with this rule.

ART. 43. All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the house of representatives, but the senate may propose amendments as in other bills; Provided, it shall not introduce any matter under the color of an amendment which does not relate to raising revenue.

ART. 44. The general assembly shall regulate by whom and in what manner writs of election shall be issued to fill the vacancies which may occur in either branch thereof.

ART. 45. On the confirmation or rejection of the officers to be appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, the vote shall be taken by yeas and nays; and the names of the senators voting for and against the appointments respectively shall be entered on the journals to be kept for the purpose, and made public on or before the end of each session.

ART. 46. Returns of all elections for members of the general assembly shall be made to the secretary of state.

ART. 47. In the year in which a regular election for a senator of the United States is to take place the members of the general assembly shall meet in the hall of the house of representatives on the second Monday following the meeting of the general assembly, and proceed to said election.

TITLE III.—EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

ART. 48. The supreme executive power of the state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Louisiana. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and together with the lieutenant governor, chosen for the same term, be elected as follows: The qualified electors for representatives shall vote for governor and lieutenant governor at the time and place of voting for representatives; the returns of every election shall be sealed up and transmitted by the proper returning officer to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives on the second day of the session of the general assembly then to be holden. The members of the general assembly shall meet in the house of representatives to examine and count the votes. The person having the greatest number of votes for governor shall be declared duly elected: but in case of a tie vote between two or more candidates, one of them shall immediately be chosen governor by joint vote of the members of the general assembly. The person having the greatest number of votes polled for lieutenant governor shall be lieutenant governor; but in case of a tie vote between two or more candidates, one of them shall be immediately chosen lieutenant governor by joint vote of the members of the general assembly.

ART. 49. No person shall be eligible to the office of governor or lieutenant governor who is not a citizen of the United States, and a resident of this state two years next preceding his election.

ART. 50. The governor shall be ineligible for the succeeding four years after the expiration of the time for which he shall have been elected.

ART. 51. The governor shall enter on the discharge of his duties on the second Monday in January next ensuing his election, and shall continue in office until the Monday next succeeding the day that his successor shall be declared duly elected, and shall have taken the oath or affirmation required by the constitution.

ART. 52. No member of congress or any person holding office under the United States government shall be eligible to the office of governor or lieutenant governor.

ART. 53. In case of impeachment of the governor, his removal from office, death, refusal or inability to qualify, or to discharge the powers and duties of his office, resignation or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term, or until the governor, absent or impeached, shall return or be acquitted, or the disability be removed. The general assembly may provide by law for the case of removal, impeachment, death, resignation, disability, or refusal to qualify, of both the governor and the lieutenant governor, declaring what officer shall act as governor; and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability be removed, or for the remainder of the term.

ART. 54. The lieutenant governor or officer discharging the duties of governor, shall, during his administration, receive the same compensation to which the governor would have been entitled had he continued in office.

ART. 55. The lieutenant governor shall by virtue of his office be president of the senate, but shall only vote when the senate is equally divided. Whenever he shall administer the government, or shall be unable to attend as president of the senate, the senators shall elect one of their own members as president of the senate for the time being.

ART. 56. The governor shall receive a salary of eight thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly on his own warrant.

ART. 57. The lieutenant governor shall receive a salary of three thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly upon his own warrant.

ART. 58. The governor shall have power to grant reprieves for all offenses against the state, and, except in cases of impeachment, shall, with the consent of the senate, have power to grant pardons, remit fines and forfeitures after conviction. In cases of treason he may grant reprieves until the end of the next session of the general assembly, in which the power of pardoning shall be vested. In cases when the punishment is not imprisonment at hard labor, the party upon being reprieved by the governor shall be released if in actual custody until final action by the senate.

ART. 59. He shall be commander-in-chief of the militia of this state, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States.

ART. 60. He shall nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the senate appoint all officers whose offices are established by the constitution, and whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for; Provided, however, That the general assembly shall have a right to prescribe the mode of appointment to all other offices established by law.

ART. 61. The governor shall have power to fill vacancies that may happen during the recess of the senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of the next session thereof, unless otherwise provided for in this constitution; but no person who has been nominated for office and rejected by the senate shall be appointed to the same office during the recess of the senate.

ART. 62. He may require information in writing from the officers in the executive department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.

ART. 63. He shall, from time to time, give the general assembly information respecting the situation of the state, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he may deem expedient.

ART. 64. He may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the general assembly at the seat of government, or at a different place if that should have become dangerous from an enemy or from epidemic; and in case of disagreement between the two houses as to the time of adjournment, he may adjourn them to such time as he may think proper, not exceeding four months.

ART. 65. He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

ART. 66. Every bill which shall have passed both houses shall be presented to the governor; if he approve he shall sign it: if he do not he shall return it with his objections to the house in which it originated, which shall enter the objections at large upon its journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of all the members present in that house shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent with the objections to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of the members present in that house it shall be a law. But in such cases the vote of both houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of members voting for or against the bill shall be entered on the journal of each house respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the governor within five days after it shall have been presented to him, it shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly, by adjournment, prevent its return, in which case the said bill shall be returned on the first day of the meeting of the general assembly after the expiration of said five days, or be a law.

ART. 67. Every order, resolution, or vote, to which the concurrence of both houses may be necessary, except on a question of adjournment, shall be presented to the governor, and before it shall take effect be approved by him, or, being disapproved, shall be repassed by two-thirds of the members present.

ART. 68. There shall be a secretary of state, who shall hold his office during the term for which the governor shall have been elected. The records of the state shall be kept and preserved in the office of the secretary; he shall keep a fair register of the official acts and proceedings of the governor, and when necessary shall attest them: he shall, when required, lay the said register and all papers, minutes, and vouchers relative to his office before either house of the general assembly, and shall perform such other duties as may be enjoined on him by law.

ART. 69. There shall be a treasurer of the state, and an auditor of public accounts, who shall hold their respective offices during the term of four years. At the first election under this constitution, the treasurer shall be elected for two years.

ART. 70. The secretary of state, treasurer, and auditor of public accounts shall be elected by the qualified electors of the state, and in case of any vacancy caused by the resignation, death, or absence of the secretary, treasurer, or auditor, the governor shall order an election to fill said vacancies; Provided, The unexpired term to be filled be more than twelve months; when otherwise, the governor shall appoint a person to perform the duties of the office thus vacant until the ensuing general election.

ART. 71. The treasurer and the auditor shall receive a salary of five thousand dollars per annum each. The secretary of state shall receive a salary of three thousand dollars per annum.

ART. 72. All commissions shall be in the name and by the authority of the state of Louisiana; and shall be sealed with the state seal, signed by the governor, and countersigned by the secretary of state.

TITLE IV.—JUDICIARY DEPARTMENT.

ART. 73. The judicial power shall be vested in a supreme court, in district courts, in parish courts, and in justices of the peace.

ART. 74. The supreme court, except in cases hereinafter provided, shall have appellate jurisdiction only; which jurisdiction shall extend to all cases when the matter in dispute shall exceed five hundred dollars; and to all cases in which the constitutionality or legality of any tax, toll, or impost of any kind or nature whatsoever, or any fine, forfeiture, or penalty imposed by a municipal corporation shall be in contestation, whatever may be the amount thereof; and in such cases the appeal shall be direct from the court in which the case originated to the supreme court; and in criminal cases, on questions of law only, whenever the punishment of death, or imprisonment at hard labor, or a fine exceeding three hundred dollars is actually imposed.

ART. 75. The supreme court shall be composed of one chief justice and four associate justices, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum. The chief justice shall receive a salary of seven thousand five hundred dollars, and each of the associate justices a salary of seven thousand dollars annually, payable quarterly on their own warrants. The chief justice and he associate justices shall be appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, for the term of eight years. They shall be citizens of the United States, and shall have practiced law for five years, the last three thereof next preceding their appointment in the state. The court shall appoint its own clerks, and may remove them at pleasure.

ART. 76. The supreme court shall hold its sessions in the city of New Orleans from the first Monday in the month of November to the end of the month of May. The general assembly shall have power to fix the sessions elsewhere during the rest of the year; until otherwise provided, the sessions shall be held as heretofore.

ART. 77. The supreme court, and each of the judges thereof, shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus at the instance of persons in actual custody in cases when they may have appellate jurisdiction.

ART. 78. No judgment shall be rendered by the supreme court without a concurrence of a majority composing the court. Whenever the majority can not concur in consequence of the recusation of any member of the court, the judges not recused shall have power to call upon any judge or judges of the district courts, whose duty it shall be when so called upon to preside in the place of the judge or judges recused, and to aid in determining the case.

ART. 79. All judges, by virtue of their office, shall be conservators of the peace throughout the state. The style of all process shall be "The state of Louisiana." All prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the state of Louisiana, and conclude "against the peace and dignity of the same."

ART. 80. The judges of all courts whenever practicable shall refer to the law in virtue of which every definitive judgment is rendered; but in all cases they shall adduce the reasons on which their judgment is founded.

ART. 81. The judges of all courts shall be liable to impeachment for crimes and misdemeanors. For any reasonable cause the governor shall remove any of them, on the address of two-thirds of the members elected to each house of the general assembly. In every such case the cause or causes for which such removal may be required shall be stated at length in the address, and inserted in the journal of each house.

ART. 82. No duties or functions shall ever be attached by law to the supreme or district courts, or the several judges thereof, but such as are judicial; and the said judges are prohibited from receiving any fees of office, or other compensation than their salaries, for any official duties performed by them.

ART. 83. The general assembly shall divide the state into judicial districts, which shall remain unchanged for four years, and for each district court one judge, learned in the law, shall be elected for each district, by a plurality of the qualified electors thereof. For each district there shall be one district court, except in the parish of Orleans, in which the general assembly may establish as many district courts as the public interests may require. Until otherwise provided there shall be seven district courts for the parish of Orleans, with the following original jurisdiction: The first, exclusive criminal jurisdiction; the second, exclusive probate jurisdiction; the third, exclusive jurisdiction of appeals from justices of the peace: the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh district courts, exclusive jurisdiction in all civil cases, except probate, when the sum in contest is above one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. These seven courts shall have such further jurisdiction, not inconsistent herewith, as shall be conferred by law.

The number of districts in the state shall not be less than twelve nor more than twenty. The clerks of the district courts shall be elected by the qualified electors of their respective parishes, and shall hold their office for four years.

ART. 84. Each of said judges shall receive a salary to be fixed by law, which shall not be increased or diminished during his term of office, and shall never be less than five thousand dollars. He must be a citizen of the United States, over the age of twenty-five years, and have resided in the state and practiced law therein for the space of two years next preceding his election. The judges of the district courts shall hold their office for the term of four years.

ART. 85. The district courts shall have original jurisdiction in all civil cases when the amount in dispute exceeds five hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. In criminal cases their jurisdiction shall be unlimited. They shall have appellate jurisdiction in civil ordinary suits, when the amount in dispute exceeds one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest.

ART. 86. For each parish court, one judge shall be elected by the qualified electors of the parish. He shall hold his office for the term of two years. He shall receive a salary and fees, to be provided by law. Until otherwise provided, each parish judge shall receive a salary of one thousand two hundred dollars per annum, and such fees as are established by law for clerks of district courts. He shall be a citizen of the United States and of this state.

ART. 87. The parish courts shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the justices of the peace in all cases when the amount in controversy is more than twenty-five dollars, and less than one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. They shall have exclusive original jurisdiction in ordinary suits, in all cases when the amount in dispute exceeds one hundred dollars and does not exceed five hundred dollars, subject to an appeal to the district court in all cases when the amount in contestation exceeds one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. All successions shall be opened and settled in the parish courts; and all suits in which a succession is either plaintiff or defendant may be brought either in the parish or district court, according to the amount involved. In criminal matters the parish courts shall have jurisdiction in all cases when the penalty is not necessarily imprisonment at hard labor or death, and when the accused shall waive trial by jury. They shall also have the power of committing magistrates and such other jurisdiction as may be conferred on them by law. There shall be no trial by jury before the parish courts.

ART. 88. In all probate matters, when the amount in dispute shall exceed five hundred dollars, exclusive of interest, the appeal shall be directly from the parish to the supreme court.

ART. 89. The justices of the peace shall be elected by the electors of each parish, in the manner to be provided by the general assembly. They shall hold office for the term of two years, and their compensation shall be fixed by law. Their jurisdiction in civil cases shall not exceed one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest, subject to an appeal to the parish courts in all cases when the amount in dispute shall exceed ten dollars, exclusive of interest. They shall have such criminal jurisdiction as shall be provided for by law.

ART. 90. In any case when the judge may be recused, and when he is not personally interested in the matters in contestation, he shall select a lawyer having the qualifications required for a judge of his court to try such cases. And when the judge is personally interested in the suit, he shall call upon the parish or district judge, as the case may be, to try the case.

ART. 91. The general assembly shall have power to vest in the parish judges the right to grant such orders and to do such acts as may be deemed necessary for the furtherance of the administration of justice; and in all cases the power thus granted shall be specified and determined.

ART. 92. There shall be an attorney general for the state, who shall be elected by the qualified electors of the state at large. He shall receive a salary of five thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly on his own warrant, and shall hold his office for four years. There shall be a district attorney for each judicial district of the state, who shall be elected by the qualified electors of the judicial district. He shall receive a salary of fifteen hundred dollars, payable quarterly on his own warrant, and shall hold his office for four years.

ART. 93. There shall be a sheriff and coroner elected by the qualified electors of each parish, except the parish of Orleans. In the parish of Orleans there shall be elected by the qualified electors of the parish at large one sheriff for the criminal court, who shall be the executive officer of said court, and shall have charge of the parish prison. There shall also be elected by the qualified electors of the parish at large one sheriff, who shall be the executive officer of the civil courts, and who shall perform all other duties heretofore devolving upon the sheriff of the parish of Orleans, except those herein delegated to the sheriff of the criminal court. The qualified electors of the city of New Orleans, residing below the middle of Canal street, shall elect one coroner for that district, and the qualified electors of the city of New Orleans, residing above the middle of Canal street, together with those residing in that part of the parish known as Orleans right bank, shall elect one coroner for that district. All of said officers shall hold their office for two years; and receive such fees of office as may be prescribed by law.

ART. 94. No judicial powers, except as committing magistrates, in criminal cases, shall be conferred on any officers other than those mentioned in this title; except such as may be necessary in towns and cities; and the judicial powers of such officer shall not extend further than the cognizance of cases arising under the police regulations of towns and cities in the state. In any case where such officers shall assume jurisdiction over other matters than those which may arise under police regulations, or under their jurisdiction, as committing magistrates, they shall be liable to an action of damages in favor of the party injured, or his heirs; and a verdict in favor of the party injured shall, ipso facto, operate a vacation of the office of said officer.

TITLE V.—IMPEACHMENT.

ART. 95. The power of impeachment shall be vested in the house of representatives.

ART. 96. Impeachments of the governor, lieutenant governor, attorney general, secretary of state, auditor of public accounts, state treasurer, superintendent of public education, and of the judges of the inferior courts, justices of the peace excepted, shall be tried by the senate; the chief justice of the supreme court, or the senior associate judge thereof, shall preside during the trial of such impeachments. Impeachments of the judges of the supreme court shall be tried by the senate. When sitting as a court of impeachment the senators shall be upon oath or affirmation, and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the senators present.

ART. 97. Judgments in cases of impeachment shall extend only to removal from office, and disqualification from holding any office of honor, trust, or profit in the state; but the convicted parties shall nevertheless be subject to indictment, trial, and punishment according to law.

TITLE VI.—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

ART. 98. Every male person of the age of twenty-one years or upward, born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and a resident of this state one year next preceding an election, and the last ten days within the parish in which he offers to vote, shall be deemed an elector, except those disfranchised by this constitution, and persons under interdiction.

ART. 99. The following persons shall be prohibited from voting and holding any office: All persons who shall have been convicted of treason, perjury, forgery, bribery, or other crime punishable in the penitentiary, and persons under interdiction.

All persons who are estopped from claiming the right of suffrage by abjuring their allegiance to the United States government, or by notoriously levying war against it, or adhering to its enemies, giving them aid or comfort, but who have not expatriated themselves, nor have been convicted of any of the crimes mentioned in the first paragraph of this article, are hereby restored to the said right, except the following: Those who held office, civil or military, for one year or more under the organization styled "The Confederate States of America;" those who registered themselves as enemies of the United States; those who acted as leaders of guerrilla bands during the late rebellion; those who in the advocacy of treason wrote or published newspaper articles or preached sermons during the late rebellion, and those who voted for and signed an ordinance of secession in any state. No person included in these exceptions shall either vote or hold office until he shall have relieved himself by voluntarily writing and signing a certificate setting forth that he acknowledges the late rebellion to have been morally and politically wrong, and that he regrets any aid and comfort he may have given it; and he shall file the certificate in the office of the secretary of state, and it shall be published in the official journal;

Provided, That no person who prior to the first of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, favored the execution of the laws of the United States popularly known as the reconstruction acts of congress, and openly and actively assisted the loyal men of the state in their efforts to restore Louisiana to her position in the Union, shall be held to be included among those herein excepted. Registrars of voters shall take the oath of any such person as prima facie evidence of the fact that he is entitled to the benefit of this proviso.

ART. 100. Members of the general assembly and all other officers, before they enter upon the duties of their offices, shall take the following oath or affirmation: "I, (A. B.,) do solemnly swear (or affirm,) that I accept the civil and political equality of all men, and agree not to attempt to deprive any person or persons on account of race, color, or previous condition, of any political or civil right, privilege, or immunity enjoyed by any other class of men. That I will support the constitution and laws of the United States and the constitution and laws of this state, and that I will faithfully and impartially discharge and perform all the duties incumbent on me as —— according to the best of my ability and understanding. So help me God."

ART. 101. Treason against the state shall consist only in levying war against it, or in adhering to its enemies—giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason except on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on his confession in open court.

ART. 102. All penalties shall be proportioned to the nature of the offense.

ART. 103. The privilege of free suffrage shall be supported by laws regulating elections, and prohibiting under adequate penalties all undue influence thereon from power, bribery, tumult, or other improper practice.

ART. 104. No money shall be drawn from the treasury but in pursuance of specific appropriations made by law. A statement and account of receipts and expenditures of all public moneys shall be made annually, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law; and the first general assembly convening under this constitution shall make a special appropriation to liquidate whatever portion of the debt of this convention may at that time remain unpaid or unprovided for.

ART. 105. All civil officers of the state at large shall be voters of and reside within the state; and all district or parish officers shall reside within their respective districts or parishes, and shall keep their offices at such place therein as may be required by law.

ART. 106. All civil officers shall be removable by an address of two-thirds of the members elect to each house of the general assembly, except those whose removal is otherwise provided for by this constitution.

ART. 107. In all elections by the people the vote shall be taken by ballot; and in all elections by the senate and house of representatives, jointly or separately, the vote shall be given viva voce.

ART. 108. None but citizens of the United States and of this state shall be appointed to any office of trust or profit in this state.

ART. 109. The laws, public records, and the judicial and legislative proceedings of the state shall be promulgated, and preserved in the English language; and no law shall require judicial process to be issued in any other than the English language.

ART. 110. No ex post facto or retroactive law, nor any law impairing the obligation of contracts, shall be passed; nor vested rights be divested, unless for purposes of public utility, and for adequate compensation made.

ART. 111. Whenever the general assembly shall contract a debt exceeding in amount the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, unless in case of war, to repel invasion, or suppress insurrection, it shall, in the law creating the debt, provide adequate ways and means for the payment of the current interest, and of the principal when the same shall become due; and the said law shall be irrepealable until principal and interest be fully paid; or unless the repealing law contain some adequate provision for the payment of the principal and interest of the debt.

ART. 112. The general assembly shall provide by law for all change of venue in civil and criminal cases.

ART. 113. The general assembly may enact general laws regulating the adoption of children, emancipation of minors, and the granting of divorces; but no special law shall be passed relating to particular or individual cases.

ART. 114. Every law shall express its object or objects in its title.

ART. 115. No law shall be revived or amended by reference to its title; but in such case the revived or amended section shall be re-enacted and published at length.

ART. 116. The general assembly shall never adopt any system or code of laws by general reference to such system or code of laws; but in all cases shall specify the several provisions of the law it may enact.

ART. 117. No person shall hold or exercise at the same time more than one office of trust or profit except that of justice of the peace or notary public.

ART. 118. Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state; all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law; the general assembly shall have power to exempt from taxation property actually used for church, school, or charitable purposes. The general assembly may levy an income tax upon all persons pursuing any occupation, trade, or calling. And all such persons shall obtain a license as provided by law. All tax on income shall be pro rata on the amount of income, or business done. And all deeds of sale made or that may be made by collectors of taxes, shall be received by courts in evidence as prima facie valid sales. The general assembly shall levy a poll tax on all male inhabitants of this state over twenty-one years old, for school and charitable purposes, which tax shall never exceed one dollar and fifty cents per annum.

ART. 119. No liability, either state, parochial, or municipal, shall exist for any debts contracted for or in the interest of the rebellion against the United States government.

ART. 120. The general assembly may determine the mode of filling vacancies in all offices for which provision is not made in this constitution.

ART. 121. The general assembly shall pass no law requiring a property qualification for office.

ART. 122. All officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their offices until their successors shall have been inducted into office; except in cases of impeachment or suspension.

ART. 123. The general assembly shall provide for the protection of the rights of married women to their dotal and paraphernal property, and for the registration of the same; but no mortgage or privilege shall hereafter affect third parties unless recorded in the parish where the property to be affected is situated. The tacit mortgages and privileges now existing in this state shall cease to have effect against third persons after the first day of January, eighteen hundred and seventy, unless duly recorded. The general assembly shall provide by law for the registration of all mortgages and privileges.

ART. 124. The general assembly, at its first session under this constitution, shall provide an annual pension for the veterans of eighteen hundred and fourteen and eighteen hundred and fifteen residing in the state.

ART. 125. The military shall be in subordination to the civil power.

ART. 126. It shall be the duty of the general assembly to make it obligatory upon each parish to support all paupers residing within its limits.

ART. 127. All agreements, the consideration of which was confederate money, notes, or bonds, are null and void; and shall not be enforced by the courts of this state.

ART. 128. Contracts for the sale of persons are null and void; and shall not be enforced by the courts of this state.

ART. 129. The state of Louisiana shall never assume nor pay any debt or obligation contracted or incurre aid of the rebellion; nor shall this state ever in any manner claim from the United States or make any allowance or compensation for slaves emancipated or liberated in any way whatever.

ART. 130. All contracts made and entered into under the pretended authority of any governments heretofore existing in this state, by which children were bound out without the knowledge or consent of their parents, are hereby declared null and void; nor shall any child be bound out to any one for any term of years, while either one of its parents live, without the consent of such parent, except in cases of children legally sent to the house of correction.

ART. 131. The seat of government shall be established at the city of New Orleans, and shall not be removed without the consent of two-thirds of the members of both houses of the general assembly.

ART. 132. All lands sold in pursuance of decrees of courts shall be divided into tracts of from ten to fifty acres.

ART. 133. No judicial powers shall be exercised by clerks of courts.

ART. 134. No soldier, sailor, or marine in the military or naval service of the United States shall hereafter acquire a residence in this state by reason of being stationed or doing duty in the same.

TITLE VII.—PUBLIC EDUCATION.

ART. 135. The general assembly shall establish at least one free public school in every parish throughout the state, and shall provide for its support by taxation or otherwise. All children of this state between the ages of six (6) and twenty-one (21) shall be admitted to the public schools or other institutions of learning sustained or established by the state, in common, without distinction of race, color, or previous condition. There shall be no separate schools or institutions of learning established exclusively for any race by the state of Louisiana.

ART. 136. No municipal corporation shall make any rules or regulations contrary to the spirit and intention of article one hundred and thirty-five (135.)

ART. 137. There shall be elected by the qualified voters of this state a superintendent of public education, who shall hold his office for four years. His duties shall be prescribed by law, and he shall have the supervision and the general control of all public schools throughout this state. He shall receive a salary of five thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly on his own warrant.

ART. 138. The general exercises in the public schools shall be conducted in the English language.

ART. 139. The proceeds of all lands heretofore granted by the United States for the use and support of public schools, and of all lands or other property which may hereafter be bequeathed for that purpose, and of all lands which may be granted or bequeathed to the state, and not granted or bequeathed expressly for any other purpose which may hereafter be disposed of by the state, and the proceeds of all estates of deceased persons to which the state may be entitled by law, shall be held by the state as a loan, and shall be and remain a perpetual fund on which the state shall pay an annual interest of six per cent, which interest, with the interest of the trust fund deposited with this state by the United States, under the act of congress approved June the twenty-third, eighteen hundred and thirty-six, and the rent of the unsold lands, shall be appropriated to the support of such schools, and this appropriation shall remain inviolable.

ART. 140. No appropriation shall be made by the general assembly for the support of any private school, or any private institution of learning whatever.

ART. 141. One half of the funds derived from the poll tax herein provided for shall be appropriated exclusively to the support of the free public schools throughout the state, and the university of New Orleans.

ART. 142. A university shall be established and maintained in the city of New Orleans. It shall be composed of a law, a medical, and a collegiate department, each with appropriate faculties. The general assembly shall provide by law for its organization and maintenance; Provided, That all departments of this institution of learning shall be opened in common to all students capable of matriculating. No rules or regulations shall be made by the trustees, faculties, or other officers of said institution of learning, nor shall any laws be made by the general assembly violating the letter or spirit of the articles under this title.

ART. 143. Institutions for the support of the insane, the education and support of the blind and the deaf and dumb, shall always be fostered by the state, and be subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by the general assembly.

TITLE VIII.—MILITIA.

ART. 144. It shall be the duty of the general assembly to organize the militia of the state; and all able-bodied male citizens between the ages of eighteen and forty five years, not disfranchised by the laws of the United States and of this state, shall be subject to military duty.

ART. 145. The governor shall appoint all commissioned officers, subject to confirmation or rejection by the senate, except the staff officers, who shall be appointed by their respective chiefs, and commissioned by the governor. All militia officers shall take and subscribe to the oath prescribed for officers of the United States army and the oath prescribed for officers in this state.

ART. 146. The governor shall have power to call the militia into active service for the preservation of law and order, or when the public safety may require it. The militia when in active service shall receive the same pay and allowances as officers and privates, as is received by officers and privates in the United States army.

TITLE IX.—MODE OF REVISING THE CONSTITUTION.

ART. 147. Any amendment or amendments to this constitution may be proposed in the senate or house of representatives, and if the same shall be agreed to by two-thirds of the members elected to each house, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be entered on their respective journals, with the yeas and nays taken thereon; and the secretary of state shall cause the same to be published three months before the next general election for representatives to the general assembly, in at least one newspaper in every parish in the state in which a newspaper shall be published. And such proposed amendment or amendments shall be submitted to the people at said election; and if amajority of the voters at said election shall approve and ratify such amendment or amendments, the same shall become a part of this constitution. If more than one amendment shall be submitted at one time, they shall be submitted in such manner and form that the people may vote for or against each amendment separately.

TITLE X.—SCHEDULE.

ART. 148. The ordinance of secession of the state of Louisiana, passed twenty-sixth of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, is hereby declared to be null and void. The constitution adopted in eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and all previous constitutions in the state of Louisiana, are declared to be superseded by this constitution.

ART. 149. All rights, actions, prosecutions, claims, contracts, and all laws in force at the time of the adoption of this constitution, and not inconsistent therewith, shall continue as if it had not been adopted; all judgments and judicial sales, marriages, and executed contracts made in good faith, and in accordance with the existing laws in this state, rendered, made, or entered into, between the twenty-sixth day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, and the date when this constitution shall be adopted are hereby declared to be valid, except the following laws:

"An act to authorize the widening of the new canal and basin," approved March fourteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven.

"An act to amend and re-enact the one hundred and twenty-first section of an act entitled, 'An act relative to crimes and offenses,'" approved December twentieth, eighteen hundred and sixty-five.

"An act for the punishment of persons for tampering with, persuading, or enticing away, harboring, feeding, or secreting laborers, servants, or apprentices," approved December twenty-first, eighteen hundred and sixty-five.

"An act to punish, in certain cases, the employers of laborers and apprentices," approved December twenty-first, eighteen hundred and sixty-five.

"An act in relation to exemption from state, parish, and city taxes for the years eighteen hundred and sixty-two, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and eighteen hundred and sixty-five, in certain cases." Certified sixteenth March, eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

"An act granting ferry privileges to C. K. Marshall, his heirs, or assigns." Approved March tenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

"An act to authorize the board of levee commissioners of the levee district in the parishes of Madison and Carroll to issue bonds," etc., etc. Approved March twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven.

Section third of "An act to organize the police of New Orleans, and to create a police board therein." Approved twelfth February, eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

ART. 150. The laws relative to the duties of officers shall remain in force, though contrary to this constitution, and the several duties be performed by the respective officers, until the organization of the government under this constitution.

ART. 151. The general assembly shall provide for the removal of causes now pending in the courts of this state to courts created by or under this constitution.

TITLE XI.—ORDINANCE.

ART. 152. Immediately upon the adjournment of this convention this constitution shall be submitted for ratification to the registered voters of the state, in conformity to the act of congress passed March second, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, entitled "An act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel states," and the acts supplementary thereto.

ART. 153. The election for the ratification of the constitution shall be held on Friday and Saturday, the seventeenth and eighteenth days of April, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, at the places now prescribed by law, and the polls shall be kept open from 7 o'clock A. M. to 7 o'clock P. M. At that election all those in favor of ratifying the constitution shall have written or printed on their ballots "For the constitution," and those opposed to ratifying the constitution shall have written or printed on their ballots "Against the constitution."

ART. 154. In order to establish a civil government, as required by act of congress, passed March twenty-third, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, an election shall be held at the same time and place at which the constitution is submitted for ratification for all state, judicial, parish, and municipal officers, for members of the general assembly, and for congressional representatives, at which election the electors who are qualified under the reconstruction acts of congress shall vote, and none others; Provided, That any elector shall be eligible to any office under any municipal corporation in this state.

ART. 155. At the election for the ratification of the constitution, and for officers of the civil government as required by congress, all registered electors may vote in any parish where they have resided for ten days next preceding said election, and at any precinct in the parish, upon presentation of their certificates of registration, affidavit, or other satisfactory evidence that they are entitled to vote as registered electors.

ART. 156. The same registrars and commissioners who shall be appointed by the commanding general of the fifth military district to superintend the election for the ratification or rejection of the constitution shall also at the same time and place, superintend the election for all officers and representatives herein ordered; provided they be authorized so to act by the commanding general. And in case the commanding general should not so authorize said registrars and commissioners, the committee of seven appointed by this convention to take charge of the whole matter of the ratification of the constitution and the election of civil officers shall appoint one registrar for each parish in the state, except the parish of Orleans, and one in each district of the parish of Orleans, counting Orleans right bank as one district, who shall, each in his parish or district, appoint a sufficient number of commissioners of election to hold the said election for the said civil officers and representatives at the same time and place as herein provided for.

ART. 157. Returns shall be made in duplicate, sworn to by the commissioners holding the election, and forwarded within three days thereafter to the registrars of the parish or district. The registrars shall immediately forward one copy of said returns to the chairman of the committee of seven, appointed by this convention, who shall, within ten days after the last return has been received, make proclamation of the result of said election.

ART. 158. All civil officers thus elected shall enter upon the discharge of their duties on the second Monday after the return of their election shall have been officially promulgated, or as soon as qualified according to law, and shall continue in office for the terms of their respective offices herein prescribed, said terms to date from the first Monday in November following the election.

ART. 159. The general assembly, elected under this constitution, shall hold its first session in the city of New Orleans on the third Monday after the official promulgation aforesaid, and proceed immediately upon its organization to vote upon the adoption of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States, proposed by congress, and passed June thirteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-six; said general assembly shall not have power to enact any laws relative to the per diem of members, or any other subject, after organization, until said constitutional amendment shall have been acted upon.

ART. 160. All registrars and commissioners appointed under this constitution shall, before entering upon their duties, take and subscribe the oath of office prescribed by congress, approved July second, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office;" the said oath of office shall be administered to each registrar by the chairman of the committee of seven and to each commissioner by the registrar appointing him.

ART. 161. All registrars, commissioners, and other officers necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this ordinance, except as otherwise provided for by the reconstruction acts of congress, shall be paid out of any funds raised by virtue of the tax ordinance adopted by the convention, December twenty-fourth, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, not otherwise appropriated.

DAVID WILSON.

Attest:
WILLIAM VIGERS
Secretary.

NEW ORLEANS, La., March 11, 1868.

I certify that the foregoing is a correct copy of the constitution as taken from the official records of the convention.

HUGH J. CAMPBELL,
Minute Clerk.

SEVERE ON THE COPPERHEADS.—The Natchitoches Spectator says:

We are surprised to see the names of a few rather prominent citizens of New Orleans affixed to a card in the papers, requesting Mr. Mullaly, of the Metropolitan Record and New York Vindicator, to deliver an address on the "State of the Country." He needed no invitation, but came South—like his prototype of the La Crosse Democrat—to gain a cheap notoriety by exhibiting himself on every possible occasion, drumming up subscribers for his penny paper. Such blustering ultra harangues can result in no good. Let these fire-eating agitators remain as silent now as they were during the war.

The St. Louis Republican of the 24th says:

Freights for all points were offering in liberal quantities, although rates continue low; an advance in the rates to New Orleans, however, took place, and now rate at 40c. per barrel for flour, 25c. per 100 lbs.; 30c. per sack for corn, and 35c. for oats, by steamer; the barge line taking at rates 5c. per barrel, 2½c. per 100 lbs., and sack less. The rate now established is barely a paying one, and it is to be hoped will be sustained.

Lutheran Benevolent Society.

A special meeting of this society was held March 15, 1868, at the society rooms, 318 Gravier street.

At 8 P. M. the director called the house to order, and after singing the 421st hymn, prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Royal.

On motion of Mr. Williams, the constitution was read.

Mr. Cambridge moved to proceed to the election of director, whereupon Edward Letraw and George Williams were nominated, but on the former declining, Rev. E. P. Royal was named in his place. On motion of Mr. Jones, Mr. Henderson Bland was appointed to preside during the election of officers. The following persons were then duly elected:

Director—Rev. E. P. Royal.

Trustees—Same as last year, except Mr. Ricks declined, and in his place J. Perkins was elected.

Stewards—Same as last year with the addition of J. Grant, R. Allen, and M. Harris.

Secretaries—F. G. Chinn and E. J. Oglivie.

Treasurer—Peter Ricks.

Preacher—Rev. William Forest.

Marshals—Messrs. Williams, Campbell, and Therigood, Junior.

Pilgrims—Same as last year.

Mourning Women—Same as last year.

Sick Committee—Same as last year.

On motion of Mr. Forest, it was moved and carried that the proceedings of this meeting be published in the New Orleans ADVOCATE and New Orleans Republican.

On motion of Mr. Williams, the chairman appointed the following committee on printing:

L. Cambridge, E. J. Oglivie, J. Rines, and H. Harrison.

The meeting then adjourned, and was dismissed with the benediction.

E. P. ROYAL, Director.
F. G. CHINN, Secretary.

THE BEST

HISTORICAL NOVEL

WHICH HAS

YET APPEARED,

FROM THE PEN OF

Louisa Mulbach,

ENTITLED

ANDREAS HOFER,

Is Now Ready.

Andreas Hofer, that wonderful leader of the Tyrolese, with his childlike piety, his fervent patriotism, and his simple-hearted genius, is portrayed with the whole skill of the romancist. Interwoven with the historical part of the work is a love-story of exquisite delicacy and pathos, in which Eliza Wallner, the beautiful and heroic girl, who fought bravely in the ranks of her countrymen, and whose patriotic deeds are recorded by all cotemporary historians, is the heroine.

One volume, 8vo. Paper covers, illustrated, $1 50; cloth, $2.

NEW YORK
WEEKLY TRIBUNE.

PRICE REDUCED.

FIFTY COPIES FOR FIFTY DOLLARS.

THE LARGEST AND CHEAPEST.

THE GREATEST FARMER'S PAPER!

THE PAPER OF THE PEOPLE.

Now is the time to Subscribe for the

GREAT FAMILY NEWSPAPER.

It is Cheap, because its Circulation is Larger than that of any other Newspaper.

NOW IS THE TIME TO FORM CLUBS.

The New York Weekly Tribune

is printed on a large double-medium sheet, making eight pages of six broad columns each. It contains all the important Editorials published in THE DAILY TRIBUNE, except those of merely local interest; also Literary and Scientific Intelligence; Reviews of the most interesting and important New Books; the Letters from our large corps of Correspondents; the latest news received by Telegraph from Washington and all other parts of the country; a summary of all important intelligence in this city and elsewhere; a Synopsis of the proceedings of Congress and the State Legislature when in session; the Foreign News received by every steamer; Exclusive Reports of the Proceedings of the Farmers' Club of the American Institute; Talks about Fruit, and other Horticultural and Agricultural information essential to country residents; Stock, Financial, Cattle, Dry Goods, and General Market Reports; making it, both for variety and completeness, altogether the most valuable, interesting, and instructive WEEKLY NEWSPAPER published in the world.

The full Reports of the American Institute Farmers' Club, and the various agricultural reports, in each number, are richly worth a year's subscription.

Ever since its commencement, THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE has been authority upon the farm. We make features of the Farmers' Club, and permit no question of interest to the agriculturist to pass without comment and advice. When it is remembered that this advice is given by one of the most conscientious farmers in the country, the reader may estimate its value. It has been well observed that a careful reading and study of the Farmers' Club Reports in THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE alone will save a farmer hundreds of dollars in his crop. In addition to these reports, we have arranged to print the best things written on the subject of agricultural by American and foreign writers. We intend to increase these features in the coming year very largely. As it is, no prudent farmer can do without it. As a lesson to his workmen alone, every farmer should place THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE upon his table every Saturday evening.

THE TRIBUNE is the best and cheapest paper in the country. This is not said in a spirit of boastfulness. We do not claim any essential superiority over our neighbors, except the superiority of place and opportunity. It has fallen to New York to create the greatest newspapers of the country. Here concentrate the commerce, the manufactures, the mineral resources, the agricultural wealth of the Republic. Here all the news gathers, and the patronage is so large that the journalists can afford to print it. A newspaper can be made in New York for half the money, and yet with twice the value of newspapers elsewhere. This is the strength of THE TRIBUNE. We print the largest, and cheapest, and best-edited weekly newspaper in the country. There is little special merit in this. We have all the advantages around us. We have great Daily and Semi-Weekly editions. Their machinery and resources are only a part of the Weekly. This paper has long had the largest circulation in America, and we have tried to justify the confidence. The result is that we have so systematized and expanded our resources that every copy of THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE contains as much matter as a duodecimo volume. Think of it! For two dollars the farmer in the course of one year buys as much matter as though he filled a shelf of his library with fifty volumes, and those volumes containing the greatest works of the language. The force of cheapness can no further go.

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE is the paper of the people. Here the eager student may know the last lessons of science. Here the scholar may read reviews of the best books. Here may be found correspondence from all parts of the world, the observations of sincere and gifted men who serve the TRIBUNE in almost every country. All the elaborate and intricate machinery of our establishment—perhaps the most complete in America—is devoted to the purpose of making the best and cheapest weekly newspaper in the world. We think we have reached that point in giving for two dollars fifty-two duodecimo volumes a year.

THE TRIBUNE is strong by reason of its enormous circulation and great cheapness. It has long been considered that THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE has the largest circulation in the country. For years we have printed twice as many papers, perhaps, as all of the other weekly editions of the city dailies combined. This is why we are enabled to do our work so thoroughly and cheaply. The larger our circulation, the better paper we can make.

What are the practical suggestions? Many. Let every subscriber renew his subscription, and urge his neighbor to do the same. If a man can not afford to pay two dollars, let him raise a club by inducing his neighbors to subscribe, and we shall send him a copy gratis for his trouble. No Newspaper so large and complete as THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE was ever before offered at so low a price. Even when our currency was at par with gold, no such paper but the TRIBUNE was offered at that price, and the TRIBUNE then cost us far less than it now does. We have solved the problem of making the best and cheapest newspaper in America—perhaps in the world. Let us see if we can not give it a million weekly circulation.

MEMORIES.

BY LU ELLINGS SPALDING.

Old memories like fall leaves are rustling
Familiarly now to my tread,
The fate winds that sweep through life's branches
Came hurling them down to me dead,
With the low dews of anguish upon them,
Came hurling them down to me dead.

Life's twilight has gathered about me,
Old memories are singing to-night;
And woven with life's broken fancies—
Old pictures, that fade with the light,
Are traced out by shadowy fingers—
Old pictures, that fade with the light.

Ah, link after link has been broken,
Till the chain of our circle is o'er,
Till it's lost in the dust and the rubbish
That feeds this uncertain shore.
Half-buried, with the red rust upon them,
That feeds this uncertain shore.

My glasses are dimmed by soft fingers,
Their timid prints never will fade,
For the fingers that traced them are pulseless,
Low down 'neath the blue grass are laid.
And the young moon shines fondly upon them,
Low down 'neath the blue grass are laid.

White faces are gazing upon me,
From their beds 'neath the blue, tumbled mold.
Their lives have run down in their bosoms,
And their touch, and their glances are cold.
Oh, they never can warm me with gladness,
For their touch, and their glances are cold.

Farewell, for a little while, sleepers,
There's a spot by thy side for me.
Let the birds and the wild bees sing o'er it,
And the winds from the far off sea
Chant lullabies softly above it,
They will hallow my bed for me.
And the great stars glow ever above it,
They will hallow my bed for me.

Baton Rouge.

MR. EDITOR:

Under date of March 16, Rev. James Hayard, of Baton Rouge, writes me the following:

"I am happy to say to you we had a good time at Comite last Sabbath. The people are very poor, but they are willing, and at Stony Point, too, where Brother Montgomery is doing well. A local preacher from the African Methodist Episcopal Church has joined us there, and I think the whole of the African congregation will come to us. We seem to be on the victorious side every where. And, thank the good Lord, we are gaining ground here in Baton Rouge.

"I want to see our church here dedicated, and if we could get a few thousand feet of lumber it could be done soon. We are in debt some, but are trying to get out. Pray for us that God may send help.

"We had a good time down at Baughton's plantation with Brother Isaac. Brother Williams came up and preached and administered the sacrament, and held quarterly conference, and licensed two local preachers. The Lord blessed his labors and the people rejoiced greatly. It stopped the mouths of our enemies, who said that we did not allow colored men any rights or to give sacrament. I have a letter since from Brother Isaac; he says the Baptists there are coming to us.

"We were disappointed on the second Sabbath in the month. The people had heard of Brother Williams' visit down the river and desired to hear him in Baton Rouge, but that blessed man. Father Asa Brown, was with us and preached a fine sermon, and administered the sacrament to a large number. Father Brown is almost home. The old Pilgrim will soon rest; his soul was alive with the love of God and his sermon was full of the Holy Ghost. He will go North in April, and we are so sorry to have him leave. He has been a father to us, and his wife has been a mother indeed; they have given us all so much good instruction. God bless them."

And under date March 24, he writes as follows:

"I have just returned from a visit to Ascension parish, where Brother Isaac is doing well. The people are coming to the light. They need a great deal of teaching, and seem willing to be taught, and many of them are ready to receive the discipline and submit to the laws of the Church. I preached to them and enforced the law of marriage, and they are coming to it, as you will see, and thank God for it.

"At Baughton's I married the following parties: Anthony Chism to Miss Esther Clark; Jerry Segone to Miss Margaret Johnson; Samuel Jones to Miss Martha Wooden; Daniel Kenner to Miss Martha Ross; Benjamin Lannis to Miss Jane Whitington; Thomas Carroll to Miss Molly Gillam; Thomas Bachus to Miss Dicy Flennoy; Moses Coleman to Miss Harriet Todd; Luther Frazer to Miss Sophia Hull. That is nine couples on the Borghton place. I then went to the Homer plantation, in the same parish, and married Samuel Backson to Miss Kitty Backson; David Jones to Miss Lucy Clarke; Thornton Jones to Miss Clarinda Clarke; Robert Williams to Miss Priscilla Clarke; York Bibb to Miss Phillis Logan.

"Some of the above parties were fifty or sixty years old, and have been living together for years, and have grown children, but were never before married. To me it seems solemn to see the old gray-headed fathers and mothers just coming to the light, and learning the laws of the church and the morals of the Gospel.

"The quarterly conferences are doing great good. I wish your lecture to them could be given to every class in the country. I am happy to say the membership is increasing. The people in the country want the sacrament every month, like they have it in the city (New Orleans). But there is no elder to give it. I tell the people: Wait two years, and we young men will be ordained elders; and then we'll have the Lord's supper often as we want."

The Resurrection.

BY M. ANNESLEY.

"The eyelids of morning" were opening behind the mountains of Moab, but Galilee and the Jordan were yet in sleepy darkness, and there was no stir in that sacred city where such wondrous scenes had passed only two days before.

The priest whose turn it was to attend the morning offering was watching for the signal to put the fire to the sacrifice upon the altar, yet pondering deeply upon the rent vail which opened his vision into the place only seen in past time by the high priest.

There, in the softness of that morning twilight, a shadow was flitting along all muffled in her vail; it was the loving Mary with her bundle of spices.

The weary hours since her Lord was laid in the tomb were passed, and she returned to the spot so dear to her soul; she was intent on finding the sacred body, but the glory of the Godhead had been before her in that grave, and his divinity burst asunder the bands of death, for the life he laid down he took up again. The sacrifice was finished! No more need of another typical offering; only one act remained, that was to ascend and anoint the horns of the altar of the heavenly mercy-seat with the blood of the everlasting covenant.

Mary bowed down and looked into the sepulcher, but Jesus was not there; grief and perplexity were rising in her heart as she turned about undetermined what to do. She thought of the figure she saw before her that it was the gardener, and asked, "Where have ye laid Him?"

It was Jesus, he is always near to his loving Maries when they inquire for Him.

He said "Mary" in his own soft tone. The voice she knew, and cried, "Rabboni!" In her joy she fell at his feet to embrace him, but he was content with her devotion, and said, "Touch me not." Her Lord had risen and fulfilled his own word in the type of Jonah. Lost in his divinity, she cried, "My Lord and my God!" She was satisfied that he was the long expected Messiah, the glory of Israel. She had seen him crucified, and now beheld him risen from the death of the cross and the weight of the tomb. His omnipotence had burst all asunder. In that solitary spot, in the obscurity of early morning, the risen Jesus revealed himself to a woman, and sent her with the first message of salvation through a risen Savior, and bade her tell his disciples that he was alive. That resurrection heralded by a woman has been life to a lost world. If Jesus only sends the message, great will be the results.

Fear not, woman, to go with messages from your loving, risen Lord.

The New Mission House.

For several years past there has been a growing dissatisfaction both among ministers and laymen of the church with the mission rooms on Mulberry street. Men and women who visited the rooms went away dissatisfied, and indeed disgusted. There has been a general demand for a new mission house more in keeping with the cause and its prosperity. Associated with this demand for a new mission house was a feeling of desire among the pastors and people that it should be near the book concern, so that our friends who might visit the city would find it convenient to call at the mission rooms and the book concern at the same time.

For the accomplishment of this plan two measures were taken. First, the new mission house was made one of the objects of the Centenary contributions. Secondly, the board sold the mission rooms in Mulberry street, and purchased a suitable property for new rooms, and purposed to hold over building or altering until the book concern should have time to act. But both these fundamental measures were comparative failures. The title to the property purchased proved defective, and it was given up; and the Centenary contributions have amounted to not more than $25,000. And not a dollar of this sum has yet come under the control of the board. Add to the Centenary contributions, $25,000, the proceeds of the sale of the old mission premises in Mulberry street, say $28,000, and the board would have $53,000 toward building the new mission house. But they can not proceed further until the Centenary contributions for the new mission house are placed in their hands, and not then until the amount is greatly enlarged. The board is standing still until the proper authorities shall place the Centenary contributions for the new mission house under its control, and until the book concern shall have opportunity to act.

It is evident, from what is said above, that the board has not been in a condition to proceed with the building of the new mission house; and what is said above is intended to explain why not, and to answer the inquiries of many friends who have fallen into doubts as to the accomplishment of this new mission house. Some have even gone so far as to withhold payment of their subscriptions, and even to direct them to other objects. This ought not to be. The new mission house will be built, and we all should be glad to have a part in building it.

We look to 1869 as a jubilee, in which our missionary society will have attained to its fiftieth year. Let this jubilee be the occasion of a general contribution throughout the Church for building the new mission house.

Having sold our old mission premises in Mulberry street in advance we were obliged to find new mission rooms. The Book Concern could not accommodate us. We were, therefore, obliged to rent rooms at quite an expense. But this spring the book agents were enabled to offer us an office which will serve us temporarily until we can build, and we have determined to accept the offer, chiefly to save the expense of renting rooms elsewhere, in the present condition of our missionary treasury, until the board can erect a new and suitable mission house.

We have to request, therefore, that all letters on missionary business be hereafter addressed to the secretaries at 200 Mulberry street, New York.

Peter's Denial.

BY M. ANNESLY.

We like to notice the sacred festivals of this season of the year, dear alike to Jew and Christian, and more so as we know of the certainty of their time.

How many people have closed the book after reading how Peter denied his blessed Master, and said, "Poor Peter!" little thinking of the many times they did the very same thing, although not in the same circumstances. Words are not always needed to make a clear case of denial, as bad in its effects as Peter's.

Ashamed of Jesus, at any time, is denying him. When the name of the blessed Master is treated with contempt and slight, and we are afraid to show our colors, we deny him. When there is an opportunity to say something in his behalf, and we lift not up the heart for the help, and are silent, we deny him. When we should express our thanks at the table or family altar, and are deterred by the presence of some one whom we fear more than we fear God, we deny him. In the social meeting, when we sit and listen under a sense of our obligations to be faithful, and we put off from moment to moment, and think the confession of Christ a heavy cross and burden, and at length rejoice that some one else occupied the time, we most willfully deny him. And this is done in this way so often, until in some cases the Holy Spirit ceases to reprove for this kind of denial. And oh, how great is the loss these souls experience, sometimes only repented of on sick and dying beds, too late to retrieve lost ground. Only a sense of pardon can be claimed through that denied Savior.

Friend, ask yourself if you can remember by the light of the Holy Spirit how many times you have denied the Master since last Good Friday; and seriously resolve, through his help to do so no more, that the coming year may record more blessings to your soul.

CONGREGATIONALISM IN THE SOUTH. At the close of the war the Congregationalists made some vigorous efforts to plant churches of their faith and order in the South. Three churches only are in existence, namely: a church in Newbern, North Carolina, a church in Memphis, Tennessee, and a church in New Orleans. The reports from these churches, contained in the last number of the "Home Missionary," are gloomy in the extreme. The church in Newbern has only four resident members, and is dependent on the "Home Missionary society." The church in Memphis, once self-sustaining, has come back to to dependence on the same society. The church in New Orleans is in a somewhat better condition, but it is almost entirely dependent on the Home Missionary society.—Presbyterian.

Accessions.

Nine persons united with the Ames Methodist Episcopal church on last sabbath; two of whom joined on probation, and seven by letter. Of the two probationers, one came from the Roman Catholic church, and of the seven who presented their letters, one was a Baptist, one a Presbyterian, one from the Church South, and four were Methodists. And these persons represented five states, as follows: One from Massachusetts, one from Indiana, one from Illinois, two from New York, and four from Louisiana.

Thus slowly but surely the Lord is raising up unto himself in New Orleans a people who are the heralds of a better dispensation in the South. Hitherto, the Southern church has failed in her morality, but now God is calling a people who will add morality to devotion. The South has ever had devout Christians, but her greatest need has been moral Christians. In New England morality has been practiced at the expense of devotion; in the South the people have been more devotional than moral. Our church will unite the two; and while moral duties are strictly enjoined on all no little regard is paid to personal piety.

On the evening of April 2 we held our monthly love-feast, and it was a time of divine power and a refreshing season from the presence of the Lord. Many gave testimony to a deep religious experience; others expressed a longing for more of God; while not a few were filled with holy joy.

Let no one now say that there is no religion in this ungodly city, and that we can not here have a true Methodist love-feast. Christ is mighty to save!

On Good Friday morning at six o'clock we held divine service in our chapel in commemoration of our Lord's death. We preached to the people on the solemn occasion, and dwelt upon the crucifixion.

To-morrow morning at six o'clock we shall hold a Resurrection prayer meeting in honor of Christ's ascent from the tomb. All are invited.

Respectable.

We have in this community a class of respectable croakers who are always talking about putting up respectable men for office, and assigning as a reason why they do not vote the Republican ticket they wish to vote for respectable men. Exactly. And if Moses should come to life again and run on the Republican ticket for governor, or the angel Gabriel should come down from Heaven and be the Republican candidate for mayor of New Orleans, these respectable croakers would not vote for either, but would prefer Judge Able to Moses, and John T. Monroe to the angel Gabriel. Most of these persons are down here to make money, and they foolishly think that they can make the most by voting the Democratic ticket, and their talk about respectability is all bosh! We happen to know the history of most of these men. But there are some Northern men here who have sense enough to be Republicans.

Dr. Roudanez.

It has been a puzzle to many to understand why the chief proprietor and director of the Tribune, with his acknowledged ability and learning, has so little influence, and commits his paper to such foolish policies. He claims to be honest, yet stops at no misrepresentation or deception.

He uses men as he did poor Crane and Smith, only to make them serve his purpose, and then throw them away. So he did in the canvass for governor.

He is kicked and abused by the rebels, and turns around and kisses their hands.

He pretends one month to be the especial champion of the colored men, and the next month he is trying to persuade them to coalesce with their old masters. He goes into a nominating convention with his candidate, recognizes its legality, and when beaten repudiates it, and says it never was a convention.

He takes the printing of the Republican party, from its committees, from congress, from the convention, from the United States offices and departments, and then turns around and seeks to betray that party which fed him.

The secret of all this is, that the proprietor of the Tribune is a despotic man, who wishes to govern all with whom he acts; a suspicious man, who believes every man a rogue, unless he agrees with him; a jealous man, who hates to share any power or success with others; a treacherous man, delights in playing off one man against another, and then discarding both; and an ambitious man, who would like to go to the United States senate.

Dr. Roudanez must take more honorable means to gratify so high and so laudable an ambition.

Working Men.

The Crescent appeals to working men to vote against the constitution because it gives the colored man the same right to work for a living as themselves. The working men if they are wise will vote for the constitution, because its adoption will give us five new railroads, new levees, fifty thousand emigrants, small farms, and cheap bread and bacon. It asks restaurant and hotel keepers to vote against it because it will ruin their business, by obliging them to admit colored persons.

The restaurant and hotel keepers if they are wise will vote for it on the sly, because it will relieve them from the burden of a very troublesome prejudice, and add a good many dollars to their pockets. The fact is these people will be very glad to at last be decently rid of the not very high-toned business of being "nigger smellers" for the community at large.

After the constitution is adopted not one customer less will frequent Victor's, or the St. Charles, or the Varities theatre because a colored man who can afford it has been admitted there.

Plenty of colored men have gone to the opera for years. Yet our fastidious creoles never left it in disgust.

The Tribune.

In the reply of this paper to our article upon its inconsistency in now opposing Warmoth and Dunn, whom it so warmly supported three years since, it accuses us of slandering Judge Taliaferro. The charge is false, willful, and malicious. We said not a word against the character of Judge Taliaferro, except so far as a statement of the facts of his political record reflect discredit. For these facts Judge Taliaferro is responsible, and not we.

We challenge the Tribune to print all or any part of the article it accuses of being slanderous, and point out the paragraph which contains the slander. We said that Warmoth was not supported by the rebels, and Taliaferro was. This is true. We said that Taliaferro was a conservative till lately, and was elected as a conservative president of the convention.

This is true.

We said that Warmoth was an advocate of universal suffrage in 1865, and Taliaferro was not.

This is true.

We said that Warmoth was in the Union army, and Taliaferro was not.

This is true.

We said that Warmoth is the candidate of the Republican party, as nominated by the Republican convention, and that Taliaferro is the candidate of the Tribune newspaper and a few sore-headed bolters.

This is true.

We will add one more point of difference: Taliaferro will not be elected; Warmoth will. The difference between the votes will be in the same ratio as the Congo square meeting of twenty thousand to the Canal street meeting, at No. 291, of seventy-five.

"He is Risen."

With what joyful memories the morning light of to-morrow will fill the Christian's soul! Another joyous Easter will have dawned upon our earth. In every hamlet, town, and city, and in every pious home in Christendom the dominant thought will be the resurrection of Christ, and the happy exclamation of each of his followers will be, "He is risen, as He said." And this illustrious event will unify humanity by suggesting a thought common to all believers. On this day each Christian will know what is the thought of each other Christian throughout the world. Thus Christ becomes the union-thought of his people.

And who can recall that blessed event without gratitude, or dwell upon its glory without love for Him who "rose for our justification." His resurrection is the pledge that we also shall rise from the tomb in bodies which never more shall die. Let us, therefore, celebrate the approaching Easter with mingled love, hope, and faith, and

"Sing praise! the tomb is void
Where the Redeemer lay;
Sing of our bonds destroyed,
Our darkness turned to day!"

SPEECH

Of Colonel Hugh J. Campbell at the Great Mass Meeting at Congo Square on Friday Evening, April 3, 1868.

MY COUNTRYMEN: This is not the time or place for an elaborate speech or argument. Neither am I prepared, through the unexpectedness of your flattering call upon me, to respond in fitting terms to the distinguished honor you have thus conferred upon me.

As a plain, practical man, however, in response to the call from this vast assemblage, I will present to you in a plain way a few practical suggestions.

The distinguished speakers who have preceded me, General J. H. Sypher, your illustrious candidate for Congress, who is carrying his district by storm, Hon. T. W. Conway, whose eloquent and forcible appeals have been of such signal service in arousing our people, and the war-horse of our parish canvass, Colonel Charles Fox, have completely exhausted the argument and left little to be said.

The presence of this vast multitude, which completely fills every nook and corner of this immense square, your enthusiasm, your banners and mottoes, show that your minds are all awake to the transcendent importance, the overshadowing magnitude the far-reaching consequences of victory or defeat to all your interests and those of your children's children in the coming election.

We feel joyful to-night over this grand demonstration of the union and zeal of all true Republicans in this city. My friends, a greater trust is reposed in you than has ever yet been confided to any people.

The great free party of the North, who have steadfastly held up your cause for eight years of bitter contest against a formidable rebellion, against a bitter opposition at home, and lastly against all the power and patronage of the president, has at length succeeded in bringing to a practical test the grand and sublime plan of reconstruction by the Congress. It consists simply in this: in giving to the whole people of the rebel states, white and black, the right to reconstruct the government of these states, and to make secure forever the rights and liberties of all the people, without regard to race, color, or previous condition. Congress now puts the question in your hands, and the civilized world looks on with bated breath to see whether you are capable of exercising properly the new rights now offered to you. The enemies of equal rights have proclaimed it all over the world that you are not. They say you are unfit to be freemen; that it is unchristian and barbarous to put the ballot in your hands. Your action is now to give the lie to these charges or to prove them true. If with a majority of eighty thousand in this state, you suffer yourselves to be divided, give the state government into the hands of the rebels, and fail to secure the ratification and acceptance of your constitution, will it not go far to prove that what your enemies say is true?

What will you say then of the Republican, of the colored man, who at this grave juncture tries to divide you? who forgets the danger to his own people, who forgets the high trust reposed in him by the great free party of the North, and think only of personal ambition and spoils of office?

My friends, mark what I say, every vote given against the regular ticket of the Republican party is a vote against the constitution. I will show you why:

Division in our ranks on the head of the ticket begets hard feeling and dissensions which extend clear down to the lowest office on the ticket. Suppose by means of these dissensions the rebels elect their legislative ticket? That is their game. If they obtain a sufficient number in the general assembly, to prevent by delay or mistakes, or in any of a thousand ways, the ratification of the proposed amendment to the constitution of the United States, or the performance of any other of the conditions prescribed by Congress for readmission, the acceptance of your constitution is postponed perhaps till after the next general elections, your majority in Congress is gone, and with it all the precious rights now almost within your grasp.

Our only safety is in union. Our greatest enemies are those who would encourage any division among ourselves. Let us fight this battle out on this line, the line chosen by our representatives in convention.

Let us win this victory. After that, when our liberties are secure, our rights guaranteed, our beautiful state again invested with the purple and the diadem of sovereignty, and her destinies in the hands of her own people, that people being the whole people, of whatever class, race, or condition who dwell within her borders, we can turn to minor questions, and divide upon other issues. Till then let our watchword be the constitution and the regular ticket; the election of the one is necessary to the safety of the other.

Washington Conference.

The fifth session of the Washington annual conference, colored, met in the Mt. Zion church, Georgetown, D. C., February 27. Bishop Ames presided in place of Bishop Janes, who had gone to the South Carolina conference instead of Bishop Simpson, detained at home by the sickness of his son.

The examination of the characters of effective elders was commenced, and the presiding elders of the several districts called upon for reports. The responses indicated great prosperity and much progress, especially in the Virginia portions of the conference.

On the afternoon of the second day a session was held for the collection of statistics.

| | This year. | Increase. |
|---|---|---|
| Members | 17,409 | 3,159 |
| Probationers | 3,500 | 298 |
| Total members | 20,909 | 3,437 |
| Local preachers | 127 | 25 |
| Adults baptized | 878 | 174 |
| Children baptized | 2,504 | 466 |
| Church edifices | 117 | 28 |
| Parsonages | 4 | 1 |
| Value of church property | $278,680 00 | $57,280 00 |
| Mission collections | 895 21 | 295 52 |
| Tract society | 55 53 | 30 46 |
| Bible society | 32 14 | 17 06 |
| Church extension | 16 25 | .... |
| Sunday school union | 62 41 | 23 04 |

In 1864 the conference was organized with about 8000 members and probationers. The increase since that time has been about 250 per cent.

On the third day all the members of the second year's class were admitted into full connection and elected to deacon's orders, except T. Elliott, who was discontinued at his own request.

Winchester, Virginia, was selected as the seat of the next conference.

India Mission Conference Proceedings.

The fourth annual session of the India Mission conference of the Methodist Episcopal church commenced Thursday, January 16, in Bijinour, India. In the absence of the bishop, Rev. J. M. Thoburn was elected president. T. J. Scott was elected secretary. The session was one of much interest and profit, and will be long remembered by us all on account of the amount and dispatch of the business transacted,

All the departments of the work show a most encouraging increase. Our schools are growing; missionaries and helpers are becoming more faithful; and the people are more anxious for the conversion of their fellow countrymen. God has most graciously blessed some parts of the work. In Shahjehanpore district nearly one hundred of our community have been baptized, and others are renouncing their false religion. Indeed, there seems to be a great moving of the hearts of the people of that part of the country toward christianity.

The "half-hour" prayer meetings, which were held last year in connection with the daily sessions, with so much profit, were also observed this year, and resulted in much benefit to all participating in them. Thursday evening Rev. D. W. Thomas preached the "annual missionary sermon," which was one of unusual interest and power. Friday evening Rev. H. Mansell delivered a carefully prepared lecture before the Conference Literary Society on "Low Castes of India."

On Sunday service in both English and Hindostanee were held. Rev. J. M. Thoburn preached in the morning in English, and Rev. T. J. Scott in the evening in Hindoostanee.

The conference love feast was one in which all realized the presence of the Master in an unusual manner; it was a veritable feast of love to all present. In the afternoon the sacriment of the Lord's supper was administered. At night the annual missionary meeting or anniversary was held.

Rev. J. T. Gracey, returning home on account of the extreme illness of Mrs. Gracey, was elected as our representative to the ensuing general conference.

Bareilly was selected as the place for the next conference session.

The official statistical returns, showing the state of the work on each charge, will be furnished hereafter. Rev. S. S. Weatherby, to whom we are indebted for an early and welcome letter furnishing the above items, writes most encouragingly of the prospects of our work in that distant country. He intimates, however, that great regret was felt because the appropriations to the mission had been reduced by the general missionary committee and board at home, thus preventing the prosecution of the work with the vigor required.

Easter Sermon.

Dr. Newman will preach an Easter sermon to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock in his church. All are cordially invited to join with him in celebrating this great festival.

Judge Fiske.

Having been informed that a few men are trying to get up opposition to Judge Fiske, we would say to the Radical voters of Jefferson. St. Bernard, and Plaquemines parishes, be sure that his name is on your ticket, that you may vote for the man that has done much to promote the interests of the colored race.

Coming Home.

Rev. C. W. Fitzhugh, a minister of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, was recently received by Brother Lynch into our church and re-appointed to the Woodville circuit.

Brother Fitzhugh is a member of the Mississippi constitutional convention. He is a native of Mississippi, quite young, possessing a good English education, and eminently successful as a preacher. He belongs to one of the oldest and most influential colored families of that state.

Mr. A. D. Sargent.

This gentleman, through the influence of Mr. Charles Heath, has taken an active interest in the condition of the freedmen in Louisiana. He has recently collected a barrel of clothing and forwarded the same to the care of Mr. Heath, by the politeness of Captain Robinson, of the ship ——, and which has been turned over to Mrs. Dr Newman for distribution. And now in thanking Mr. Sargent for this donation, we also call his attention to the fact that any books, old or new, which he can send us will serve a good purpose for our mission school.

Laying the Corner-Stone of a Tomb.

We have received information from Donaldsonville, Louisiana, that the benevolent society or burial association connected with the Methodist Episcopal church of that place on the 2d instant laid the corner-stone of their new tomb. It is to cost about $500, which money we understand is now raised. They formed in procession, under Mr. J. F. Brown, of New Orleans, who acted as marshal, and marched through the principal streets of Donaldsonville, after which they proceeded to the cemetery, where the exercises were to take place, which were of the usual nature on such occasions, The society was organized and money raised through the persevering efforts of Brother Kennedy.

ATTENTION, COLORED MEN!

The Parish and Municipal Ticket.

There will be many devices of the enemy to divide and distract your votes.

They will also aim to discourage and bluff off as many colored men as they can from the polls.

Watch this. Let every man who is turned away wrongfully come immediately to the parish committee and give his name, residence, and the facts, and swear to it.

If they cheat us, we will seek redress from higher authority.

We have a good ticket. Many of the gentlemen upon it are personally known to us. We append sketches of the lives of these gentlemen, so far as we have time and space in this issue.

J. M. DAVIS, CIVIL SHERIFF.

Mr. Davis is an old resident of New Orleans, a gentleman of unblemished integrity and high moral character, an ardent Republican, and a hard, indefatigable worker. It is is true he is a poor man, and not a kid-gloved, patent-leather booted gentleman, but he is what is better, an honest man.

He will make a faithful, good officer, he will befriend the poor man, and he needs the office.

Vote for him.

JUDGE W. W. HOWE,

Judge of the first district court, is a candidate for re-election. He is a gentleman who as a lawyer stands very high, as a judge who has fulfilled the duties of his high station with such ability, fairness, and faithfulness as to have extorted even the admiration of his political opponents. An able, independent, and fearless judiciary is of the first importance to the people of New Orleans.

Vote for him.

JUDGE R. H. SHANNON,

Now United States commissioner, has endeared himself especially to the colored people of Louisiana by the bold and prompt measures of redress which he has always afforded them. His was the first civil tribunal opened in Louisiana, before which a colored man stood a fair chance with a rebel. He has brought several desperate scoundrels to justice for outrages committed on colored men whom the state authorities suffered to go unpunished because they were rich and influential rebels.

Vote for him.

HON. S. B. PACKARD

A member of the constitutional convention and candidate for clerk of the second district court, is one of the best men on the ticket. He is a gentleman of high character and social standing, of great attainments and fine intellectual qualities. He was one of the solid working men of the convention, author of several of its best provisions, and an uncompromising Radical.

Vote for him.

HON. DAVID WILSON,

Also a member of the convention, is a candidate for the senate. Mr. Wilson is a gentleman of good sound judgment and practical ability. He was one of the most faithful and industrious delegates, did not talk much but worked "a heap." The securing of the capitol at New Orleans is due very much to his exertions. He is also the originator of several important features of the constitution.

Vote for him.

HON. SOLOMON R. MOSES,

Also a delegate to the convention, is emphatically a man of the people. He is self-taught, and like a black walnut, pretty rough outside, but with a great stock of common sense and mother wit inside. We could pick out a good many smooth-speaking, soft-handed men, in whose hands the interests of the state would not be so safe as in those of our friend Moses.

Vote for him.

HON. P. B. S. PINCHBACK,

Also a delegate to the convention, is a candidate for the senate. He is a young man of natural talents, and is an effective speaker. He was a bold and outspoken advocate of all the rights of the colored men in the convention, and proposed the original article which, as afterward amended and corrected, became article thirteen.

Vote for him.

MAJOR T. V. COUPLAND,

Candidate for senator in the third district, is an ex-army officer, and a gentleman of high moral and social standing. He served with distinction through the war, and has since resided in New Orleans.

He is a gentleman of education and fine ability, and will worthily represent his district.

Vote for him.

COLONEL C. B. YOUNG,

An ex-army officer, is a candidate for the house. His services in the war were distinguished. He is an ardent and hard-working Republican, and a gentleman who will exert a marked influence with his colleagues.

Vote for him.

MR. JOHN G. SELDON,

Candidate for the house, is president of the sixth ward club, and is a tried and consistent Republican.

Vote for him.

MR. ST. FELIX CASANAVE,

Candidate for controller, is well known among our business circles. He is a gentleman of experience and skill in finance, who has managed successfully his private affairs, of integrity and high reputation. He is just the right man for the right place.

Vote for him.

MR. EUGENE STAES,

Candidate for recorder of the second district, is a young gentleman of fine education, with intellectual abilities of a high order, of unblemished character, and of great popularity and influence in his district. He will make one of the best recorders whom New Orleans has elected for many years.

Vote for him.

COLONEL J. M. G. PARKER,

Candidate for alderman, first district, is an ex-army officer, and a gentleman who, as one of the pioneers of Republicanism in this state, and one of the founders of the Republican newspaper, is too well and favorably known to our citizens to need any eulogy at our hands. His abilities and influence will make him a valuable accession to the common council in the present embarrassed state of the city affairs.

Vote for him.

CAPTAIN W. G. M'CONNELL,

Candidate for alderman, first district. A better soldier, a truer friend, and an honester man never went before the people of his district.

Captain McConnell was a member of the senate of Illinois before the war, and has a host of warm friends in that state who would have welcomed him back with any honors he could have asked; but he was taken prisoner after the war by one of Louisiana's fairest daughters, surrendered at discretion, and is now a naturalized Louisianian. Captain McConnell is identified with the interests of his adopted state and city, and will make as good an alderman as he did a soldier, and that is saying a great deal. Our only objection to him is that he is too thin and slender to come up to the traditional aldermanic proportions, but we hope to see him soon fill the proper aldermanic circumference.

Vote for him.

MR. PATRICK HARNAN.

Candidate for alderman, first ward, is a true Republican, for he is an Irish Republican. Mr. Harnan is a gentleman of property and high character, and one in whose hands the interests of the city can safely be trusted. The Irish will vote for him.

Vote for him.

MR. L. PESSOU,

Candidate for alderman, third district, is an indefatigable hard-working Republican. He is giving his whole time and energies to the canvass, and will worthily represent his district.

Vote for him.

MR. EDMOND FLOOD,

Candidate for alderman, fourth district, is an old and esteemed citizen, a tried Union man, and an unflinching Republican, and is at present a member of the board of assistant aldermen.

The present position is not sought by him, but the citizens of his district demand that he should serve them, and he has consented.

They could not send a worthier man.

Vote for him!

City and Parish Nominees.

Some complain that our candidates are not respectable, but we hold that the average respectability of the city and parish tickets is equal to that of any other ticket in the field. Some suppose that a poor man, and a man who does not dress in the fashion, lacks respectability, but our observation is that a rich man may be a rascal, and a dandy a villain.

MR. SETH W. LEWIS,

The Republican candidate for mayor, is intelligent, honest, and loyal, which can not be said of many of the Democratic candidates.

H. C. DIBBLE

Is a young gentleman whose industry and professional success are worthy the attention of Southern young men, and he will make a competent and an efficient districtt atorney.

S. S. FISH

will make an excellent judge, and he should be elected, because God would not allow the rebels to kill him in the July riots.

J. W. MENARD

Is a colored man of education and energy, and will make a competent state tax assessor. He has worked hard, and deserves well of his friends.

HUGH J. CAMPBELL

Is a gentleman of whom too much can not be said. Having been liberally educated he will bring into the state senate a vast amount of useful intelligence, and his devotion to Republican principles is unsurpassed.

CHARLES H. FOX

Is now so well known to the public by his popular speeches that we need not add another word to what has been already said. We could wish that every Republican candidate was as sure of his election as Mr. Fox. We predict that he will be the most useful and popular member of the house of representatives.

For assistant aldermen we can not do better than vote for such noble and competent men as W. B. Armstrong, Dr. Pemberton, J. B. Noble, Lewis Banks, J. H. Ingraham, and Yorick Campbell.

Vote for the whole ticket. We have not time or space to prolong this sketch of the men on it. We give them as samples. Vote the whole ticket, and we will triumph.

MURDERS! MURDERS!

Where is Hancock's Civil Government?—Where are Buchanan's Troops?—A Minister Shot and Two of His Congregation Hung, and the Rest Driven into the Woods—Is there no Redress?

One of the most atrocious and foul assaults ever perpetrated upon inoffensive citizens was made on one of our congregations, worshiping at Holloway's prairie, near Alexandria, Louisiana, on March 15. Rev. S. Small, of Alexandria, writes as follows: "I am afraid that one of our appointments is entirely broken up. I got a letter that there had been trouble in the neighborhood. Some white men broke up our people's settlement, and drove them off from their farms, twenty-five miles into the pine woods. On March 15, at a night meeting, they shot the minister dead, and hung two persons till dead." And the New Orleans Times of last Saturday contained the following account of the dreadful affair:

For the last eight or ten days we have heard awful rumors of shooting, hanging, and other base outrages committed in our parish. We have at last been placed in possession of facts, as sworn to before Justice Orsborn, which undoubtedly go to prove that these rumors have proved too true, and that lynch law has been resorted to at or near Holloway's prairie, in this parish, on the 21st ultimo. On that day the affidavits of certain parties show that Dorinda Huffman, f. w. c., and her son, Moses Huffman, f. m. c., and Henry Cornies, freedman, were taken and tied, and ropes placed to their necks and hanged until they were dead. On the same day, near the same spot, Nathan Green, freedman, was shot and killed.

From the above extracts the facts are these:

Rev. Mr. Small, one of our ordained ministers and duly authorized, organized a church at Holloway's prairie and appointed Rev. Mr. Green, a local preacher of our church, over the young society. On the fifteenth of March he and his people were worshiping in their appointed place, when a party of rebel whites came in and commenced the assault, during which they shot the minister, and then in the most brutish manner took two men and a woman and hung them to a tree. Not cotennt with these murders, they then broke up the settlement of poor blacks, compelled them to leave their homes and crops, and drove them twenty-five miles into the piny woods, where they were compelled to wander until death relieved them of their burdensome life.

We ask, in the name of God and humanity, how long are the loyal, peaceable citizens of our state to suffer from the hands of those who are the sworn enemies of our government? The civil authorities in the interior of the state are either in league with such murderers or dare not arrest and punish them.

Nor is the above the only atrocity of the kind perpetrated within a few weeks past. At Vermillionville, recently, a colored man was shot dead, cut up, head cut off, and the mangled body thrown into a well. And what was his offense? A drunken white man had entered the colored man's cabin in his absence and took possession of his bed. The black man coming home ordered him out of his house and the white man refusing to go, the black man knocked him down. The white drunkard then went out but soon returned with several companions, who murdered the helpless black man. The murderers were arrested, tried, and ACQUITTED. And the spirit of that acquittal is, that a black man has no right to defend his own home and family. But we declare the black man has that right, and the country will sustain him in its proper exercise.

Still another case. Not long since a favorite servant of Dr. Piquette, who resides near New Iberia, went into town on business for the doctor, and while there he was assailed without cause by some drunken steamboat men, who beat him to death, chopped off his head, and otherwise mangled the body. The doctor made complaint; but at first no justice of the peace would notice the murder so much as to issue a warrant for the arrest of the guilty parties; and when they were arrested they were immediately discharged, and in turn threatened the life of Dr. Piquette because he had presumed to demand the punishment of white men for killing a negro.

And we have still another case of brutal assault upon another minister of our church. He is the Rev. Mr. Boyd, of Shreveport, Louisiana. During the week he taught school, and one of his white neighbors becoming offended at him because the school children were noisy, he opened fire at short range while Mr. Boyd stood on his own gallery.

The next day, on making complaint before a justice, the assailant was put under one hundred dollars bonds to keep the peace, but on leaving the office said he would kill the preacher. Boyd then asked the justice what he should do, and was told to defend himself. In the evening the battle was renewed, and after several shots were exchanged, the police came up, entered the white man's house, took a few drinks with him, and then entered the colored citizen's house, arrested him, and put him in jail for the night. A collection had to be taken in our church to pay this brother's jail fees and get him released.

We now respectfully demand of General Buchanan, and we do so in the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and of the whole country, that he investigate the above cases and bring to deserved punishment the perpetrators of these horrid crimes. And we call upon the people of Louisiana to establish a better government for our state on the 17th and 18th of April.

The Black Crook.

Let the new constitution be ratified by an overwhelming majority. Our enemies must be taught that we believe in Congress, and the ratification of the constitution will be a glorious approval of a Congress which has stood firmly by the loyal men of the South. And it will be no less an approval of the impeachment of Andrew Johnson. Thus the influence of the loyal vote of Louisiana will be felt outside of her own borders and tell mightily upon the national legislation. Our enemies are zealously at work to defeat our new constitution. They know that if it is adopted it will be their tomb stone, but our guide-board, pointing us onward in the path of truth, wealth, and glory. They call it the "Black Crook Constitution." And why? What is the meaning of the word "Crook?" Does it not mean a shepherd's staff with which he drives off the devouring wolves which come to destroy him and his poor little lambs? And why do they call it a Black Crook? Because it a staff of defense and protection in the hands of BLACK MEN by which they can drive off the old devouring Democratic wolves and secession hyenas who still haunt the black man's home to kill him and his children. But, black man, take this crook and defend yourself! It is at once your sword and shield. Armed with it you are more than a match for all your foes. Invested with the rights it offers you will be strong to vindicate yourselves in the years to come.

Already our enemies are appealing to the baser passions of the poor whites on the one hand, and to the equally base passions of the aristocratic whites on the other. They tell the poor white laborer that if this constitution is adopted it will be the degredation of white labor in Louisiana. But what do these men care about the dignity or degradation of labor? Have they not always degraded it? Have they not always despised the poor man who was doomed to toil, whether he was white or black? But the new constitution makes labor honorable, and gives the poor man a chance to rise in the world. Let us ask the poor white man—What have you ever received from the white aristocrats who are now opposing the new constitution? Did not they keep you in ignorance and keep you poor? But we declare to you that this is the "Laborers' Constitution," and every poor white man in Louisiana should vote for its ratification.

Our enemies are now appealing to the coffeehouse keepers, and affirming that this "Black Crook" will break up their business by permitting the blacks to enter their places. But we don't believe this. And why? Because our enemies like whisky too well to be kept away from a coffeehouse bar because a black man occasionally patronizes the same saloon. Nothing will break up the coffeehouses but the death of the present loyal-hating and whisky-drinking generation of Southern chivalry. And it is a slander on the constitution that it permits intrusion into a citizen's private business. No sensible man can believe it.

Our enemies ask, "Do you want to be forced to send your children to school with negroes?" What impudence is this from men who sucked the milk of life from the breast of some old black mammy, and who in their childhood cut all sorts of "shindies with the little niggers." Are these men ashamed of their bringing up and of their old playmates that they now warn the whites against the "Black Crook?" We have no idea that the blacks will prefer to send their children to mixed schools. The danger is that the black children won't go with the white children, and that the city will be compelled to build separate schoolhouses for the colored children of the city.

What other objections have our enemies to the "Black Crook constitution?" Only this: If that constitution is adopted Warmoth and Dunn are elected, and they are left out in the cold. That's all. Were they sure of an election they would vote for the constitution to-morrow, and for the sake of office some will even dare to vote for it. But they can't come in. The door of public favor is shut and barred with a "Black Crook." Then give us the "Black Crook."

CONSTITUTION

—OF THE—

STATE OF LOUISIANA.

Adopted in Convention at New Orleans, Saturday, March 7, 1868.

PREAMBLE.

We, the people of Louisiana, in order to establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this constitution.

CONSTITUTION.

TITLE I.—BILL OF RIGHTS.

ARTICLE 1. All men are created free and equal, and have certain inalienable rights; among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. To secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

ART. 2. All persons, without regard to race, color, or previous condition, born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and residents of this state for one year, are citizens of this state. The citizens of this state owe allegiance to the United States; and this allegiance is paramount to that which they owe to the state. They shall enjoy the same civil, political, and public rights and privileges, and be subject to the same pains and penalties.

ART. 3. There shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in this state, otherwise than for the punishment of crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

ART. 4. The press shall be free; every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of this liberty.

ART. 5. The right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition the government, or any department thereof, shall never be abridged.

ART. 6. Prosecutions shall be by indictment or information. The accused shall be entitled to a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the parish in which the offense was committed, unless the venue be changed. He shall not be compelled to give evidence against himself; he shall have the right of being heard by himself or counsel; he shall have the right of meeting the witnesses face to face, and shall have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor. He shall not be tried twice for the same offense.

ART. 7. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient securities, unless for capital offenses, where the proof is evident, or the presumption great, or unless after conviction, for any crime or offense punishable with death or imprisonment at hard labor. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended.

ART. 8. Excessive bail shall not be required; excessive fines shall not be imposed; nor cruel or unusual punishments inflicted.

ART. 9. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated; and no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, or the person or things to be seized.

ART. 10. All courts shall be open; and every person for injury done him in his land, goods, person, or reputation shall have adequate remedy by due process of law, and justice administered without denial or unreasonable delay.

ART. 11. No law shall be passed fixing the price of manual labor.

ART. 12. Every person has the natural right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience. No religious test shall be required as a qualification for office.

ART. 13. All persons shall enjoy equal rights and privileges upon any conveyance of a public character; and all places of business, or of public resort, or for which a license is required by either state, parish, or municipal authority, shall be deemed places of a public character, and shall be opened to the accommodation and patronage of all persons, without distinction or discrimination on account of race or color.

ART. 14. The rights enumerated in this title shall not be construed to limit or abridge other rights of the people not herein expressed.

TITLE II.—LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

ART. 15. The legislative power of the state shall be vested in two distinct branches; the one to be styled the house of representatives, the other the senate, and both the general assembly of the state of Louisiana.

ART. 16. The members of the house of representatives shall continue in office for two years from the day of the closing of the general elections.

ART. 17. Representatives shall be chosen on the first Monday in November every two years, and the election shall be completed in one day. The general assembly shall meet annually on the first Monday in January, unless a different day be appointed by law, and their sessions shall be held at the seat of government.

ART. 18. Every elector under this constitution shall be eligible to a seat in the house of representatives; and every elector who has reached the age of twenty-five years, shall be eligible to the senate; Provided, that no person shall be a representative or senator unless at the time of his election he be a qualified elector of the representative or senatorial district from which he is elected.

ART. 19. Elections for members of the general assembly shall be held at the several election precincts established by law.

ART. 20. Representation in the house of representatives shall be equal and uniform; and after the first general assembly elected under this constitution shall be ascertained and regulated by the total population, each parish in the state being entitled to at least one representative. A census of the state by state authority shall be taken in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-five, and every ten years thereafter. In case of informality, omission, or error in the census returns from any parish or election district, the general assembly may order a new census taken in such parish or election district; but until the state census of eighteen hundred and seventy-five, the apportionment of the state shall be made on the basis of the census of the United States for the year eighteen hundred and seventy.

ART. 21. The general assembly, at the first session after the making of each enumeration, shall apportion the representation amongst the several parishes and representative districts, on the basis of the total population, as aforesaid. A representative number shall be fixed, and each parish and representative district shall have as many representatives as the number of its total population will entitle it to have; and an additional representative for any fraction exceeding one-half of the representative number. The number of representatives shall never exceed one hundred and twenty, nor be less than ninety.

ART. 22. Until an apportionment shall be made in accordance with the provisions of article 20, the representation in the senate and house of representatives shall be as follows:

And the state shall be divided into the following senatorial districts, to wit:

The first, second, and third representative districts of New Orleans shall form one senatorial district, and elect three senators.

The fourth, fifth, and sixth representative districts of New Orleans shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The seventh, eighth, and ninth representative districts of New Orleans and the parish of St. Bernard shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The tenth representative district of New Orleans shall form one district, and elect one senator.

Orleans right bank and the parish of Plaquemines shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Jefferson, St. Charles, and St. John Baptist shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Ascension and St. James shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Assumption, Lafourche, and Terrebonne shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Vermillion and St. Mary shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Calcasieu, Lafayette, and St. Landry shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Livingston, St. Helena, Washington, and St. Tammany shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Pointe Coupee, East Feliciana, and West Feliciana shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parish of East Baton Rouge shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of West Baton Rouge, Iberville, and St. Martin shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Concordia and Avoyelles shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Tensas and Franklin shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Carroll, Madison, and Morehouse shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Ouachita and Caldwell shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Jackson and Union shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Bossier, Bienville, and Claiborne shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parish of Caddo shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of De Soto, Natchitoches, and Sabine shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parish of Rapides shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Catahoula and Winn shall form one district, and elect one senator.

Thirty-six senators in all.

ART. 23. The house of representatives shall choose its speaker and other officers.

ART. 24. Electors in all cases except treason, felony, or breach of the peace, shall be privileged from arrest during their attendance on, going to, and returning from elections.

ART. 25. At its first session under this constitution, the general assembly shall provide by law that the names and residence of all qualified electors shall be registered, in order to entitle them to vote; but the registry shall be free of cost to the elector.

ART. 26. No person shall be entitled to vote at any election held in this state, except in the parish of his residence, and at the election precinct in which he is registered; Provided, That no voter in removing from one parish to another shall lose the right to vote in the former until he has acquired it in the latter.

ART. 27. The members of the senate shall be elected for the term of four years; and when assembled, the senate shall have power to choose its own officers, except as hereinafter provided.

ART. 28. The general assembly shall divide the state into senatorial districts whenever it apportions representation in the house of representatives.

ART. 29. No parish shall be divided in the formation of a senatorial district, the parish of Orleans excepted; and whenever a new parish shall be created it shall be attached to the senatorial district from which most of its territory is taken, or to another contiguous district, at the discretion of the general assembly, but shall not be attached to more than one district. The number of senators shall be thirty-six, and they shall be apportioned among the senatorial districts according to the total population of said districts.

ART. 30. In all apportionments of the senate the total population of the state shall be divided by the number thirty-six, and the result produced by this division shall be the senatorial ratio entitling a senatorial district to a senator.

Single or contiguous parishes shall be formed into districts having a population the nearest possible to the number entitling a district to a senator; and if the apportionment to make a parish or district fall short of, or exceed the ratio, then a district may be formed having not more than two senators; but not otherwise. No new apportionment shall have the effect of abridging the term of service of any senator already elected at the time of making the apportionment. After an enumeration has been made, as directed in the twentieth article, the general assembly shall not pass any law, till an apportionment of representation in both houses of the general assembly shall be made.

ART. 31. At the first session of the general assembly after this constitution goes into effect, the senators shall be divided equally by lot into two classes: the seats of the senators of the first class to be vacated at the expiration of the term of the first house of representatives; those of the second class at the expiration of the term of the second house of representatives; so that one-half shall be chosen every two years successively. When a district shall have elected two senators, their respective terms of office shall be determined by lot between themselves.

ART. 32. The first election for senators shall be held at the same time with the election for representatives; and thereafter there shall be elections of senators at the same time with each general election of representatives, to fill the places of those senators whose term of office may have expired.

ART. 33. Not less than a majority of the members of each house of the general assembly shall form a quorum to transact business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and shall have full power to compel the attendance of absent members.

ART. 34. Each house of the general assembly shall judge of the qualifications, election, and returns of its members, but a contested election shall be determined in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

ART. 35. Each house of the general assembly may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish a member for disorderly conduct, and with a concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member, but not a second time for the same offense.

ART. 36. Each house of the general assembly shall keep and publish weekly a journal of its proceedings; and the yeas and nays of the members on any question, at the desire of any two of them, shall be entered on the journal.

ART. 37. Each house may punish by imprisonment any person not a member for disrespect and disorderly behavior in its presence, or for obstructing any of its proceedings; such imprisonment shall not exceed ten days for any one offense.

ART. 38. Neither house shall adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which it may be sitting, during the sessions of the general assembly, without the consent of the other.

ART. 39. The members of the general assembly shall receive from the public treasury a compensation for their services, which shall be eight dollars per day during their attendance, going to, and returning from the sessions of their respective houses. This compensation may be increased or diminished by law, but no alteration shall take effect during the period of service of the members of the house of representatives by which such alteration shall have been made. No session shall extend beyond the period of sixty days, to date from its commencement; and any legislative action had after the expiration of said period of sixty days shall be null and void; but the first general assembly that shall convene after the adoption of this constitution may continue in session for one hundred and twenty days.

ART. 40. The members of the general assembly, in all cases except treason, felony, or breach of the peace, shall be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the sessions of their respective houses, and going to or returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either house shall not be questioned in any other place.

ART. 41. No senator or representative during the term for which he was elected, nor for one year thereafter, shall be appointed to any civil office of profit under this state which shall have been created, or the emoluments of which may have been increased during the time such senator or representative was in office.

ART. 42. No bill shall have the force of a law until on three several days it be read in each house of the general assembly, and free discussion allowed thereon, unless four-fifths of the house where the bill is pending may deem it expedient to dispense with this rule.

ART. 43. All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the house of representatives, but the senate may propose amendments as in other bills; Provided, it shall not introduce any matter under the color of an amendment which does not relate to raising revenue.

ART. 44. The general assembly shall regulate by whom and in what manner writs of election shall be issued to fill the vacancies which may occur in either branch thereof.

ART. 45. On the confirmation or rejection of the officers to be appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, the vote shall be taken by yeas and nays; and the names of the senators voting for and against the appointments respectively shall be entered on the journals to be kept for the purpose, and made public on or before the end of each session.

ART. 46. Returns of all elections for members of the general assembly shall be made to the secretary of state.

ART. 47. In the year in which a regular election for a senator of the United States is to take place the members of the general assembly shall meet in the hall of the house of representatives on the second Monday following the meeting of the general assembly, and proceed to said election.

TITLE III.—EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

ART. 48. The supreme executive power of the state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Louisiana. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and together with the lieutenant governor, chosen for the same term, be elected as follows: The qualified electors for representatives shall vote for governor and lieutenant governor at the time and place of voting for representatives; the returns of every election shall be sealed up and transmitted by the proper returning officer to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives on the second day of the session of the general assembly then to be holden. The members of the general assembly shall meet in the house of representatives to examine and count the votes. The person having the greatest number of votes for governor shall be declared duly elected; but in case of a tie vote between two or more candidates, one of them shall immediately be chosen governor by joint vote of the members of the general assembly. The person having the greatest number of votes polled for lieutenant governor shall be lieutenant governor; but in case of a tie vote between two or more candidates, one of them shall be immediately chosen lieutenant governor by joint vote of the members of the general assembly.

ART. 49. No person shall be eligible to the office of governor or lieutenant governor who is not a citizen of the United States, and a resident of this state two years next preceding his election.

ART. 50. The governor shall be ineligible for the succeeding four years after the expiration of the time for which he shall have been elected.

ART. 51. The governor shall enter on the discharge of his duties on the second Monday in January next ensuing his election, and shall continue in office until the Monday next succeeding the day that his successor shall be declared duly elected, and shall have taken the oath or affirmation required by the constitution.

ART. 52. No member of congress or any person holding office under the United States government shall be eligible to the office of governor or lieutenant governor.

ART. 53. In case of impeachment of the governor, his removal from office, death, refusal or inability to qualify, or to discharge the powers and duties of his office, resignation or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term, or until the governor, absent or impeached, shall return or be acquitted, or the disability be removed. The general assembly may provide by law for the case of removal, impeachment, death, resignation, disability, or refusal to qualify, of both the governor and the lieutenant governor, declaring what officer shall act as governor; and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability be removed, or for the remainder of the term.

ART. 54. The lieutenant governor or officer discharging the duties of governor, shall, during his administration, receive the same compensation to which the governor would have been entitled had he continued in office.

ART. 55. The lieutenant governor shall by virtue of his office be president of the senate, but shall only vote when the senate is equally divided. Whenever he shall administer the government, or shall be unable to attend as president of the senate, the senators shall elect one of their own members as president of the senate for the time being.

ART. 56. The governor shall receive a salary of eight thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly on his own warrant.

ART. 57. The lieutenant governor shall receive a salary of three thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly upon his own warrant.

ART. 58. The governor shall have power to grant reprieves for all offenses against the state, and, except in cases of impeachment, shall, with the consent of the senate, have power to grant pardons, remit fines and forfeitures after conviction. In cases of treason he may grant reprieves until the end of the next session of the general assembly, in which the power of pardoning shall be vested. In cases when the punishment is not imprisonment at hard labor, the party upon being reprieved by the governor shall be released if in actual custody until final action by the senate.

ART. 59. He shall be commander-in-chief of the militia of this state, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States.

ART. 60. He shall nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the senate appoint all officers whose offices are established by the constitution, and whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for; Provided, however, That the general assembly shall have a right to prescribe the mode of appointment to all other offices established by law.

ART. 61. The governor shall have power to fill vacancies that may happen during the recess of the senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of the next session thereof, unless otherwise provided for in this constitution; but no person who has been nominated for office and rejected by the senate shall be appointed to the same office during the recess of the senate.

ART. 62. He may require information in writing from the officers in the executive department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.

ART. 63. He shall, from time to time, give the general assembly information respecting the situation of the state, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he may deem expedient.

ART. 64. He may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the general assembly at the seat of government, or at a different place if that should have become dangerous from an enemy or from epidemic; and in case of disagreement between the two houses as to the time of adjournment, he may adjourn them to such time as he may think proper, not exceeding four months.

ART. 65. He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

ART. 66. Every bill which shall have passed both houses shall be presented to the governor; if he approve he shall sign it; if he do not he shall return it with his objections to the house in which it originated, which shall enter the objections at large upon its journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of all the members present in that house shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent with the objections to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of the members present in that house it shall be a law. But in such cases the vote of both houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of members voting for or against the bill shall be entered on the journal of each house respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the governor within five days after it shall have been presented to him, it shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly, by adjournment, prevent its return, in which case the said bill shall be returned on the first day of the meeting of the general assembly after the expiration of said five days, or be a law.

ART. 67. Every order, resolution, or vote, to which the concurrence of both houses may be necessary, except on a question of adjournment, shall be presented to the governor, and before it shall take effect be approved by him, or, being disapproved, shall be repassed by two-thirds of the members present.

ART. 68. There shall be a secretary of state, who shall hold his office during the term for which the governor shall have been elected. The records of the state shall be kept and preserved in the office of the secretary; he shall keep a fair register of the official acts and proceedings of the governor, and when necessary shall attest them; he shall, when required, lay the said register and all papers, minutes, and vouchers relative to his office before either house of the general assembly, and shall perform such other duties as may be enjoined on him by law.

ART. 69. There shall be a treasurer of the state, and an auditor of public accounts, who shall hold their respective offices during the term of four years. At the first election under this constitution, the treasurer shall be elected for two years.

ART. 70. The secretary of state, treasurer, and auditor of public accounts shall be elected by the qualified electors of the state, and in case of any vacancy caused by the resignation, death, or absence of the secretary, treasurer, or auditor, the governor shall order an election to fill said vacancies; Provided, The unexpired term to be filled be more than twelve months; when otherwise, the governor shall appoint a person to perform the duties of the office thus vacant until the ensuing general election.

ART. 71. The treasurer and the auditor shall receive a salary of five thousand dollars per annum each. The secretary of state shall receive a salary of three thousand dollars per annum.

ART. 72. All commissions shall be in the name and by the authority of the state of Louisiana; and shall be sealed with the state seal, signed by the governor, and countersigned by the secretary of state.

TITLE IV.—JUDICIARY DEPARTMENT.

ART. 73. The judicial power shall be vested in a supreme court, in district courts, in parish courts, and in justices of the peace.

ART. 74. The supreme court, except in cases hereinafter provided, shall have appellate jurisdiction only; which jurisdiction shall extend to all cases when the matter in dispute shall exceed five hundred dollars; and to all cases in which the constitutionality or legality of any tax, toll, or impost of any kind or nature whatsoever, or any fine, forfeiture, or penalty imposed by a municipal corporation shall be in contestation, whatever may be the amount thereof; and in such cases the appeal shall be direct from the court in which the case originated to the supreme court; and in criminal cases, on questions of law only, whenever the punishment of death, or imprisonment at hard labor, or a fine exceeding three hundred dollars is actually imposed.

ART. 75. The supreme court shall be composed of one chief justice and four associate justices, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum. The chief justice shall receive a salary of seven thousand five hundred dollars, and each of the associate justices a salary of seven thousand dollars annually, payable quarterly on their own warrants. The chief justice and he associate justices shall be appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, for the term of eight years. They shall be citizens of the United States, and shall have practiced law for five years, the last three thereof next preceding their appointment in the state. The court shall appoint its own clerks, and may remove them at pleasure.

ART. 76. The supreme court shall hold its sessions in the city of New Orleans from the first Monday in the month of November to the end of the month of May. The general assembly shall have power to fix the sessions elsewhere during the rest of the year; until otherwise provided, the sessions shall be held as heretofore.

ART. 77. The supreme court, and each of the judges thereof, shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus at the instance of persons in actual custody in cases when they may have appellate jurisdiction.

ART. 78. No judgment shall be rendered by the supreme court without a concurrence of a majority composing the court. Whenever the majority can not concur in consequence of the recusation of any member of the court, the judges not recused shall have power to call upon any judge or judges of the district courts, whose duty it shall be when so called upon to preside in the place of the judge or judges recused, and to aid in determining the case.

ART. 79. All judges, by virtue of their office, shall be conservators of the peace throughout the state. The style of all process shall be "The state of Louisiana." All prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the state of Louisiana, and conclude "against the peace and dignity of the same."

ART. 80. The judges of all courts whenever practicable shall refer to the law in virtue of which every definitive judgment is rendered; but in all cases they shall adduce the reasons on which their judgment is founded.

ART. 81. The judges of all courts shall be liable to impeachment for crimes and misdemeanors. For any reasonable cause the governor shall remove any of them, on the address of two-thirds of the members elected to each house of the general assembly. In every such case the cause or causes for which such removal may be required shall be stated at length in the address, and inserted in the journal of each house.

ART. 82. No duties or functions shall ever be attached by law to the supreme or district courts, or the several judges thereof, but such as are judicial; and the said judges are prohibited from receiving any fees of office, or other compensation than their salaries, for any official duties performed by them.

ART. 83. The general assembly shall divide the state into judicial districts, which shall remain unchanged for four years, and for each district court one judge, learned in the law, shall be elected for each district, by a plurality of the qualified electors thereof. For each district there shall be one district court, except in the parish of Orleans, in which the general assembly may establish as many district courts as the public interests may require. Until otherwise provided there shall be seven district courts for the parish of Orleans, with the following original jurisdiction: The first, exclusive criminal jurisdiction; the second, exclusive probate jurisdiction; the third, exclusive jurisdiction of appeals from justices of the peace; the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh district courts, exclusive jurisdiction in all civil cases, except probate, when the sum in contest is above one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. These seven courts shall have such further jurisdiction, not inconsistent herewith, as shall be conferred by law.

The number of districts in the state shall not be less than twelve nor more than twenty. The clerks of the district courts shall be elected by the qualified electors of their respective parishes, and shall hold their office for four years.

ART. 84. Each of said judges shall receive a salary to be fixed by law, which shall not be increased or diminished during his term of office, and shall never be less than five thousand dollars. He must be a citizen of the United States, over the age of twenty-five years, and have resided in the state and practiced law therein for the space of two years next preceding his election. The judges of the district courts shall hold their office for the term of four years.

ART. 85. The district courts shall have original jurisdiction in all civil cases when the amount in dispute exceeds five hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. In criminal cases their jurisdiction shall be unlimited. They shall have appellate jurisdiction in civil ordinary suits, when the amount in dispute exceeds one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest.

ART. 86. For each parish court, one judge shall be elected by the qualified electors of the parish. He shall hold his office for the term of two years. He shall receive a salary and fees, to be provided by law. Until otherwise provided, each parish judge shall receive a salary of one thousand two hundred dollars per annum, and such fees as are established by law for clerks of district courts. He shall be a citizen of the United States and of this state.

ART. 87. The parish courts shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the justices of the peace in all cases when the amount in controversy is more than twenty-five dollars, and less than one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. They shall have exclusive original jurisdiction in ordinary suits, in all cases when the amount in dispute exceeds one hundred dollars and does not exceed five hundred dollars, subject to an appeal to the district court in all cases when the amount in contestation exceeds one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. All successions shall be opened and settled in the parish courts; and all suits in which a succession is either plaintiff or defendant may be brought either in the parish or district court, according to the amount involved. In criminal matters the parish courts shall have jurisdiction in all cases when the penalty is not necessarily imprisonment at hard labor or death, and when the accused shall waive trial by jury. They shall also have the power of committing magistrates and such other jurisdiction as may be conferred on them by law. There shall be no trial by jury before the parish courts.

ART. 88. In all probate matters, when the amount in dispute shall exceed five hundred dollars, exclusive of interest, the appeal shall be directly from the parish to the supreme court.

ART. 89. The justices of the peace shall be elected by the electors of each parish, in the manner to be provided by the general assembly. They shall hold office for the term of two years, and their compensation shall be fixed by law. Their jurisdiction in civil cases shall not exceed one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest, subject to an appeal to the parish courts in all cases when the amount in dispute shall exceed ten dollars, exclusive of interest. They shall have such criminal jurisdiction as shall be provided for by law.

ART. 90. In any case when the judge may be recused, and when he is not personally interested in the matters in contestation, he shall select a lawyer having the qualifications required for a judge of his court to try such cases. And when the judge is personally interested in the suit, he shall call upon the parish or district judge, as the case may be, to try the case.

ART. 91. The general assembly shall have power to vest in the parish judges the right to grant such orders and to do such acts as may be deemed necessary for the furtherance of the administration of justice; and in all cases the power thus granted shall be specified and determined.

ART. 92. There shall be an attorney general for the state, who shall be elected by the qualified electors of the state at large. He shall receive a salary of five thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly on his own warrant, and shall hold his office for four years. There shall be a district attorney for each judicial district of the state, who shall be elected by the qualified electors of the judicial district. He shall receive a salary of fifteen hundred dollars, payable quarterly on his own warrant, and shall hold his office for four years.

ART. 93. There shall be a sheriff and coroner elected by the qualified electors of each parish, except the parish of Orleans. In the parish of Orleans there shall be elected by the qualified electors of the parish at large one sheriff for the criminal court, who shall be the executive officer of said court, and shall have charge of the parish prison. There shall also be elected by the qualified electors of the parish at large one sheriff, who shall be the executive officer of the civil courts, and who shall perform all other duties heretofore devolving upon the sheriff of the parish of Orleans, except those herein delegated to the sheriff of the criminal court. The qualified electors of the city of New Orleans, residing below the middle of Canal street, shall elect one coroner for that district, and the qualified electors of the city of New Orleans, residing above the middle of Canal street, together with those residing in that part of the parish known as Orleans right bank, shall elect one coroner for that district. All of said officers shall hold their office for two years; and receive such fees of office as may be prescribed by law.

ART. 94. No judicial powers, except as committing magistrates, in criminal cases, shall be conferred on any officers other than those mentioned in this title; except such as may be necessary in towns and cities; and the judicial powers of such officer shall not extend further than the cognizance of cases arising under the police regulations of towns and cities in the state. In any case where such officers shall assume jurisdiction over other matters than those which may arise under police regulations, or under their jurisdiction, as committing magistrates, they shall be liable to an action of damages in favor of the party injured, or his heirs; and a verdict in favor of the party injured shall, ipso facto, operate a vacation of the office of said officer.

TITLE V.—IMPEACHMENT.

ART. 95. The power of impeachment shall be vested in the house of representatives.

ART. 96. Impeachments of the governor, lieutenant governor, attorney general, secretary of state, auditor of public accounts, state treasurer, superintendent of public education, and of the judges of the inferior courts, justices of the peace excepted, shall be tried by the senate; the chief justice of the supreme court, or the senior associate judge thereof, shall preside during the trial of such impeachments. Impeachments of the judges of the supreme court shall be tried by the senate. When sitting as a court of impeachment the senators shall be upon oath or affirmation, and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the senators present.

ART. 97. Judgments in cases of impeachment shall extend only to removal from office, and disqualification from holding any office of honor, trust, or profit in the state; but the convicted parties shall nevertheless be subject to indictment, trial, and punishment according to law.

TITLE VI.—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

ART. 98. Every male person of the age of twenty-one years or upward, born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and a resident of this state one year next preceding an election, and the last ten days within the parish in which he offers to vote, shall be deemed an elector, except those disfranchised by this constitution, and persons under interdiction.

ART. 99. The following persons shall be prohibited from voting and holding any office: All persons who shall have been convicted of treason, perjury, forgery, bribery, or other crime punishable in the penitentiary, and persons under interdiction.

All persons who are estopped from claiming the right of suffrage by abjuring their allegiance to the United States government, or by notoriously levying war against it, or adhering to its enemies, giving them aid or comfort, but who have not expatriated themselves, nor have been convicted of any of the crimes mentioned in the first paragraph of this article, are hereby restored to the said right, except the following: Those who held office, civil or military, for one year or more under the organization styled "The Confederate States of America;" those who registered themselves as enemies of the United States; those who acted as leaders of guerrilla bands during the late rebellion; those who in the advocacy of treason wrote or published newspaper articles or preached sermons during the late rebellion, and those who voted for and signed an ordinance of secession in any state. No person included in these exceptions shall either vote or hold office until he shall have relieved himself by voluntarily writing and signing a certificate setting forth that he acknowledges the late rebellion to have been morally and politically wrong, and that he regrets any aid and comfort he may have given it; and he shall file the certificate in the office of the secretary of state, and it shall be published in the official journal;

Provided, That no person who prior to the first of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, favored the execution of the laws of the United States popularly known as the reconstruction acts of congress, and openly and actively assisted the loyal men of the state in their efforts to restore Louisiana to her position in the Union, shall be held to be included among those herein excepted. Registrars of voters shall take the oath of any such person as prima facie evidence of the fact that he is entitled to the benefit of this proviso.

ART. 100. Members of the general assembly and all other officers, before they enter upon the duties of their offices, shall take the following oath or affirmation: "I, (A. B.,) do solemnly swear (or affirm,) that I accept the civil and political equality of all men, and agree not to attempt to deprive any person or persons on account of race, color, or previous condition, of any political or civil right, privilege, or immunity enjoyed by any other class of men. That I will support the constitution and laws of the United States and the constitution and laws of this state, and that I will faithfully and impartially discharge and perform all the duties incumbent on me as —— according to the best of my ability and understanding. So help me God."

ART. 101. Treason against the state shall consist only in levying war against it, or in adhering to its enemies—giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason except on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on his confession in open court.

ART. 102. All penalties shall be proportioned to the nature of the offense.

ART. 103. The privilege of free suffrage shall be supported by laws regulating elections, and prohibiting under adequate penalties all undue influence thereon from power, bribery, tumult, or other improper practice.

ART. 104. No money shall be drawn from the treasury but in pursuance of specific appropriations made by law. A statement and account of receipts and expenditures of all public moneys shall be made annually, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law; and the first general assembly convening under this constitution shall make a special appropriation to liquidate whatever portion of the debt of this convention may at that time remain unpaid or unprovided for.

ART. 105. All civil officers of the state at large shall be voters of and reside within the state; and all district or parish officers shall reside within their respective districts or parishes, and shall keep their offices at such place therein as may be required by law.

ART. 106. All civil officers shall be removable by an address of two-thirds of the members elect to each house of the general assembly, except those whose removal is otherwise provided for by this constitution.

ART. 107. In all elections by the people the vote shall be taken by ballot; and in all elections by the senate and house of representatives, jointly or separately, the vote shall be given viva voce.

ART. 108. None but citizens of the United States and of this state shall be appointed to any office of trust or profit in this state.

ART. 109. The laws, public records, and the judicial and legislative proceedings of the state shall be promulgated, and preserved in the English language; and no law shall require judicial process to be issued in any other than the English language.

ART. 110. No ex post facto or retroactive law, nor any law impairing the obligation of contracts, shall be passed; nor vested rights be divested, unless for purposes of public utility, and for adequate compensation made.

ART. 111. Whenever the general assembly shall contract a debt exceeding in amount the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, unless in case of war, to repel invasion, or suppress insurrection, it shall, in the law creating the debt, provide adequate ways and means for the payment of the current interest, and of the principal when the same shall become due; and the said law shall shall be irrepealable until principal and interest be fully paid; or unless the repealing law contain some adequate provision for the payment of the principal and interest of the debt.

ART. 112. The general assembly shall provide by law for all change of venue in civil and criminal cases.

ART. 113. The general assembly may enact general laws regulating the adoption of children, emancipation of minors, and the granting of divorces; but no special law shall be passed relating to particular or individual cases.

ART. 114. Every law shall express its object or objects in its title.

ART. 115. No law shall be revived or amended by reference to its title; but in such case the revived or amended section shall be re-enacted and published at length.

ART. 116. The general assembly shall never adopt any system or code of laws by general reference to such system or code of laws; but in all cases shall specify the several provisions of the law it may enact.

ART. 117. No person shall hold or exercise at the same time more than one office of trust or profit except that of justice of the peace or notary public.

ART. 118. Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state; all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law; the general assembly shall have power to exempt from taxation property actually used for church, school, or charitable purposes. The general assembly may levy an income tax upon all persons pursuing any occupation, trade, or calling. And all such persons shall obtain a license as provided by law. All tax on income shall be pro rata on the amount of income, or business done. And all deeds of sale made or that may be made by collectors of taxes, shall be received by courts in evidence as prima facie valid sales. The general assembly shall levy a poll tax on all male inhabitants of this state over twenty-one years old, for school and charitable purposes, which tax shall never exceed one dollar and fifty cents per annum.

ART. 119. No liability, either state, parochial, or municipal, shall exist for any debts contracted for or in the interest of the rebellion against the United States government.

ART. 120. The general assembly may determine the mode of filling vacancies in all offices for which provision is not made in this constitution.

ART. 121. The general assembly shall pass no law requiring a property qualification for office.

ART. 122. All officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their offices until their successors shall have been inducted into office; except in cases of impeachment or suspension.

ART. 123. The general assembly shall provide for the protection of the rights of married women to their dotal and paraphernal property, and for the registration of the same; but no mortgage or privilege shall hereafter affect third parties unless recorded in the parish where the property to be affected is situated. The tacit mortgages and privileges now existing in this state shall cease to have effect against third persons after the first day of January, eighteen hundred and seventy, unless duly recorded. The general assembly shall provide by law for the registration of all mortgages and privileges.

ART. 124. The general assembly, at its first session under this constitution, shall provide an annual pension for the veterans of eighteen hundred and fourteen and eighteen hundred and fifteen residing in the state.

ART. 125. The military shall be in subordination to the civil power.

ART. 126. It shall be the duty of the general assembly to make it obligatory upon each parish to support all paupers residing within its limits.

ART. 127. All agreements, the consideration of which was confederate money, notes, or bonds, are null and void; and shall not be enforced by the courts of this state.

ART. 128. Contracts for the sale of persons are null and void; and shall not be enforced by the courts of this state.

ART. 129. The state of Louisiana shall never assume nor pay any debt or obligation contracted or incurred in aid of the rebellion; nor shall this state ever in any manner claim from the United States or make any allowance or compensation for slaves emancipated or liberated in any way whatever.

ART. 130. All contracts made and entered into under the pretended authority of any governments heretofore existing in this state, by which children were bound out without the knowledge or consent of their parents, are hereby declared null and void; nor shall any child be bound out to any one for any term of years, while either one of its parents live, without the consent of such parent, except in cases of children legally sent to the house of correction.

ART. 131. The seat of government shall be established at the city of New Orleans, and shall not be removed without the consent of two-thirds of the members of both houses of the general assembly.

ART. 132. All lands sold in pursuance of decrees of courts shall be divided into tracts of from ten to fifty acres.

ART. 133. No judicial powers shall be exercised by clerks of courts.

ART. 134. No soldier, sailor, or marine in the military or naval service of the United States shall hereafter acquire a residence in this state by reason of being stationed or doing duty in the same.

TITLE VII.—PUBLIC EDUCATION.

ART. 135. The general assembly shall establish at least one free public school in every parish throughout the state, and shall provide for its support by taxation or otherwise. All children of this state between the ages of six (6) and twenty-one (21) shall be admitted to the public schools or other institutions of learning sustained or established by the state, in common, without distinction of race, color, or previous condition. There shall be no separate schools or institutions of learning established exclusively for any race by the state of Louisiana.

ART. 136. No municipal corporation shall make any rules or regulations contrary to the spirit and intention of article one hundred and thirty-five (135.)

ART. 137. There shall be elected by the qualified voters of this state a superintendent of public education, who shall hold his office for four years. His duties shall be prescribed by law, and he shall have the supervision and the general control of all public schools throughout this state. He shall receive a salary of five thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly on his own warrant.

ART. 138. The general exercises in the public schools shall be conducted in the English language.

ART. 139. The proceeds of all lands heretofore granted by the United States for the use and support of public schools, and of all lands or other property which may hereafter be bequeathed for that purpose, and of all lands which may be granted or bequeathed to the state, and not granted or bequeathed expressly for any other purpose which may hereafter be disposed of by the state, and the proceeds of all estates of deceased persons to which the state may be entitled by law, shall be held by the state as a loan, and shall be and remain a perpetual fund on which the state shall pay an annual interest of six per cent, which interest, with the interest of the trust fund deposited with this state by the United States, under the act of congress approved June the twenty-third, eighteen hundred and thirty-six, and the rent of the unsold lands, shall be appropriated to the support of such schools, and this appropriation shall remain inviolable.

ART. 140. No appropriation shall be made by the general assembly for the support of any private school, or any private institution of learning whatever.

ART. 141. One half of the funds derived from the poll tax herein provided for shall be appropriated exclusively to the support of the free public schools throughout the state, and the university of New Orleans.

ART. 142. A university shall be established and maintained in the city of New Orleans. It shall be composed of a law, a medical, and a collegiate department, each with appropriate faculties. The general assembly shall provide by law for its organization and maintenance; Provided, That all departments of this institution of learning shall be opened in common to all students capable of matriculating. No rules or regulations shall be made by the trustees, faculties, or other officers of said institution of learning, nor shall any laws be made by the general assembly violating the letter or spirit of the articles under this title.

ART. 143. Institutions for the support of the insane, the education and support of the blind and the deaf and dumb, shall always be fostered by the state, and be subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by the general assembly.

TITLE VIII.—MILITIA.

ART. 144. It shall be the duty of the general assembly to organize the militia of the state; and all able-bodied male citizens between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, not disfranchised by the laws of the United States and of this state, shall be subject to military duty.

ART. 145. The governor shall appoint all commissioned officers, subject to confirmation or rejection by the senate, except the staff officers, who shall be appointed by their respective chiefs, and commissioned by the governor. All militia officers shall take and subscribe to the oath prescribed for officers of the United States army and the oath prescribed for officers in this state.

ART. 146. The governor shall have power to call the militia into active service for the preservation of law and order, or when the public safety may require it. The militia when in active service shall receive the same pay and allowances as officers and privates, as is received by officers and privates in the United States army.

TITLE IX.—MODE OF REVISING THE CONSTITUTION.

ART. 147. Any amendment or amendments to this constitution may be proposed in the senate or house of representatives, and if the same shall be agreed to by two-thirds of the members elected to each house, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be entered on their respective journals, with the yeas and nays taken thereon; and the secretary of state shall cause the same to be published three months before the next general election for representatives to the general assembly, in at least one newspaper in every parish in the state in which a newspaper shall be published. And such proposed amendment or amendments shall be submitted to the people at said election; and if amajority of the voters at said election shall approve and ratify such amendment or amendments, the same shall become a part of this constitution. If more than one amendment shall be submitted at one time, they shall be submitted in such manner and form that the people may vote for or against each amendment separately.

TITLE X.—SCHEDULE.

ART. 148. The ordinance of secession of the state of Louisiana, passed twenty-sixth of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, is hereby declared to be null and void. The constitution adopted in eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and all previous constitutions in the state of Louisiana, are declared to be superseded by this constitution.

ART. 149. All rights, actions, prosecutions, claims, contracts, and all laws in force at the time of the adoption of this constitution, and not inconsistent therewith, shall continue as if it had not been adopted; all judgments and judicial sales, marriages, and executed contracts made in good faith, and in accordance with the existing laws in this state, rendered, made, or entered into, between the twenty-sixth day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, and the date when this constitution shall be adopted are hereby declared to be valid, except the following laws:

"An act to authorize the widening of the new canal and basin," approved March fourteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven.

"An act to amend and re-enact the one hundred and twenty-first section of an act entitled, 'An act relative to crimes and offenses,'" approved December twentieth, eighteen hundred and sixty-five.

"An act for the punishment of persons for tampering with, persuading, or enticing away, harboring, feeding, or secreting laborers, servants, or apprentices," approved December twenty-first, eighteen hundred and sixty-five.

"An act to punish, in certain cases, the employers of laborers and apprentices," approved December twenty-first, eighteen hundred and sixty-five.

"An act in relation to exemption from state, parish, and city taxes for the years eighteen hundred and sixty-two, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and eighteen hundred and sixty-five, in certain cases." Certified sixteenth March, eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

"An act granting ferry privileges to C. K. Marshall, his heirs, or assigns." Approved March tenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

"An act to authorize the board of levee commissioners of the levee district in the parishes of Madison and Carroll to issue bonds," etc., etc. Approved March twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven.

Section third of "An act to organize the police of New Orleans, and to create a police board therein." Approved twelfth February, eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

ART. 150. The laws relative to the duties of officers shall remain in force, though contrary to this constitution, and the several duties be performed by the respective officers, until the organization of the government under this constitution.

ART. 151. The general assembly shall provide for the removal of causes now pending in the courts of this state to courts created by or under this constitution.

TITLE XI.—ORDINANCE.

ART. 152. Immediately upon the adjournment of this convention this constitution shall be submitted for ratification to the registered voters of the state, in conformity to the act of congress passed March second, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, entitled "An act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel states," and the acts supplementary thereto.

ART. 153. The election for the ratification of the constitution shall be held on Friday and Saturday, the seventeenth and eighteenth days of April, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, at the places now prescribed by law; and the polls shall be kept open from 7 o'clock A. M. to 7 o'clock P. M. At that election all those in favor of ratifying the constitution shall have written or printed on their ballots "For the constitution," and those opposed to ratifying the constitution shall have written or printed on their ballots "Against the constitution."

ART. 154. In order to establish a civil government, as required by act of congress, passed March twenty-third, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, an election shall be held at the same time and place at which the constitution is submitted for ratification for all state, judicial, parish, and municipal officers, for members of the general assembly, and for congressional representatives, at which election the electors who are qualified under the reconstruction acts of congress shall vote, and none others; Provided, That any elector shall be eligible to any office under any municipal corporation in this state.

ART. 155. At the election for the ratification of the constitution, and for officers of the civil government as required by congress, all registered electors may vote in any parish where they have resided for ten days next preceding said election, and at any precinct in the parish, upon presentation of their certificates of registration, affidavit, or other satisfactory evidence that they are entitled to vote as registered electors.

ART. 156. The same registrars and commissioners who shall be appointed by the commanding general of the fifth military district to superintend the election for the ratification or rejection of the constitution shall also, at the same time and place, superintend the election for all officers and representatives herein ordered; provided they be authorized so to act by the commanding general. And in case the commanding general should not so authorize said registrars and commissioners, the committee of seven appointed by this convention to take charge of the whole matter of the ratificatinn of the constitution and the election of civil officers shall appoint one registrar for each parish in the state, except the parish of Orleans, and one in each district of the parish of Orleans, counting Orleans right bank as one district, who shall, each in his parish or district, appoint a sufficient number of commissioners of election to hold the said election for the said civil officers and representatives at the same time and place as herein provided for.

ART. 157. Returns shall be made in duplicate, sworn to by the commissioners holding the election, and forwarded within three days thereafter to the registrars of the parish or district. The registrars shall immediately forward one copy of said returns to the chairman of the committee of seven, appointed by this convention, who shall, within ten days after the last return has been received, make proclamation of the result of said election.

ART. 158. All civil officers thus elected shall enter upon the discharge of their duties on the second Monday after the return of their election shall have been officially promulgated, or as soon as qualified according to law, and shall continue in office for the terms of their respective offices herein prescribed, said terms to date from the first Monday in November following the election.

ART. 159. The general assembly, elected under this constitution, shall hold its first session in the city of New Orleans on the third Monday after the official promulgation aforesaid, and proceed immediately upon its organization to vote upon the adoption of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States, proposed by congress, and passed June thirteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-six; said general assembly shall not have power to enact any laws relative to the per diem of members, or any other subject, after organization, until said constitutional amendment shall have been acted upon.

ART. 160. All registrars and commissioners appointed under this constitution shall, before entering upon their duties, take and subscribe the oath of office prescribed by congress, approved July second, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office;" the said oath of office shall be administered to each registrar by the chairman of the committee of seven and to each commissioner by the registrar appointing him.

ART. 161. All registrars, commissioners, and other officers necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this ordinance, except as otherwise provided for by the reconstruction acts of congress, shall be paid out of any funds raised by virtue of the tax ordinance adopted by the convention, December twenty-fourth, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, not otherwise appropriated.

Minute Clerk.

SEVERE ON THE COPPERHEADS.—The Natchitoches Spectator says:

We are surprised to see the names of a few rather prominent citizens of New Orleans affixed to a card in the papers, requesting Mr. Mullaly, of the Metropolitan Record and New York Vindicator, to deliver an address on the "State of the Country." He needed no invitation, but came South—like his prototype of the La Crosse Democrat—to gain a cheap notoriety by exhibiting himself on every possible occasion, drumming up subscribers for his penny paper. Such blustering ultra harangues can result in no good. Let these fire-eating agitators remain as silent now as they were during the war.

The St. Louis Republican of the 24th says:

Freights for all points were offering in liberal quantities, although rates continue low; an advance in the rates to New Orleans, however, took place, and now rate at 40c. per barrel for flour, 25c. per 100 lbs.; 30c. per sack for corn, and 35c. for oats, by steamer; the barge line taking at rates 5c. per barrel, 2½c. per 100 lbs., and sack less. The rate now established is barely a paying one, and it is to be hoped will be sustained.

EASTER MUSINGS.

A halo o'er the brow of morning must
Have heralded the dawning that proclaimed
A risen Savior; angels noiselessly
Were hov'ring round the portal of the tomb,
And loud their hallelujahs swelling, sped
Them to the heights of glory, telling there
The wondrous story of the triumph o'er
Its gloom; and heaven's arches echoed far
The resurrection anthem. Ne'er before
Had the seraphic minstrelsy attuned
Their lyres to theme like this; the chorus wide
Resounding strange, sweet harmony all earth
Pervaded. Nature seemed an altar whence
The incense of thanksgiving rose on high.

Soon Mary came unto the sepulchre
With offerings of love, ere yet the tints
Of gray in eastern sky were softened by
The brighter ones preceding early day.
She saw the stone was rolled away, and stood
With wond'ring gaze, yet failed to comprehend
That spirit hands the change had wrought.
Then, hast'ning forth with eager step, she met
The two disciples, Peter and the loved
One. "They the Lord have taken, and I know
Not where they've laid him" was the greeting that
She gave them; pressing on, the sepulchre
They found deserted—here "the linen clothes,"
And there the "napkin wrapped together," as
With care the drapings of the grave were laid
Aside, yet no conception of the great
Event, which scripture had so long foretold,
Could chase the shadows that enveloped their Despairing hearts; and angels, looking o'er
The battlements of heaven, marveled at Their unbelief.

"Then the disciples went Away again;" but Mary lingered near,
And as she wept, two shining ones revealed
Themselves, and asked, "Why weepest thou?" The tale
Of sorrow she repeated, knowing not
That Jesus listened, that her grief had stirred
His loving sympathy. "Whom seekest thou?"
He asked; but tears her eyes were blinding, and
The question roused no recognition, till
She heard her name pronounced in tones that thrilled
With joy her inmost soul, and "Master!" she Replied. "Touch me not yet," he said, "for I Am not ascended to my Father; go
And tell my brethren all." The victory
O'er death and sin had been achieved, and now
The conqueror the homage of the hosts
Of paradise received.

Such tidings ne'er
Before had been to our lost world announced,
And woman was the chosen messenger.
Oh Mary, first to greet our risen Lord!
We love thy memory, and fain thy zeal
Would emulate. M.

Jackson District.

FOREST, Miss., April 6, 1868.

MR. EDITOR:

Allow me to break a four weeks' silence which the pressing demands of my district imposed, and tell your readers of our quarterly meetings, hoping thereby to exhibit our progress.

ENTERPRISE.

I visited Enterprise March 3, and remained there until the ninth. Considerable improvement had been made during the quarter. Miss Edmonia Highgate, formerly of New Orleans, had established a fine day and Sunday school. A revival of energy took place after she commenced her labors; windows were put in the church, and the rude seats gave way to well-made benches. The attendance at quarterly conference was good. The brethren came in from all parts of the northern half of Clark county and made good reports.

At our meeting on Sabbath eight were added to the church and the altar crowded with penitents. Brother Jones, the faithful minister in charge, concluded to carry on a protracted meeting.

SHUBUTA CIRCUIT.

This circuit under the pastoral charge of Rev. Jesse Fern has now eight appointments. Brother Fern is really a circuit preacher, and believes in aggression. He had added one appointment during the quarter—Bethel—with thirty-seven members. At the quarterly meeting and the meetings which followed twenty-one joined on probation. Rev. Hardy Ryan was present at the quarterly meeting, March 14 and 15, and did eminent service in the great cause. Two day schools have been established on this circuit, and are taught by competent Northern teachers; also two Sunday schools.

CANTON.

Few places in the state can boast of greater religious and educational progress than Canton. Our church building there is new, neat, and commodious. The people take a pride in it. At divine service it is usually crowded; they have organized a choir; it does good service. They have a good day school taught in it by Miss Mary Close, and the children are learning rapidly. The Sunday school, though only three months old, has fifty-three scholars and is still increasing. Our quarterly meeting March 21 and 22 was greatly blessed of the Lord. There were accessions, conversions, and convictions. Eighteen were added to the church. One new point with sixty members had been added to the charge during the quarter. Rev. A. Handy is the minister in charge. He is a faithful pastor and hard student. The people like him well.

MACON.

The church at Macon like that at Canton is an excellent building. It has enjoyed this pre-eminence over all our other churches in Mississippi that Bishop Ames preached there not long since, greatly to the delight of the colored people. The white Methodist Episcopal Church South was not opened for him to preach though there was an understanding that he would willingly preach for them. The school interest at Macon is highly prosperous. A Quaker family are the teachers; they have a school of two hundred and fifty scholars. Rev. Wesley Jones, minister in charge, is greatly encouraged in his work. Our quarterly meeting March 28 and 29 was greatly blessed of the Lord. Fourteen united with the church and a revival commenced.

SCOTT COUNTY.

Last Saturday and Sunday I labored in this county; preached twice at Forest on Saturday in the courthouse. The white as well as the colored people turned out largely. I am much indebted to General Tarbell, a gallant ex-federal officer, for personal attentions. He did much to make my mission a success, and defying the prejudices of his neighbors made me the partaker of distinguished and sumptuous hospitality.

Scott county, containing a population of 5000 white and 3000 colored persons, without a Methodist Episcopal church or school, was really missionary ground. I organized the Methodist Episcopal church at Forest on Saturday, and at Hillsboro on Sunday. Hillsboro, unlike most places in Scott county or in the state, contains a number of Union men. I was made welcome there to the use of the Methodist Episcopal Church South and preached in it, and within its walls organized the Methodist Episcopal church. Brother A. Simms, a man of fervent zeal and deep piety, was placed in charge. Thus the foundations of a good circuit are laid in Scott county. As yet they have only one meetinghouse—a comfortable log building, holding about one hundred and fifty persons.

Major Corliss, the bureau agent at Forest, has interested himself in school matters, and in a few days the work of education will be commenced.

I send along with this a few subscribers' names with the cash.

JAMES LYNCH,
P. E. Jackson District.

Slightly Prejudiced.

CAMDEN, Ala., April 6, 1868.

Dr. J. P. Newman:

DEAR DOCTOR—In order that our Northern friends may see and the better understand the bitter hostility of the unhung rebels of this state toward all who profess to believe that "all men were created free and equal," I inclose a copy of a letter of a leading commission house of Mobile to an honest honorable citizen of this county, (Wilcox), the only one in the county, a native born Southern man, who dared to vote for the constitution at the late election. As this is about the season of the year when our commission merchants make their annual pilgrimage to New York for money to do business with, it is perhaps proper that Northern capitalists should see who are benefited by the use of their means. Consignments of produce from the great West are prayed for by these same men, and it is to be hoped that a frankness such as they use may be of use to them in the way of teaching them a lesson. Please to pass them around. Yours, etc., J.

MOBILE, March 12, 1868.

L. M. Davis, Esq. Clifton, Alabama:

DEAR SIR—We wrote you on the 25th ultimo that we would make you an advance of $300. We now write to say that we can not do it, and to be frank with you will tell the reason. We are informed that you belong to that mean, contemptible party called Radical, a party that we loathe and abhor both individually and collectively, and want no dealings with any member of said party, and are astonished that any one claiming to be white, living in the South, should belong to such a party. However, in this free, enlightened, corrupt, rascally nigger government, every one has a right to his opinions and every one has a right to use his greenbacks as suits him.

Respectfully, etc.,
SMITH & ROBERTS.

Les Penses.

BY M ANNESLEY.

When we see a young man living beyond his salary we must conclude that he runs in debt or gets his money in some disreputable way.

It is a sad thing to live in secret dread of something being known of us which would blot our fair name forever in this world. The inconvenience of poverty is nothing in comparison with one vast perpetual regret. It is always best to keep a sacred friendship with a good conscience, then our solitude is happy. But no outward success can take away the sting of a defiled conscience.

The young should strive to live for the respect of their own judgment in riper years, for they will see things differently then in comparison with the ignorant light in which they now behold them. It is certainly a sad sight to look upon an aged person ruminating over a lost life, turning page after page blotted and soiled with what he knew how at the time to avoid. The sighs of regret fill all his lonely hours. Even if he has availed himself of the atonement of Jesus, still his faithful memory reproves him.

Some people plead for an honesty to speak out all they think; what would be the state of our families and neighborhoods if this was done? No, the etiquette and restraints of society are wholesome guards in preserving our peace and harmony.

The great secret of happiness is to be good company for one's self, then we walk in all the light we have. Self-torture is the hardest of all to bear. Very few have occasion to blame themselves for too much self-denial.

Intelligence from Our Mission Rooms.

OUR NEW CHINA MISSION.—We have already advised the church of the extension of our mission into the city of Kinkiang, in the province of Kiangsi, and that Revs. Brethren Hart and Todd, with their wives, were already at work in the new station. God had provided them three native Christians resident there, one of whom speaks good English. With this class, and with this English-speaking member, they commenced their work, and report to Dr. Maclay, our superintendent, as follows, dated January 1, 1868:

"You will be gratified to learn of the safe arrival of Brother and Sister Todd. You can not guess how pleased we were to welcome them to our home and common work. We had our first mission meeting to-day; we met in the name of God, and felt of a truth that the Savior was present to bless, and I believe that he will bless us from the beginning. Last Sabbath we had an excellent meeting with the Chinese, and to-morrow evening we have a prayer meeting for the Chinese Christians. I never felt better, or more like working for my Divine Master."

The brethren Allen and Lambuth, mentioned by Brother Todd, are missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal church South. Christian hearts coalesce in that far-off land; why should they not blend at home?

"I avail myself of the return of the steamer Fire Queen to write you that we are well and comfortably situated. We started from Shanghai on Christmas morning, and arrived here on Friday afternoon. We were kindly entertained at Shanghai by Brother Allen, though we spent most of the time at Brother Lambuth's. Mr. and Mrs. Lambuth did much to assist us in purchasing the articles we wished to buy, and in many ways were very kind to us. We found Brother Hart waiting for us at the jetty when the steamer arrived, and we were soon in the hotel. We are much pleased with the place, and doubt not we shall find a pleasant home here. Especially are the indications for prosperity in our work favorable. Our three Christians are all very intelligent, and one speaks English very well. We are getting our furniture made at reasonable prices, and articles of food are quite cheap. We expect very soon to be settled in our rooms, and to proceed to our work."

FOREIGN MISSIONS TO BECOME SELF-SUPPORTING.—One of the foundation principles of foreign missions is to shape their administration toward becoming self supporting churches as early as practicable. This is one of the first lessons taught in our foreign work, and we have good reason to believe that our brethren in these missions keep this end in view. It will take years for our foreign missions to reach this point, and some of them will not reach it before many years have passed. Our thoughts have been again turned to this subject by a letter from Dr. Maclay, superintendent of our China missions, just received at the mission rooms, and dated at Foochow, January 8, 1868. He says:

"We profoundly sympathize with you and the church in the crisis through which you are passing; you may be assured that we exercise great care in the disbursement of the funds placed at our disposal, and we are earnestly seeking to train our Chinese Christians to give money for the support of the gospel in China. Our policy is to make our native churches self-supporting at the earliest possible moment, and to use the funds of the missionary society for carrying on the gospel to the regions beyond. I hope you will not infer from this that the church may now reduce her missionary offering to China. The great work of evangelizing China has only commenced, and as God, in a most remarkable manner, is now opening up this empire to the gospel, the offerings of the church for the conversion of these untold millions must largely increase."

In a letter just received at the mission rooms from Dr. Maclay, he says, "We never before had such openings for preaching the gospel in this province." He refers to the work in and around Foochow.

Green Tea.

The conference room was thronged. The venerable Bishop adjusted his glasses and read the appointments. Mucklebarrow station, William Wexell. Two of the stewards, Brothers Smith and Jones, were at conference. They approached Mr. Wexell. We seemed to overhear them: "So this is Brother Wexell. You are our preacher. Don't know how the people will like it." Brother Jones here broke in: "No, I am afraid they won't be satisfied, for they expected Rev. Mr. Flop-and-go-high, and had arranged for him. Our people are very intelligent, and want a first-class man; but we can't always be suited, and perhaps it's all for the best."

Brother Smith resumed: "Be sure to be on hand next Sunday; our people always expect to see the new preacher the Sunday after conference, and our late preacher has let things run down desperately. He is a good man, but oh dear! not the man for Mucklebarrow. Hope you haven't a large family. Mucklebarrow folks don't think it best that the pastor should have a large family; it interferes with his wife's usefulness; she can not give attention to the Sunday school, the sewing circle, the visitation of the poor; can not accommodate the strangers that would otherwise stop at the parsonage." "And Brother Wexell," chimed in Brother Jones, "we are glad to learn that your oldest daughter plays splendidly on the cabinet organ; it will save the church fifty dollars a year."

By this time the Rev. Mr. Wexell, whose features took on a stupefied expression, managed to get in a word: "Have you a parsonage!" "No, our people think it not best to build one, so many of the ministers don't take good care of the property." "Have you any house in view?" "Well, no, ahem—it is true that—ahem—it was understood that if Mr. Flop-and-go-high was sent to us, we would take Squire Winter's new house, but, you know, that has all fell through."

Brother Wexell did not seem to see it, or comprehend why the Wexells shouldn't have a floor and a roof as well as the Flop-and-go-highs, but he meekly said: "Have you any heavy furniture?" "Well, no—our people have never bought any. You know, so many ministers' families don't take care of it."

"But Brother Flop-and-go-high has just told me that you had purchased beds, tables, bureaus, stove, dishes, and toilet sets,"

"Oh, that was talked of, but, you know, it has been given up."

"Given up! When? The change that causes me to be sent to Mucklebarrow was made at the last meeting of the cabinet; how could the matter have fallen through?"

"Oh, we—Brother Jones and I—telegraphed Plush, Sponge & Co. not to send the goods."

We greatly fear that Brother Wexell did not look serene, and there were some gleams which did not betoken a mind fully ready to endure all sorts of established insults. He resumed:

"If I come to Mucklebarrow on Saturday where are we to stop?"

"Well, we supposed you would board your folks somewhere and come over and look around for a house. It will be tough work to find one, but there are some that might do."

"Where do you say I am to stop?" The syllables were cut shorter.

"Well, most likely Sister Webb can give you a room for a day or two."

"What salary do you propose to pay?"

The faces of the stewards elongated and were composed into a manifest sadness as they answered, with an air worthy of the father of Miss Pecksniff:

"Brother Wexell, we hope you don't preach for money. True, you must be supported, but you ought to come on at once, and trust the Lord and the people!"

"What salary did you say?" said Brother Wexell, whose blood seemed to be coming up.

"Well, we thought, you know, that $300 would be about right. You can rent a small house for $150."

"Is that what you paid your last minister?"

"Well, no; but you know prices are coming down."

"Indeed! Brother Jones, you are a farmer I learn. How much below last year's prices will you agree to supply my flour, meal, fruit, and wood?"

Brother Jones' face took on a sort of pucker, as if he had swallowed very strong vinegar, and he slowly replied:

"Well, really, I—the fact is—those things are not so much cheaper as some others."

Brother Wexell's face must have been too near the gas, or something, for it was redder than at first, and he turned to Brother Smith:

"You are a merchant?"

"Yes, I am in the dry goods line, and also sell to the minister at a discount."

"Very well. Now tell me how much you pay your bookkeeper?"

"I have to pay him $1500, but you see—"

"Oh, yes, I begin to see. You also run a saw mill. What do you pay your engineer?"

"A hundred dollars a month. But you see—"

"Never mind what you see—I am seeing some things. Please tell me another thing. By what law of temporal economy do you prove that while you offered Mr. Flop-and-go-high $2000, a new house and new furniture, I am to live on $800, rent my own house, and buy my own furniture?"

Just here a certain familiar voice seemed to say: "My dear, you are dreaming," and the vision vanished. We rubbed our eyes and pulled our ears. It was surely a dream, and yet it was so like something we had seen and heard, and Smith and Jones looked so natural, that we could almost file an affidavit that we knew them, or first cousins of theirs, long ago.

How we fell asleep again—how we dreamed about mean men—how we seemed to get stuck in a black swamp full of Smiths and Joneses instead of swamp ash and water-elms—how old parsonages seemed ready to topple down—how Jones stood by, slate in hand, to prove that $800 to a minister was worth more than $1500 to "another man,"—and how some men seemed meaner than there was any necessity for, how the familiar voice suggested that it was that last cup of green tea drank at Sister K—'s, and how there was another dream of another sort, we may tell one of these days.

Meanwhile, how is your parsonage? Have you fixed your estimates? Have you solemnly resolved that a minister is worth less per year than a village book-keeper or a saw-mill engineer? Have you?—Pittsburg Advocate.

Astronomical Speculations.

If two bodies were placed in space, without any forces acting on each other than their own gravity, they would immediately start to each other, and would rush together. The sun and planets, which constitute the stellar system to which our solar system belongs, are prevented from running together in one mass by their revolutions about each other. The revolutions of the planets around our sun, and of the statelites about their primaries, have been ascertained with that wonderful precision which is the just pride of astronomical science, and astronomers are now engaged in the sublime problem of unraveling the revolutions of the countless suns that make up our stellar system. Already the cluster of the Pleiades is indicated as the proximate locality of the centre around which our sun, with his attendant planets, is sweeping his vast orbit; and it is suggested that it is probably the common centre of the orbits of all the suns of our stellar system.

If the force of gravity extends across the inconceivable spaces which separate the several stellar systems of the universe, those systems must rush together, unless they are held apart by revolutions around each other.

If light were an emanation, as held by Newton, the spaces between the solid bodies of the universe might be absolutely empty; and, in that case, the revolutions of the bodies around each other might go on forever. On the other hand, if light is a vibration in a subtle fluid, the fluid might obstruct the motions of bodies revolving in it, and they must finally come together in one mass. The experiment so ingeniously devised by Arago, and carried out with such honorable regard for the fame of its designer by Messrs. Foucault, Ficeau and Bereque, to determine whether there is a difference in the velocity of light in its passage through air and water, has demonstrated that light is a vibration. It follows from this that, as far as light extends, space is filled with a material fluid which resists the motion of bodies revolving in it; and bodies within this space must gradually wind their way inward, and ultimately come together in one mass.

The moon must be drawing very closely nearer the earth, and the two bodies in the far distant future will come together. The solid crust of the earth will be broken up by the shock, an immense quantity of heat will be generated by the destruction of the moon's motion, and the two bodies will fuse together in one molten globe. As the new and enlarged earth is cooled upon its surface, a second series of geological deposits will be constituted, accompanied, perhaps, by strange and inconceivable forms of animal and vegetable life.

At the same time, the earth is winding its way inward toward the sun, and must ultimately fall, an inconsiderable member, into the vast glowing mass. The same fate awaits all the planets, and our solar system must one day be but a single globe. When this globe is cooled to the right temperature, it may be covered with a multitude of inhabitants, and astronomers may rise who will watch its revolutions among the associated suns of our stellar system. If their knowledge and intellect are equal to the science of our astronomers they will foresee the ultimate coming together of all these suns into a common globe. And not this only, for they will predict the final coming together of all the stellar systems of the visible universe into one mass of matter.—Scientific American.

"Taste Not, Touch Not."

The late Governor Briggs, of Massachusetts, was a well-known and able advocate of "total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks." He told me that he was once accosted by a lady at a large and fashionable party, who said, as he declined a glass of wine:

"Really, Governor Briggs, I think you are a little fanatical on this subject. What possible harm can a glass of wine do, taken at parties and weddings with one's friends?"

Governor Briggs replied, "If you will go by yourself into some corner here, and spend half an hour thinking over the families of your acquaintances and friends, and count the number of victims to intemperance in each family, and can then come back to me and say you think me fanatical in trying to avoid so great a danger for myself, and doing all I can to keep others from an end so common and so dreadful, I will take wine with you, if you wish me to do so, for I know you are a reasonable woman; but I feel very sure that you will come back agreeing with me that 'touch not, taste not' is the only safe rule."

She replied laughingly, "Of course I'll do it or anything else that you request, but don't expect me to be converted; for you radical reformers always exaggerate dangers."

She went and in half an hour returned pale, her eyes filled with tears, exclaiming: "O Governor Briggs, how could you ask me to do such a thing at a party! I am appalled; it is so dreadful to find that I do not know a family that does not number one victim, and some have had all their brightest and best fall by it—fathers, husbands, children; it is too dreadful to think of. I would not have believed it. You are quite right, and I will never ask you to drink wine, nor ever call you fanatical for not taking it."

Let any one think over the victims of intemperance he has known, and he will be convinced that Infinite Wisdom wrote this warning: "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright. At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

While I write this, I remember that my father, the late Major B——, who was also a warm advocate of total abstinence, told me of a dinner he once took with Judge ——, a man of uncommon ability, and at that time honored and esteemed. There was a decanter of wine on the table, and when Major B—— declined it saying "I am a believer in the total abstinence rule," the judge replied: "How can a man of your sense and moderation adopt such an extreme opinion! One glass of wine a day never hurt anybody yet, and never will;" and he drank his "one glass," and so did each of his noble, promising sons who sat with him at the table. My father's years were not prolonged to threescore; but long before he died Judge —— and his three sons had gone down to that grave over which our heavenly father has written, "No drunkard shall inherit the Kingdom of God."—American Messenger.

The Wrong Woman.

A distinguished professor and divine from this neighborhood was on a visit to some friends east of the mountains, and was introduced to a very respectable family which had two accomplished daughters—one of them very handsome, the other rather plain. After spending some weeks in the neighborhood, and having frequent opportunities of meeting the ladies, he became quite enamored with the younger and prettier of the sisters. He, however, returned home without showing any preference. He was a man of very sedate and studious habits, and soon became absorbed in his books, and for a time he seemed to forget his new acquaintances. But the image of one of them seemed to be continually before his mind. After having maturely considered the matter, and having, I have no doubt, sought guidance from on high, he concluded to commence a correspondence with the object of his affection. Unfortunately, or fortunately, as he afterward stated, he addressed the wrong lady. He had got their names transposed. The correspondence finally led to engagement. The day was fixed for the wedding, and the grave and reverend D. D. entered his appearance at the proper time. But what was his consternation to find that he was going to marry a lady he had not courted. But being a sensible and an honorable man, he said nothing about it, believing the hand of Providence was in the matter, and he was married to the sister of the girl he thought he had won.

Time wore on; she proved to be a most amiable, intelligent, and affectionate wife. He never told the story till after the younger sister was happily married. He never had reason to repent the mistake, and he to this day is firm in the belief that God so ordered it for his happiness. "All's well that ends well."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

A Baby Soliloquy.

I am here; and, if this is what they call the world, I don't think much of it. It's a very flannely world, and smells of paregoric awfully. It's a dreadful light world, and makes me blink, I tell you. And I don't know what to do with my hands; I think I'll dig with my fists in my eyes. No, I won't. I'll scrabble at the corner of my blanket and chew it up, and then I'll holler. Whatever happens, I'll holler. And the more paregoric they give me the louder I'll yell. That old nurse puts the spoon in the corner of my mouth in a very uneasy way, and keeps tasting my milk herself all the while. She spilled snuff in it last night, and when I hollered she trotted me. That comes of being a two days' old baby. Never mind; when I'm a man I'll pay her back good. There's a pin sticking in me now, and if I say a word about it I'll be trotted or fed, and I would rather have catnip tea. I'll tell you who I am. I found out today. I heard folks say, "Hush, don't wake up Emmeline's baby." That's me. I'm "Emmeline's baby," and I suppose that pretty white-faced woman over on the pillows is Emmeline.

No, I was mistaken, for a chap was in here just now, and wanted to see Bob's baby, and looked at me, and said I "was a funny little toad, and looked just like Bob." He smelt of cigars, and I'm not used to them. I wonder who else I belong to? Yes, there's another one—that's "Ganma," Emmeline told me, and she took me up and held me against her soft cheek, and said, "It was ganma's baby, so it was." I declare I do not know who I belong to; but I'll holler, and maybe I'll find out.

There comes Snuffy with catnip tea. The idea of giving babies catnip tea when they are crying for information! I'm going to sleep. I wonder if I don't look pretty red in the face? I wonder why my hands won't go where I want them to!

Giving a Tenth.

If a Christian may lawfully devote less than a tenth of his income to holy purposes, then Christianity has lowered the standard of a virtue, and that the virtue of liberality. The Jew who gave less than one-tenth was branded by his religion a sinner. And is it come to this, that our religion of love and sacrifice lets down the standard of this special virtue below the point where it stood when she came to warm our world? We know the ten thousand contrivances to escape from this conclusion. But however often you cite the difference between an agricultural and a commercial people; however much you talk of Levites, bribes, rent-charges, and adjustments; however many lanes you enter from your starting point, if you follow any one of them to its end, it will land you in front of this conclusion: "Christianity has lowered the standard of virtue," if a Christian does his whole duty in giving less than a tenth to God.

Expanding the Lungs.

Step out into the purest air you can find; stand perfectly erect, with head and shoulders back, and then fixing the lips as if you were going to whistle, draw the air through the lips into the lungs. When the chest is about half full gradually raise the arms, keeping them extended with the palms of the hands down as you suck in the air, so as to bring them over the head just as the lungs are quite full. Then drop the thumbs inward, and after gently forcing the arms backward and the chest open, reverse the process by which you draw your breath till the lungs are empty. This process should be repeated immediately after bathing, and also several times during the day. It is impossible to describe to one who has never tried it, the glorious sense of vigor which follows this exercise. It is the best expectorant in the world. We know a gentleman the measure of whose chest has been increased by this means some three or four inches during as many months.—Dr. Paine.

We have received from the Quartermaster General's Office two pamphlets. One is "A Statement of the disposition of some of the bodies of deceased Union Soldiers and prisoners of war, whose remains have been removed to National Cemeteries in the Southern and Southwestern States, Vol. I." The other is an "Alphabetical index to places of interment of deceased Union Soldiers in the various States and Territories, as specified in Rolls of Honor, Nos. 1 to 13."

The election to be held on the seventeenth and eighteenth instant will decide whether Louisiana shall resume her place in the Union under a loyal state and city government, or whether the new constitution, which secures equal rights to all men, shall be defeated. The loyal people of the whole nation are watching your action with great interest. Will you prove yourselves worthy of the great responsibilities imposed in this election, or will you disappoint the hopes of the friends of freedom and union in the great States of the North? If you fail to win a victory for loyalty in Louisiana you contribute to the final overthrow of the Republican party in the Presidential election this fall.

The State ticket headed by H. C. Warmoth represents loyalty and union, and has been so recognized by the Republican party of the whole nation, and the election of that ticket will be claimed as a victory for the Republican party, and an indorsement of the congressional plan of reconstruction. The election of any other ticket, headed by a man claiming to be loyal, will be claimed as a defeat of the Republican party, and as a victory for Andrew Johnson, Copperhead Democrats, and Rebels. The ratification of the new constitution, and the election of the Warmoth State ticket, will cause rejoicing in the hearts of all loyal men everywhere. The defeat of these will cause Democrats and Rebels to rejoice.

The election of the regular city ticket headed by Seth W. Lewis will be a victory for loyalty and Union, while the election of any other city ticket will be claimed as a defeat of the Republican party and a triumph for Johnson Democracy. Will any true lover of the Union refuse to vote for the regular nominees of the Republican party because the candidates are not his choice? If we ever succeed as a party we must learn that discipline without which political parties are powerless. The Democrats are preparing to divide the Republican party, and by uniting with the bolters defeat the regular nominees of the party. We do not believe any intelligent colored man will refuse to support the candidates of the regular State and City tickets. If there be such a man, he is unworthy the liberties and high privileges secured to him in a constitution which he labors to defeat, and by his vote against a principle and against the men who represent the Congressional Union Republican party of the country brings victory to rebels who destroyed their country in the vain attempt to rivet tighter the chains of the slave. The candidates of the regular Republican State and City tickets are the best offered for your suffrage, and we urge upon the loyal people of Louisiana to give them a hearty support. We can not afford to be defeated. The issues before us are of vital importance. The welfare and future prosperity of the whole country, and especially Louisiana, is involved in this election. Let us win a victory by the adoption of the Constitution and the triumphant election of our candidates, and a brighter era will dawn upon us. Let every loyal man in Louisiana who is eligible vote and work, and our victory is won.

Sold.

Nothing can be more pitiable than the present attitude of the Tribune and the bolters. They struck out in the bold nefarious attempt to break up the Republican party of the state, relying on two schemes. The first was to divide the colored vote. This was to be done by slanders on the Republican candidates and insidious appeals to the old creole colored element. The second was to bid high for the rebel support, by secret pledges, involving a complete bargain and sale of the colored votes to the Democratic rebel party.

The scheme was an act of treachery to the great Republican party of the nation, for had it succeeded it would have transferred the whole political power and influence of Louisiana to the Democratic party. It was worse, it was a betrayal of all the rights, liberties, and dearest hopes of the colored people into the hands of their implacable enemies. The scheme was gigantic, deep laid, atrocious, and remorselessly carried out. The Napoleon of this combination was Dr. Roudanez. But as Victor Hugo said, "God fought against him." His great combinations have miserably failed, because they were too nefariously wicked, too destructive, too fatal to all the liberties and rights of the loyal people of this state, and to the safety of the whole country, for Providence to permit their consummation. The colored people, with their unerring sagacity and judgment of men, and that intuitive detection of treachery which is so remarkable in them, penetrated his design, saw through all his plans, and repudiated and deserted him so unanimously that we doubt if the Democratic-Tribune-Taliaferro ticket receives one solitary colored vote in the state of Louisiana outside of its own candidates for office, and perhaps one or two of their first cousins. But this was not all. To complete the humiliation and the already overwhelming defeat of the arch-conspirator, the rebels with their characteristic treachery and contempt of all promises to a colored man, broke their faith with him, and have refused to vote for any man on his ticket except Taliaferro, and worse than all, head their Taliaferro ticket "Against the Constitution." While he thought he was drawing them on he was the fooled and they the foolers. After they had used him as far as they could, and pushed him up to the most desperate attempts to divide and break down the Republican party, they contemptuously threw him overboard as the British did Benedict Arnold. They refused to keep one of their promises, refuse to vote for Dumas because he is a nigger, refuse to vote for Crane or Smith, vote against the constitution, and take Taliaferro's name and put it at the head of the Democratic ticket, followed by the names of Voorhies, Peralta & Co.

Poor Roudanez! The Devil took him up onto the top of an exceeding high mountain in Camp street, and showed him all the power of the Democratic party, and "All the offices of Louisiana, including a United States senatorship, and said, all these will I give out to thee if thou wilt fall down and worship me;" and Roudanez did so, and the Devil having called all the little devils, and all the people of Louisiana to witness the obeisance, then laughed in his face, took him by the back of the neck and threw him from the top of that high mountain, and he is now—falling. Such is the fate of bolters and traitors.

Threats of Violence at the Polls.

The rebel press of this city are already commencing to use their favorite tactics. Harboring intentions of using violent and fraudulent measures at the elections, they begin the game by imputing these designs to the Republicans, thus seeking to nerve their followers to use violence, and arouse the passions, and also to intimidate quiet and law-abiding men.

The plain meaning of these hints and appeals to the passions of men is that the rebels will strive to provoke disturbances, and then throw the blame upon the Republicans. We warn them to beware of the repetition of the scenes of the thirtieth of July. All such deeds recoil furiously upon their instigators.

We say to Republicans, be peaceable, forbearing, and law-abiding, while you insist upon every right that the law gives you. Be firm, but prudent and calm; commit no violence.

We say to the military authorities, you are warned in time. The rebel press have advised their followers to come prepared for violence.

We also say to you there is danger, and will hold you responsible to the country and the United States Government for the preservation of the peace. If riots and bloodshed occur, it will be because the military authorities do not discharge their duty.

The Ballot Boxes.

We ask General Buchanan, for the sake of his own reputation as well as for the ends of justice, to place a military guard over the ballot boxes between the closing of the polls on Friday night and the opening of the same on Saturday morning, and to have them thus guarded in a public place, open to the inspection of all, in order that all parties may feel secure that there shall be no tampering with them.

It would also not be out of place, we think, to adopt the plan of General Meade, and allow a guard of civilians, appointed by each political party, to keep watch over them with the soldiers. There are unscrupulous registrars and clerks on the boards, whom we would not trust farther than we can see them. There is money enough to buy them. The temptation is great, and the times are so unsettled as to make men capable of more than even their ordinary rascality.

We hope that General Buchanan will accede to every possible reasonable precaution that may be asked of him to prevent fraud and assure the public of the security of the ballot boxes.

Colonel Simon Jones.

The above named gentleman is the regular Republican candidate for Congress in his district. He supports Warmoth and Dunn and the whole ticket. This should be reason enough for all Republicans to support him. We have heretofore published a sketch of the life of Colonel Jones. We have only time here to repeat that Colonel Jones is a tried and consistent Republican, and is capable of representing well the interests of his constituents. As a member of the convention he voted for all the provisions of the constitution securing the rights of the colored people.

His opponents are Mr. Straight, who is a supporter of the Bolters and the Taliaferro ticket. This of itself is sufficient to forfeit for him the confidence of every Republican.

Mr. Mann is the rebel and copperhead candidate, and will divide the supporters of Mr. Straight and Mr. Taliaferro. So there is no reason why Colonel Jones should not be easily elected.

Republicans, it is important that we have our friends in Congress. If Mr. Straight were the regular nominee, we should gladly support him. But he is not, and must share the fate of his company.

Vote for Colonel Jones.

Revivals.

A goodly number have been converted recently at Poet street and Marais street churches. At Sixth street extra meetings have been held with favorable results. Reports reach us from various churches in the country of revivals and conversions.

APPLETON'S RAILWAY AND STEAM NAVIGATION GUIDE.—This work for April has arrived, and like those of the previous months is well filled with just the information needed by the traveling public. It contains a large map, on which are laid out plans of the railways of the country, with the various connections; also smaller maps of each separate road, with the latest time-tables, etc. If you are going to travel it is just what you need.

Social Wine Drinking.

At an Episcopal convention a discussion on temperance brought up the "wine question." A part of the clergy advocated its entire disuse, and a part took the other side. At length an influential clergyman arose and made a vehement argument in favor of wine, denouncing the radical reformers for attempting to banish this token of hospitality from use. When he had resumed his seat a layman, trembling with emotion, rose and asked if it was allowed for him to speak. The chair having signified that he would be heard he said, "Mr. Moderator it is not my purpose in rising to answer the learned argument you have just listened to. My object is more humble, and I hope more practical. I once knew a father in moderate circumstances, who was at much inconvenience to educate a beloved son at college. Here this son became dissipated, but after he had graduated and returded to his father, the influence of home, acting upon a generous nature, actually reformed him. The father was overjoyed at the prospect that his cherished hopes of other days were still to be realized. Several years passed, when the young man having completed his professional study, and being about to leave his father, to establish himself in business, he was invited to dine with a neighboring clergyman, distinguished for hospitality and social qualities.

At this dinner wine was introduced and offered to this young man, who refused; pressed upon him, and again refused. This was repeated, and the young man was ridiculed for his singular abstinence. The young man was strong enough to overcome appetite; but he could not resist ridicule. He drank, and fell, and from that moment became a confirmed drunkard, and long since has found a drunkard's grave. "Mr. Moderator," continued the old man, with streaming eyes, "I am that father; and it was at the table of the clergyman who has just taken his seat that this token of hospitality ruined the son I shall never cease to mourn.—Christian Secretary.

Links in a Chain.

The blast that drove the storm-clouds across the heavens shook the oak, and the acorn cup, loosened from its fruit, fell on the pathway.

The clouds burst, and the rain-drop filled the acorn cup. A robin, wearied by the sultry heat of an autumn day, hopped along the path when the storm was over, and drank of the rain-drop. Refreshed and gladdened he flew to his favorite perch in the ivy that overhung the poet's window, and there he trilled his sweetest, happiest song.

The poet heard, and rising from his day-dream, wrote a chant of grateful rejoicing.

The chant went forth into the great world and entered the house of sorrow, and uttered its heart-stirring accents beside the couch of sickness. The sorrowful were comforted, the sick were cheered.

Many voices praised the poet. He said, "The chant was inspired by the robin's song."

"My throat would have been too dry to sing," said the robin," if I had not found that sweet drop of water that was in the acorn cup."

"I should have sunk into the earth had not the acorn cup been there to receive me," said the rain-drop.

"I would not have been there to receive you but for the angry blast," said the acorn cup.

And so they that were comforted praised the blast; but the blast replied, "Praise him at whose word the stormy wind ariseth and who from darkness can bring light, making his mercies oftentimes to pass through unseen and unknown channels, and bringing in due time, by his own way, the grateful chant from the angry storm-cloud."

Converted Prize-Fighter.

Richard Weaver, the converted prize-fighter and collier, is one of the most remarkable men in England. Before his conversion he was ignorant, brutal, and a terror to his neighborhood. His first act after his reformation was to drive a Bible van within the inclosure of a horse race, and taking off his coat and cravat, went to work selling Bibles and singing sacred songs, undaunted amid threats of personal violence, till he actually broke up the gambling booths and spread consternation among the revelers. He is now one of the most persuasive and eloquent preachers in England. Popular alike in the rural districts and in the cities, he can crowd the largest theatres overflow the largest churches, and among the miners, colliers, and operatives in factories he can count his audiences by thousands when he preaches in the fields. He is expected to be in America shortly.

TO PREACHERS.—Be short and lively. Load up before you enter the sacred desk; announce your text when the time comes with distinctness, and dash right into the discussion. Fire at a point blank range. Keep your eye on the drowsy hearer until he becomes wide awake. Hold the children and those restless young folks under your command. "Give a portion" to the aged ones, who try so hard to catch every syllable you utter, and under those modern pulpit orators lose about half. Stir all the people! "Shake off dull sloth" in manner and tone. Be in earnest—tremendously in earnest! Time is passing; eternity is near; judgment is at the door. Make an impression if you can inside of thirty minutes; if not, ask God to give his blessing and close.—Independent.

CONSTITUTION

—OF THE—

STATE OF LOUISIANA.

Adopted in Convention at New Orleans, Saturday, March 7, 1868.

PREAMBLE.

We, the people of Louisiana, in order to establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this constitution.

CONSTITUTION.

TITLE I.—BILL OF RIGHTS.

ARTICLE 1. All men are created free and equal, and have certain inalienable rights; among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. To secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

ART. 2. All persons, without regard to race, color, or previous condition, born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and residents of this state for one year, are citizens of this state. The citizens of this state owe allegiance to the United States; and this allegiance is paramount to that which they owe to the state. They shall enjoy the same civil, political, and public rights and privileges, and be subject to the same pains and penalties.

ART. 3. There shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in this state, otherwise than for the punishment of crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

ART. 4. The press shall be free; every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of this liberty.

ART. 5. The right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition the government, or any department thereof, shall never be abridged.

ART. 6. Prosecutions shall be by indictment or information. The accused shall be entitled to a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the parish in which the offense was committed, unless the venue be changed. He shall not be compelled to give evidence against himself; he shall have the right of being heard by himself or counsel; he shall have the right of meeting the witnesses face to face, and shall have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor. He shall not be tried twice for the same offense.

ART. 7. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient securities, unless for capital offenses, where the proof is evident, or the presumption great, or unless after conviction, for any crime or offense punishable with death or imprisonment at hard labor. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended.

ART. 8. Excessive bail shall not be required; excessive fines shall not be imposed; nor cruel or unusual punishments inflicted.

ART. 9. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated; and no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, or the person or things to be seized.

ART. 10. All courts shall be open; and every person for injury done him in his land, goods, person, or reputation shall have adequate remedy by due process of law, and justice administered without denial or unreasonable delay.

ART. 11. No law shall be passed fixing the price of manual labor.

ART. 12. Every person has the natural right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience. No religious test shall be required as a qualification for office.

ART. 13. All persons shall enjoy equal rights and privileges upon any conveyance of a public character; and all places of business, or of public resort, or for which a license is required by either state, parish, or municipal authority, shall be deemed places of a public character, and shall be opened to the accommodation and patronage of all persons, without distinction or discrimination on account of race or color.

ART. 14. The rights enumerated in this title shall not be construed to limit or abridge other rights of the people not herein expressed.

TITLE II.—LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

ART. 15. The legislative power of the state shall be vested in two distinct branches; the one to be styled the house of representatives, the other the senate, and both the general assembly of the state of Louisiana.

ART. 16. The members of the house of representatives shall continue in office for two years from the day of the closing of the general elections.

ART. 17. Representatives shall be chosen on the first Monday in November every two years, and the election shall be completed in one day. The general assembly shall meet annually on the first Monday in January, unless a different day be appointed by law, and their sessions shall be held at the seat of government.

ART. 18. Every elector under this constitution shall be eligible to a seat in the house of representatives; and every elector who has reached the age of twenty-five years, shall be eligible to the senate; Provided, that no person shall be a representative or senator unless at the time of his election he be a qualified elector of the representative or senatorial district from which he is elected.

ART. 19. Elections for members of the general assembly shall be held at the several election precincts established by law.

ART. 20. Representation in the house of representatives shall be equal and uniform; and after the first general assembly elected under this constitution shall be ascertained and regulated by the total population, each parish in the state being entitled to at least one representative. A census of the state by state authority shall be taken in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-five, and every ten years thereafter. In case of informality, omission, or error in the census returns from any parish or election district, the general assembly may order a new census taken in such parish or election district; but until the state census of eighteen hundred and seventy five, the apportionment of the state shall be made on the basis of the census of the United States for the year eighteen hundred and seventy.

ART. 21. The general assembly, at the first session after the making of each enumeration, shall apportion the representation amongst the several parishes and representative districts, on the basis of the total population, as aforesaid. A representative number shall be fixed, and each parish and representative district shall have as many representatives as the number of its total population will entitle it to have; and an additional representative for any fraction exceeding one-half of the representative number. The number of representatives shall never exceed one hundred and twenty, nor be less than ninety.

ART. 22. Until an apportionment shall be made in accordance with the provisions of article 20, the representation in the senate and house of representatives shall be as follows:

The first, second, and third representative districts of New Orleans shall form one senatorial district, and elect three senators.

The fourth, fifth, and sixth representative districts of New Orleans shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The seventh, eighth, and ninth representative districts of New Orleans and the parish of St. Bernard shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The tenth representative district of New Orleans shall form one district, and elect one senator.

Orleans right bank and the parish of Plaquemines shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Jefferson, St. Charles, and St. John Baptist shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Ascension and St. James shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Assumption, Lafourche, and Terrebonne shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Vermillion and St. Mary shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Calcasieu, Lafayette, and St. Landry shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Livingston, St. Helena, Washington, and St. Tammany shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Pointe Coupee, East Feliciana, and West Feliciana shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parish of East Baton Rouge shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of West Baton Rouge, Iberville, and St. Martin shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Concordia and Avoyelles shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Tensas and Franklin shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Carroll, Madison, and Morehouse shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parishes of Ouachita and Caldwell shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Jackson and Union shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Bossier, Bienville, and Claiborne shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parish of Caddo shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of De Soto, Natchitoches, and Sabine shall form one district, and elect two senators.

The parish of Rapides shall form one district, and elect one senator.

The parishes of Catahoula and Winn shall form one district, and elect one senator.

Thirty-six senators in all.

ART. 23. The house of representatives shall choose its speaker and other officers.

ART. 24. Electors in all cases except treason, felony, or breach of the peace, shall be privileged from arrest during their attendance on, going to, and returning from elections.

ART. 25. At its first session under this constitution, the general assembly shall provide by law that the names and residence of all qualified electors shall be registered, in order to entitle them to vote; but the registry shall be free of cost to the elector.

ART. 26. No person shall be entitled to vote at any election held in this state, except in the parish of his residence, and at the election precinct in which he is registered; Provided, That no voter in removing from one parish to another shall lose the right to vote in the former until he has acquired it in the latter.

ART. 27. The members of the senate shall be elected for the term of four years; and when assembled, the senate shall have power to choose its own officers, except as hereinafter provided.

ART. 28. The general assembly shall divide the state into senatorial districts whenever it apportions representation in the house of representatives.

ART. 29. No parish shall be divided in the formation of a senatorial district, the parish of Orleans excepted; and whenever a new parish shall be created it shall be attached to the senatorial district from which most of its territory is taken, or to another contiguous district, at the discretion of the general assembly, but shall not be attached to more than one district. The number of senators shall be thirty-six, and they shall be apportioned among the senatorial districts according to the total population of said districts.

ART. 30. In all apportionments of the senate the total population of the state shall be divided by the number thirty-six, and the result produced by this division shall be the senatorial ratio entitling a senatorial district to a senator.

Single or contiguous parishes shall be formed into districts having a population the nearest possible to the number entitling a district to a senator; and if the apportionment to make a parish or district fall short of, or exceed the ratio, then a district may be formed having not more than two senators; but not otherwise. No new apportionment shall have the effect of abridging the term of service of any senator already elected at the time of making the apportionment. After an enumeration has been made, as directed in the twentieth article, the general assembly shall not pass any law, till an apportionment of representation in both houses of the general assembly shall be made.

ART. 31. At the first session of the general assembly after this constitution goes into effect, the senators shall be divided equally by lot into two classes; the seats of the senators of the first class to be vacated at the expiration of the term of the first house of representatives; those of the second class at the expiration of the term of the second house of representatives; so that one-half shall be chosen every two years successively. When a district shall have elected two senators, their respective terms of office shall be determined by lot between themselves.

ART. 32. The first election for senators shall be held at the same time with the election for representatives; and thereafter there shall be elections of senators at the same time with each general election of representatives, to fill the places of those senators whose term of office may have expired.

ART. 33. Not less than a majority of the members of each house of the general assembly shall form a quorum to transact business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and shall have full power to compel the attendance of absent members.

ART. 34. Each house of the general assembly shall judge of the qualifications, election, and returns of its members, but a contested election shall be determined in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

ART. 35. Each house of the general assembly may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish a member for disorderly conduct, and with a concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member, but not a second time for the same offense.

ART. 36. Each house of the general assembly shall keep and publish weekly a journal of its proceedings; and the yeas and nays of the members on any question, at the desire of any two of them, shall be entered on the journal.

ART. 37. Each house may punish by imprisonment any person not a member for disrespect and disorderly behavior in its presence, or for obstructing any of its proceedings; such imprisonment shall not exceed ten days for any one offense.

ART. 38. Neither house shall adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which it may be sitting, during the sessions of the general assembly, without the consent of the other.

ART. 39. The members of the general assembly shall receive from the public treasury a compensation for their services, which shall be eight dollars per day during their attendance, going to, and returning from the sessions of their respective houses. This compensation may be increased or diminished by law, but no alteration shall take effect during the period of service of the members of the house of representatives by which such alteration shall have been made. No session shall extend beyond the period of sixty days, to date from its commencement; and any legislative action had after the expiration of said period of sixty days shall be null and void; but the first general assembly that shall convene after the adoption of this constitution may continue in session for one hundred and twenty days.

ART. 40. The members of the general assembly, in all cases except treason, felony, or breach of the peace, shall be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the sessions of their respective houses and going to or returning from the same and for any speech or debate in either house shall not be questioned in any other place.

ART. 41. No senator or representative during the term for which he was elected nor for one year thereafter, shall be appointed to any civil office of profit under this state which shall have been created, or the emoluments of which may have been increased during the time such senator or representative was in office.

ART. 42. No bill shall have the force of a law until on three several days it be read in each house of the general assembly, and free discussion allowed thereon, unless four-fifths of the house where the bill is pending may deem it expedient to dispense with this rule.

ART. 43. All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the house of representatives, but the senate may propose amendments as in other bills; Provided, it shall not introduce any matter under the color of an amendment which does not relate to raising revenue.

ART. 44. The general assembly shall regulate by whom and in what manner writs of election shall be issued to fill the vacancies which may occur in either branch thereof.

ART. 45. On the confirmation or rejection of the officers to be appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, the vote shall be taken by yeas and nays; and the names of the senators voting for and against the appointments respectively shall be entered on the journals to be kept for the purpose, and made public on or before the end of each session.

ART. 46. Returns of all elections for members of the general assembly shall be made to the secretary of state.

ART. 47. In the year in which a regular election for a senator of the United States is to take place the members of the general assembly shall meet in the hall of the house of representatives on the second Monday following the meeting of the general assembly, and proceed to said election.

TITLE III.—EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

ART. 48. The supreme executive power of the state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Louisiana. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and together with the lieutenant governor, chosen for the same term, be elected as follows: The qualified electors for representatives shall vote for governor and lieutenant governor at the time and place of voting for representatives; the returns of every election shall be sealed up and transmitted by the proper returning officer to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives on the second day of the session of the general assembly then to be holden. The members of the general assembly shall meet in the house of representatives to examine and count the votes. The person having the greatest number of votes for governor shall be declared duly elected; but in case of a tie vote between two or more candidates, one of them shall immediately be chosen governor by joint vote of the members of the general assembly. The person having the greatest number of votes polled for lieutenant governor shall be lieutenant governor; but in case of a tie vote between two or more candidates, one of them shall be immediately chosen lieutenant governor by joint vote of the members of the general assembly.

ART. 49. No person shall be eligible to the office of governor or lieutenant governor who is not a citizen of the United States, and a resident of this state two years next preceding his election.

ART. 50. The governor shall be ineligible for the succeeding four years after the expiration of the time for which he shall have been elected.

ART. 51. The governor shall enter on the discharge of his duties on the second Monday in January next ensuing his election, and shall continue in office until the Monday next succeeding the day that his successor shall be declared duly elected, and shall have taken the oath or affirmation required by the constitution.

ART. 52. No member of congress or any person holding office under the United States government shall be eligible to the office of governor or lieutenant governor.

ART. 53. In case of impeachment of the governor, his removal from office, death, refusal or inability to qualify, or to discharge the powers and duties of his office, resignation or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term, or until the governor, absent or impeached, shall return or be acquitted, or the disability be removed. The general assembly may provide by law for the case of removal, impeachment, death, resignation, disability, or refusal to qualify, of both the governor and the lieutenant governor, declaring what officer shall act as governor; and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability be removed, or for the remainder of the term.

ART. 54. The lieutenant governor or officer discharging the duties of governor, shall, during his administration, receive the same compensation to which the governor would have been entitled had he continued in office.

ART. 55. The lieutenant governor shall by virtue of his office be president of the senate, but shall only vote when the senate is equally divided. Whenever he shall administer the government, or shall be unable to attend as president of the senate, the senators shall elect one of their own members as president of the senate for the time being.

ART. 56. The governor shall receive a salary of eight thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly on his own warrant.

ART. 57. The lieutenant governor shall receive a salary of three thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly upon his own warrant.

ART. 58. The governor shall have power to grant reprieves for all offenses against the state, and, except in cases of impeachment, shall, with the consent of the senate, have power to grant pardons, remit fines and forfeitures after conviction. In cases of treason he may grant reprieves until the end of the next session of the general assembly, in which the power of pardoning shall be vested. In cases when the punishment is not imprisonment at hard labor, the party upon being reprieved by the governor shall be released if in actual custody until final action by the senate.

ART. 59. He shall be commander-in-chief of the militia of this state, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States.

ART. 60. He shall nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the senate appoint all officers whose offices are established by the constitution, and whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for; Provided, however, That the general assembly shall have a right to prescribe the mode of appointment to all other offices established by law.

ART. 61. The governor shall have power to fill vacancies that may happen during the recess of the senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of the next session thereof, unless otherwise provided for in this constitution; but no person who has been nominated for office and rejected by the senate shall be appointed to the same office during the recess of the senate.

ART. 62. He may require information in writing from the officers in the executive department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.

ART. 63. He shall, from time to time, give the general assembly information respecting the situation of the state, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he may deem expedient.

ART. 64. He may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the general assembly at the seat of government, or at a different place if that should have become dangerous from an enemy or from epidemic; and in case of disagreement between the two houses as to the time of adjournment, he may adjourn them to such time as he may think proper, not exceeding four months.

ART. 65. He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

ART. 66. Every bill which shall have passed both houses shall be presented to the governor; if he approve he shall sign it; if he do not he shall return it with his objections to the house in which it originated, which shall enter the objections at large upon its journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of all the members present in that house shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent with the objections to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of the members present in that house it shall be a law. But in such cases the vote of both houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of members voting for or against the bill shall be entered on the journal of each house respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the governor within five days after it shall have been presented to him, it shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly, by adjournment, prevent its return, in which case the said bill shall be returned on the first day of the meeting of the general assembly after the expiration of said five days, or be a law.

ART. 67. Every order, resolution, or vote, to which the concurrence of both houses may be necessary, except on a question of adjournment, shall be presented to the governor, and before it shall take effect be approved by him, or, being disapproved, shall be repassed by two-thirds of the members present.

ART. 68. There shall be a secretary of state, who shall hold his office during the term for which the governor shall have been elected. The records of the state shall be kept and preserved in the office of the secretary; he shall keep a fair register of the official acts and proceedings of the governor, and when necessary shall attest them; he shall, when required, lay the said register and all papers, minutes, and vouchers relative to his office before either house of the general assembly, and shall perform such other duties as may be enjoined on him by law.

ART. 69. There shall be a treasurer of the state, and an auditor of public accounts, who shall hold their respective offices during the term of four years. At the first election under this constitution, the treasurer shall be elected for two years.

ART. 70. The secretary of state, treasurer, and auditor of public accounts shall be elected by the qualified electors of the state, and in case of any vacancy caused by the resignation, death, or absence of the secretary, treasurer, or auditor, the governor shall order an election to fill said vacancies; Provided, The unexpired term to be filled be more than twelve months; when otherwise, the governor shall appoint a person to perform the duties of the office thus vacant until the ensuing general election.

ART. 71. The treasurer and the auditor shall receive a salary of five thousand dollars per annum each. The secretary of state shall receive a salary of three thousand dollars per annum.

ART. 72. All commissions shall be in the name and by the authority of the state of Louisiana; and shall be sealed with the state seal, signed by the governor, and countersigned by the secretary of state.

TITLE IV.—JUDICIARY DEPARTMENT.

ART. 73. The judicial power shall be vested in a supreme court, in district courts, in parish courts, and in justices of the peace.

ART. 74. The supreme court, except in cases hereinafter provided, shall have appellate jurisdiction only; which jurisdiction shall extend to all cases when the matter in dispute shall exceed five hundred dollars; and to all cases in which the constitutionality or legality of any tax, toll, or impost of any kind or nature whatsoever, or any fine, forfeiture, or penalty imposed by a municipal corporation shall be in contestation, whatever may be the amount thereof; and in such cases the appeal shall be direct from the court in which the case originated to the supreme court; and in criminal cases, on questions of law only, whenever the punishment of death, or imprisonment at hard labor, or a fine exceeding three hundred dollars is actually imposed.

ART. 75. The supreme court shall be composed of one chief justice and four associate justices, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum. The chief justice shall receive a salary of seven thousand five hundred dollars, and each of the associate justices a salary of seven thousand dollars annually, payable quarterly on their own warrants. The chief justice and he associate justices shall be appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, for the term of eight years. They shall be citizens of the United States, and shall have practiced law for five years, the last three thereof next preceding their appointment in the state. The court shall appoint its own clerks, and may remove them at pleasure.

ART. 76. The supreme court shall hold its sessions in the city of New Orleans from the first Monday in the month of November to the end of the month of May. The general assembly shall have power to fix the sessions elsewhere during the rest of the year; until otherwise provided, the sessions shall be held as heretofore.

ART. 77. The supreme court, and each of the judges thereof, shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus at the instance of persons in actual custody in cases when they may have appellate jurisdiction.

ART. 78. No judgment shall be rendered by the supreme court without a concurrence of a majority composing the court. Whenever the majority can not concur in consequence of the recusation of any member of the court, the judges not recused shall have power to call upon any judge or judges of the district courts, whose duty it shall be when so called upon to preside in the place of the judge or judges recused, and to aid in determining the case.

ART. 79. All judges, by virtue of their office, shall be conservators of the peace throughout the state. The style of all process shall be "The state of Louisiana." All prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the state of Louisiana, and conclude "against the peace and dignity of the same."

ART. 80. The judges of all courts whenever practicable shall refer to the law in virtue of which every definitive judgment is rendered; but in all cases they shall adduce the reasons on which their judgment is founded.

ART. 81. The judges of all courts shall be liable to impeachment for crimes and misdemeanors. For any reasonable cause the governor shall remove any of them, on the address of two-thirds of the members elected to each house of the general assembly. In every such case the cause or causes for which such removal may be required shall be stated at length in the address, and inserted in the journal of each house.

ART. 82. No duties or functions shall ever be attached by law to the supreme or district courts, or the several judges thereof, but such as are judicial; and the said judges are prohibited from receiving any fees of office, or other compensation than their salaries, for any official duties performed by them.

ART. 83. The general assembly shall divide the state into judicial districts, which shall remain unchanged for four years, and for each district court one judge, learned in the law, shall be elected for each district, by a plurality of the qualified electors thereof. For each district there shall be one district court, except in the parish of Orleans, in which the general assembly may establish as many district courts as the public interests may require. Until otherwise provided there shall be seven district courts for the parish of Orleans, with the following original jurisdiction: The first, exclusive criminal jurisdiction; the second, exclusive probate jurisdiction; the third, exclusive jurisdiction of appeals from justices of the peace; the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh district courts, exclusive jurisdiction in all civil cases, except probate, when the sum in contest is above one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. These seven courts shall have such further jurisdiction, not inconsistent herewith, as shall be conferred by law.

The number of districts in the state shall not be less than twelve nor more than twenty. The clerks of the district courts shall be elected by the qualified electors of their respective parishes, and shall hold their office for four years.

ART. 84. Each of said judges shall receive a salary to be fixed by law, which shall not be increased or diminished during his term of office, and shall never be less than five thousand dollars. He must be a citizen of the United States, over the age of twenty-five years, and have resided in the state and practiced law therein for the space of two years next preceding his election. The judges of the district courts shall hold their office for the term of four years.

ART. 85. The district courts shall have original jurisdiction in all civil cases when the amount in dispute exceeds five hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. In criminal cases their jurisdiction shall be unlimited. They shall have appellate jurisdiction in civil ordinary suits, when the amount in dispute exceeds one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest.

ART. 86. For each parish court, one judge shall be elected by the qualified electors of the parish. He shall hold his office for the term of two years. He shall receive a salary and fees, to be provided by law. Until otherwise provided, each parish judge shall receive a salary of one thousand two hundred dollars per annum, and such fees as are established by law for clerks of district courts. He shall be a citizen of the United States and of this state.

ART. 87. The parish courts shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the justices of the peace in all cases when the amount in controversy is more than twenty-five dollars, and less than one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. They shall have exclusive original jurisdiction in ordinary suits, in all cases when the amount in dispute exceeds one hundred dollars and does not exceed five hundred dollars, subject to an appeal to the district court in all cases when the amount in contestation exceeds one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. All successions shall be opened and settled in the parish courts; and all suits in which a succession is either plaintiff or defendant may be brought either in the parish or district court, according to the amount involved. In criminal matters the parish courts shall have jurisdiction in all cases when the penalty is not necessarily imprisonment at hard labor or death, and when the accused shall waive trial by jury. They shall also have the power of committing magistrates and such other jurisdiction as may be conferred on them by law. There shall be no trial by jury before the parish courts.

ART. 88. In all probate matters, when the amount in dispute shall exceed five hundred dollars, exclusive of interest, the appeal shall be directly from the parish to the supreme court.

ART. 89. The justices of the peace shall be elected by the electors of each parish, in the manner to be provided by the general assembly. They shall hold office for the term of two years, and their compensation shall be fixed by law. Their jurisdiction in civil cases shall not exceed one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest, subject to an appeal to the parish courts in all cases when the amount in dispute shall exceed ten dollars, exclusive of interest. They shall have such criminal jurisdiction as shall be provided for by law.

ART. 90. In any case when the judge may be recused, and when he is not personally interested in the matters in contestation, he shall select a lawyer having the qualifications required for a judge of his court to try such cases. And when the judge is personally interested in the suit, he shall call upon the parish or district judge, as the case may be, to try the case.

ART. 91. The general assembly shall have power to vest in the parish judges the right to grant such orders and to do such acts as may be deemed necessary for the furtherance of the administration of justice; and in all cases the power thus granted shall be specified and determined.

ART. 92. There shall be an attorney general for the state, who shall be elected by the qualified electors of the state at large. He shall receive a salary of five thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly on his own warrant, and shall hold his office for four years. There shall be a district attorney for each judicial district of the state, who shall be elected by the qualified electors of the judicial district. He shall receive a salary of fifteen hundred dollars, payable quarterly on his own warrant, and shall hold his office for four years.

ART. 93. There shall be a sheriff and coroner elected by the qualified electors of each parish, except the parish of Orleans. In the parish of Orleans there shall be elected by the qualified electors of the parish at large one sheriff for the criminal court, who shall be the executive officer of said court, and shall have charge of the parish prison. There shall also be elected by the qualified electors of the parish at large one sheriff, who shall be the executive officer of the civil courts, and who shall perform all other duties heretofore devolving upon the sheriff of the parish of Orleans, except those herein delegated to the sheriff of the criminal court. The qualified electors of the city of New Orleans, residing below the middle of Canal street, shall elect one coroner for that district, and the qualified electors of the city of New Orleans, residing above the middle of Canal street, together with those residing in that part of the parish known as Orleans right bank, shall elect one coroner for that district. All of said officers shall hold their office for two years; and receive such fees of office as may be prescribed by law.

ART. 94. No judicial powers, except as committing magistrates, in criminal cases, shall be conferred on any officers other than those mentioned in this title; except such as may be necessary in towns and cities; and the judicial powers of such officer shall not extend further than the cognizance of cases arising under the police regulations of towns and cities in the state. In any case where such officers shall assume jurisdiction over other matters than those which may arise under police regulations, or under their jurisdiction, as committing magistrates, they shall be liable to an action of damages in favor of the party injured, or his heirs; and a verdict in favor of the party injured shall, ipso facto, operate a vacation of the office of said officer.

TITLE V.—IMPEACHMENT.

ART. 95. The power of impeachment shall be vested in the house of representatives.

ART. 96. Impeachments of the governor, lieutenant governor, attorney general, secretary of state, auditor of public accounts, state treasurer, superintendent of public education, and of the judges of the inferior courts, justices of the peace excepted, shall be tried by the senate; the chief justice of the supreme court, or the senior associate judge thereof, shall preside during the trial of such impeachments. Impeachments of the judges of the supreme court shall be tried by the senate. When sitting as a court of impeachment the senators shall be upon oath or affirmation, and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the senators present.

ART. 97. Judgments in cases of impeachment shall extend only to removal from office, and disqualification from holding any office of honor, trust, or profit in the state; but the convicted parties shall nevertheless be subject to indictment, trial, and punishment according to law.

TITLE VI.—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

ART. 98. Every male person of the age of twenty-one years or upward, born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and a resident of this state one year next preceding an election, and the last ten days within the parish in which he offers to vote, shall be deemed an elector, except those disfranchised by this constitution, and persons under interdiction.

ART. 99. The following persons shall be prohibited from voting and holding any office: All persons who shall have been convicted of treason, perjury, forgery, bribery, or other crime punishable in the penitentiary, and persons under interdiction.

All persons who are estopped from claiming the right of suffrage by abjuring their allegiance to the United States government, or by notoriously levying war against it, or adhering to its enemies, giving them aid or comfort, but who have not expatriated themselves, nor have been convicted of any of the crimes mentioned in the first paragraph of this article, are hereby restored to the said right, except the following: Those who held office, civil or military, for one year or more under the organization styled "The Confederate States of America;" those who registered themselves as enemies of the United States; those who acted as leaders of guerrilla bands during the late rebellion; those who in the advocacy of treason wrote or published newspaper articles or preached sermons during the late rebellion, and those who voted for and signed an ordinance of secession in any state. No person included in these exceptions shall either vote or hold office until he shall have relieved himself by voluntarily writing and signing a certificate setting forth that he acknowledges the late rebellion to have been morally and politically wrong, and that he regrets any aid and comfort he may have given it; and he shall file the certificate in the office of the secretary of state, and it shall be published in the official journal;

Provided, That no person who prior to the first of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, favored the execution of the laws of the United States popularly known as the reconstruction acts of congress, and openly and actively assisted the loyal men of the state in their efforts to restore Louisiana to her position in the Union, shall be held to be included among those herein excepted. Registrars of voters shall take the oath of any such person as prima facie evidence of the fact that he is entitled to the benefit of this proviso.

ART. 100. Members of the general assembly and all other officers, before they enter upon the duties of their offices, shall take the following oath or affirmation: "I, (A. B.,) do solemnly swear (or affirm,) that I accept the civil and political equality of all men, and agree not to attempt to deprive any person or persons on account of race, color, or previous condition, of any political or civil right, privilege, or immunity enjoyed by any other class of men. That I will support the constitution and laws of the United States and the constitution and laws of this state, and that I will faithfully and impartially discharge and perform all the duties incumbent on me as —— according to the best of my ability and understanding. So help me God."

ART. 101. Treason against the state shall consist only in levying war against it, or in adhering to its enemies—giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason except on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on his confession in open court.

ART. 102. All penalties shall be proportioned to the nature of the offense.

ART. 103. The privilege of free suffrage shall be supported by laws regulating elections, and prohibiting under adequate penalties all undue influence thereon from power, bribery, tumult, or other improper practice.

ART. 104. No money shall be drawn from the treasury but in pursuance of specific appropriations made by law. A statement and account of receipts and expenditures of all public moneys shall be made annually, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law; and the first general assembly convening under this constitution shall make a special appropriation to liquidate whatever portion of the debt of this convention may at that time remain unpaid or unprovided for.

ART. 105. All civil officers of the state at large shall be voters of and reside within the state; and all district or parish officers shall reside within their respective districts or parishes, and shall keep their offices at such place therein as may be required by law.

ART. 106. All civil officers shall be removable by an address of two-thirds of the members elect to each house of the general assembly, except those whose removal is otherwise provided for by this constitution.

ART. 107. In all elections by the people the vote shall be taken by ballot; and in all elections by the senate and house of representatives, jointly or separately, the vote shall be given viva voce.

ART. 108. None but citizens of the United States and of this state shall be appointed to any office of trust or profit in this state.

ART. 109. The laws, public records, and the judicial and legislative proceedings of the state shall be promulgated, and preserved in the English language; and no law shall require judicial process to be issued in any other than the English language.

ART. 110. No ex post facto or retroactive law, nor any law impairing the obligation of contracts, shall be passed; nor vested rights be divested, unless for purposes of public utility, and for adequate compensation made.

ART. 111. Whenever the general assembly shall contract a debt exceeding in amount the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, unless in case of war, to repel invasion, or suppress insurrection, it shall, in the law creating the debt, provide adequate ways and means for the payment of the current interest, and of the principal when the same shall become due; and the said law shall shall be irrepealable until principal and interest be fully paid; or unless the repealing law contain some adequate provision for the payment of the principal and interest of the debt.

ART. 112. The general assembly shall provide by law for all change of venue in civil and criminal cases.

ART. 113. The general assembly may enact general laws regulating the adoption of children, emancipation of minors, and the granting of divorces; but no special law shall be passed relating to particular or individual cases.

ART. 114. Every law shall express its object or objects in its title.

ART. 115. No law shall be revived or amended by reference to its title; but in such case the revived or amended section shall be re-enacted and published at length.

ART. 116. The general assembly shall never adopt any system or code of laws by general reference to such system or code of laws; but in all cases shall specify the several provisions of the law it may enact.

ART. 117. No person shall hold or exercise at the same time more than one office of trust or profit except that of justice of the peace or notary public.

ART. 118. Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state; all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law; the general assembly shall have power to exempt from taxation property actually used for church, school, or charitable purposes. The general assembly may levy an income tax upon all persons pursuing any occupation, trade, or calling. And all such persons shall obtain a license as provided by law. All tax on income shall be pro rata on the amount of income, or business done. And all deeds of sale made or that may be made by collectors of taxes, shall be received by courts in evidence as prima facie valid sales. The general assembly shall levy a poll tax on all male inhabitants of this state over twenty-one years old, for school and charitable purposes, which tax shall never exceed one dollar and fifty cents per annum.

ART. 119. No liability, either state, parochial, or municipal, shall exist for any debts contracted for or in the interest of the rebellion against the United States government.

ART. 120. The general assembly may determine the mode of filling vacancies in all offices for which provision is not made in this constitution.

ART. 121. The general assembly shall pass no law requiring a property qualification for office.

ART. 122. All officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their offices until their successors shall have been inducted into office; except in cases of impeachment or suspension.

ART. 123. The general assembly shall provide for the protection of the rights of married women to their dotal and paraphernal property, and for the registration of the same; but no mortgage or privilege shall hereafter affect third parties unless recorded in the parish where the property to be affected is situated. The tacit mortgages and privileges now existing in this state shall cease to have effect against third persons after the first day of January, eighteen hundred and seventy, unless duly recorded. The general assembly shall provide by law for the registration of all mortgages and privileges.

ART. 124. The general assembly, at its first session under this constitution, shall provide an annual pension for the veterans of eighteen hundred and fourteen and eighteen hundred and fifteen residing in the state.

ART. 125. The military shall be in subordination to the civil power.

ART. 126. It shall be the duty of the general assembly to make it obligatory upon each parish to support all paupers residing within its limits.

ART. 127. All agreements, the consideration of which was confederate money, notes, or bonds, are null and void; and shall not be enforced by the courts of this state.

ART. 128. Contracts for the sale of persons are null and void; and shall not be enforced by the courts of this state.

ART. 129. The state of Louisiana shall never assume nor pay any debt or obligation contracted or incurred in aid of the rebellion; nor shall this state ever in any manner claim from the United States or make any allowance or compensation for slaves emancipated or liberated in any way whatever.

ART. 130. All contracts made and entered into under the pretended authority of any governments heretofore existing in this state, by which children were bound out without the knowledge or consent of their parents, are hereby declared null and void; nor shall any child be bound out to any one for any term of years, while either one of its parents live, without the consent of such parent, except in cases of children legally sent to the house of correction.

ART. 131. The seat of government shall be established at the city of New Orleans, and shall not be removed without the consent of two-thirds of the members of both houses of the general assembly.

ART. 132. All lands sold in pursuance of decrees of courts shall be divided into tracts of from ten to fifty acres.

ART. 133. No judicial powers shall be exercised by clerks of courts.

ART. 134. No soldier, sailor, or marine in the military or naval service of the United States shall hereafter acquire a residence in this state by reason of being stationed or doing duty in the same.

TITLE VII.—PUBLIC EDUCATION.

ART. 135. The general assembly shall establish at least one free public school in every parish throughout the state, and shall provide for its support by taxation or otherwise. All children of this state between the ages of six (6) and twenty-one (21) shall be admitted to the public schools or other institutions of learning sustained or established by the state, in common, without distinction of race, color, or previous condition. There shall be no separate schools or institutions of learning established exclusively for any race by the state of Louisiana.

ART. 136. No municipal corporation shall make any rules or regulations contrary to the spirit and intention of article one hundred and thirty-five (135.)

ART. 137. There shall be elected by the qualified voters of this state a superintendent of public education, who shall hold his office for four years. His duties shall be prescribed by law, and he shall have the supervision and the general control of all public schools throughout this state. He shall receive a salary of five thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly on his own warrant.

ART. 138. The general exercises in the public schools shall be conducted in the English language.

ART. 139. The proceeds of all lands heretofore granted by the United States for the use and support of public schools, and of all lands or other property which may hereafter be bequeathed for that purpose, and of all lands which may be granted or bequeathed to the state, and not granted or bequeathed expressly for any other purpose which may hereafter be disposed of by the state, and the proceeds of all estates of deceased persons to which the state may be entitled by law, shall be held by the state as a loan, and shall be and remain a perpetual fund on which the state shall pay an annual interest of six per cent, which interest, with the interest of the trust fund deposited with this state by the United States, under the act of congress approved June the twenty-third, eighteen hundred and thirty-six, and the rent of the unsold lands, shall be appropriated to the support of such schools, and this appropriation shall remain inviolable.

ART. 140. No appropriation shall be made by the general assembly for the support of any private school, or any private institution of learning whatever.

ART. 141. One half of the funds derived from the poll tax herein provided for shall be appropriated exclusively to the support of the free public schools throughout the state, and the university of New Orleans.

ART. 142. A university shall be established and maintained in the city of New Orleans. It shall be composed of a law, a medical, and a collegiate department, each with appropriate faculties. The general assembly shall provide by law for its organization and maintenance; Provided, That all departments of this institution of learning shall be opened in common to all students capable of matriculating. No rules or regulations shall be made by the trustees, faculties, or other officers of said institution of learning, nor shall any laws be made by the general assembly violating the letter or spirit of the articles under this title.

ART. 143. Institutions for the support of the insane, the education and support of the blind and the deaf and dumb, shall always be fostered by the state, and be subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by the general assembly.

TITLE VIII.—MILITIA.

ART. 144. It shall be the duty of the general assembly to organize the militia of the state; and all able-bodied male citizens between the ages of eighteen and forty five years, not disfranchised by the laws of the United States and of this state, shall be subject to military duty.

ART. 145. The governor shall appoint all commissioned officers, subject to confirmation or rejection by the senate, except the staff officers, who shall be appointed by their respective chiefs, and commissioned by the governor. All militia officers shall take and subscribe to the oath prescribed for officers of the United States army and the oath prescribed for officers in this state.

ART. 146. The governor shall have power to call the militia into active service for the preservation of law and order, or when the public safety may require it. The militia when in active service shall receive the same pay and allowances as officers and privates, as is received by officers and privates in the United States army.

TITLE IX.—MODE OF REVISING THE CONSTITUTION.

ART. 147. Any amendment or amendments to this constitution may be proposed in the senate or house of representatives, and if the same shall be agreed to by two-thirds of the members elected to each house, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be entered on their respective journals, with the yeas and nays taken thereon; and the secretary of state shall cause the same to be published three months before the next general election for representatives to the general assembly, in at least one newspaper in every parish in the state in which a newspaper shall be published. And such proposed amendment or amendments shall be submitted to the people at said election; and if amajority of the voters at said election shall approve and ratify such amendment or amendments, the same shall become a part of this constitution. If more than one amendment shall be submitted at one time, they shall be submitted in such manner and form that the people may vote for or against each amendment separately.

TITLE X.—SCHEDULE.

ART. 148. The ordinance of secession of the state of Louisiana, passed twenty-sixth of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, is hereby declared to be null and void. The constitution adopted in eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and all previous constitutions in the state of Louisiana, are declared to be superseded by this constitution.

ART. 149. All rights, actions, prosecutions, claims, contracts, and all laws in force at the time of the adoption of this constitution, and not inconsistent therewith, shall continue as if it had not been adopted; all judgments and judicial sales, marriages, and executed contracts made in good faith, and in accordance with the existing laws in this state, rendered, made, or entered into, between the twenty-sixth day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, and the date when this constitution shall be adopted are hereby declared to be valid, except the following laws:

"An act to authorize the widening of the new canal and basin," approved March fourteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven.

"An act to amend and re-enact the one hundred and twenty-first section of an act entitled, 'An act relative to crimes and offenses,'" approved December twentieth, eighteen hundred and sixty-five.

"An act for the punishment of persons for tampering with, persuading, or enticing away, harboring, feeding, or secreting laborers, servants, or apprentices," approved December twenty-first, eighteen hundred and sixty-five.

"An act to punish, in certain cases, the employers of laborers and apprentices," approved December twenty-first, eighteen hundred and sixty-five.

"An act in relation to exemption from state, parish, and city taxes for the years eighteen hundred and sixty-two, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and eighteen hundred and sixty-five, in certain cases." Certified sixteenth March, eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

"An act granting ferry privileges to C. K. Marshall, his heirs, or assigns." Approved March tenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

"An act to authorize the board of levee commissioners of the levee district in the parishes of Madison and Carroll to issue bonds," etc., etc. Approved March twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven.

Section third of "An act to organize the police of New Orleans, and to create a police board therein." Approved twelfth February, eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

ART. 150. The laws relative to the duties of officers shall remain in force, though contrary to this constitution, and the several duties be performed by the respective officers, until the organization of the government under this constitution.

ART. 151. The general assembly shall provide for the removal of causes now pending in the courts of this state to courts created by or under this constitution.

TITLE XI.—ORDINANCE.

ART. 152. Immediately upon the adjournment of this convention this constitution shall be submitted for ratification to the registered voters of the state, in conformity to the act of congress passed March second, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, entitled "An act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel states," and the acts supplementary thereto.

ART. 153. The election for the ratification of the constitution shall be held on Friday and Saturday, the seventeenth and eighteenth days of April, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, at the places now prescribed by law; and the polls shall be kept open from 7 o'clock A. M. to 7 o'clock P. M. At that election all those in favor of ratifying the constitution shall have written or printed on their ballots "For the constitution," and those opposed to ratifying the constitution shall have written or printed on their ballots "Against the constitution."

ART. 154. In order to establish a civil government, as required by act of congress, passed March twenty-third, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, an election shall be held at the same time and place at which the constitution is submitted for ratification for all state, judicial, parish, and municipal officers, for members of the general assembly, and for congressional representatives, at which election the electors who are qualified under the reconstruction acts of congress shall vote, and none others; Provided, That any elector shall be eligible to any office under any municipal corporation in this state.

ART. 155. At the election for the ratification of the constitution, and for officers of the civil government as required by congress, all registered electors may vote in any parish where they have resided for ten days next preceding said election, and at any precinct in the parish, upon presentation of their certificates of registration, affidavit, or other satisfactory evidence that they are entitled to vote as registered electors.

ART. 156. The same registrars and commissioners who shall be appointed by the commanding general of the fifth military district to superintend the election for the ratification or rejection of the constitution shall also, at the same time and place, superintend the election for all officers and representatives herein ordered; provided they be authorized so to act by the commanding general. And in case the commanding general should not so authorize said registrars and commissioners, the committee of seven appointed by this convention to take charge of the whole matter of the ratification of the constitution and the election of civil officers shall appoint one registrar for each parish in the state, except the parish of Orleans, and one in each district of the parish of Orleans, counting Orleans right bank as one district, who shall, each in his parish or district, appoint a sufficient number of commissioners of election to hold the said election for the said civil officers and representatives at the same time and place as herein provided for.

ART. 157. Returns shall be made in duplicate, sworn to by the commissioners holding the election, and forwarded within three days thereafter to the registrars of the parish or district. The registrars shall immediately forward one copy of said returns to the chairman of the committee of seven, appointed by this convention, who shall, within ten days after the last return has been received, make proclamation of the result of said election.

ART. 158. All civil officers thus elected shall enter upon the discharge of their duties on the second Monday after the return of their election shall have been officially promulgated, or as soon as qualified according to law, and shall continue in office for the terms of their respective offices herein prescribed, said terms to date from the first Monday in November following the election.

ART. 159. The general assembly, elected under this constitution, shall hold its first session in the city of New Orleans on the third Monday after the official promulgation aforesaid, and proceed immediately upon its organization to vote upon the adoption of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States, proposed by congress, and passed June thirteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-six; said general assembly shall not have power to enact any laws relative to the per diem of members, or any other subject, after organization, until said constitutional amendment shall have been acted upon.

ART. 160. All registrars and commissioners appointed under this constitution shall, before entering upon their duties, take and subscribe the oath of office prescribed by congress, approved July second, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office;" the said oath of office shall be administered to each registrar by the chairman of the committee of seven and to each commissioner by the registrar appointing him.

ART. 161. All registrars, commissioners, and other officers necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this ordinance, except as otherwise provided for by the reconstruction acts of congress, shall be paid out of any funds raised by virtue of the tax ordinance adopted by the convention, December twenty-fourth, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, not otherwise appropriated.

MARRIED.

BANKS—BINGHAM—At Albany, New York, on Saturday, April 4, 1868 by Rev. J. M. Ludlow, Pastor First Presbyterian Church, Mr. CHARLES W. BANKS to Miss FANNIE A., only daughter of the late Hon. F. W. Bingham, of Cleveland, Ohio.

Mr. Banks, as will be remembered, was for a year or two connected with the Freedman's Bureau in this city, as chief clerk in the Adjutant General's office, and who by his business capacity, integrity, and faithfulness in the management of the business of the office, won for him the esteem of all connected therewith. The large circle of friends that he has left here will wish him and his lovely bride, who also resided here a short time, much joy.

The Board of Registration.

ORDINANCES CREATING THE BOARD.

NOTICE TO TAX COLLECTORS AND SHERIFFS.

COMMITTEE ROOMS, BOARD OF REGISTRATION, New Orleans, March 10, 1868.

The board of registration was organized by the election of S. B. Packard, chairman, and R. C. Richardson, secretary.

On motion, resolved, that the following ordinance and resolution, creating said board, and fixing its duties, be published in the official paper of this board:

ORDINANCE.

WHEREAS, The act of congress of the twenty-third of March, 1867, sets forth as one of the purposes of the assembling of this convention "to establish a civil government for the state;"

Be it ordained by the people of Louisiana in convention assembled, That a board of registration for the state be appointed by this convention, to consist of seven members thereof, whose term of office shall begin with the adjournment of the convention, and end with the inauguration of state officers, as provided for in the constitution.

Be it further ordained, etc., That it shall be the duty of said board to elect a chairman from among its members, and a secretary, and that all public notices, proclamations, and orders shall be signed by the president and attested by the secretary.

Be it further ordained, etc., That the said board shall have power and authority to make rules, regulations, and orders concerning the registration of voters, the duties of registrars, the holding of elections, the duties of commissioners of the respective polls, the making of returns, and the announcement of the result of the election; Provided, That such rules, regulations, and orders shall in no wise conflict with the provisions of the act known as the reconstruction act, or with the schedule or ordinance contained in the constitution to be submitted by this convention, or with the lawful authority of the district commander, exercised in pursuance and furtherance of said acts and provisions, but shall be in cooperation with and furtherance of the same. Their authority shall extend to all matters of execution or detail not fully provided for in said reconstruction acts and constitution, and in case of the non-action of any officer of the state, or district commander, or any omission in carrying out said law, regulations, or ordinances, or detail "necessary to carry into effect the purposes" of said act, according to their letter or spirit.

Be it further ordained, etc., That they shall be empowered for the administration of oaths of office and the issuing of commissions to act in case of vacancy or the non-action or omission to perform their duties of any or all elective officers.

Be it further ordained, etc., That it shall be the duty of said board to fix the salary and regulate the duties of all officers of elections ordered to be held by the reconstruction acts and the constitution, and the salary and expenses incurred in carrying this ordinance into effect, shall be paid upon the certificate of the chairman of said committee, out of any funds raised by the tax ordinance of this convention, passed December 24, 1867, not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the board of registrars shall not have the power to fix their salaries at a greater sum than $5 per day.

Adopted in convention at the city of New Orleans this thirteenth day of February, Anno Domino eighteen hundred and sixty-eight.

JAMES G. TALIAFERRO,
President.

Attest:
WM. VIGERS, Secretary.

Be it ordained by the constitutional convention of the state of Louisiana, That the board of registration created by ordinance adopted by the convention February 13, 1868, shall have authority to enforce the collection of the taxes levied by the several ordinances of the convention, and to perform any and all duties appertaining to the same.

Adopted in convention this third March, 1868.

JAMES G. TALIAFERRO,
President.

Attest:
WM. VIGERS, Secretary.

CERTIFICATE OF ELECTION.

The following delegates having received the highest numbers of votes cast were duly elected to compose the board of registration created by ordinance passed by the Louisiana constitutional convention at its session of February 13, 1868, to wit:

Messrs. S. B. PACKARD,
N. UNDERWOOD,
J. H. INGRAHAM,
J. S. HARRIS,
W. JASPER BLACKBURN,
O. H. HEMPSTEAD,
G. W. WICKLIFFE.

New Orleans, March 12, 1868.

JAMES G. TALIAFERRO,
President.

Attest:
WILLIAM VIGERS, Secretary.

In accordance with the foregoing ordinance and resolution, the board of registration adopted the following:

On motion, resolved that all official minutes of the proceedings of this board, together with all proclamations, resolutions, and other legal notices be published in the New Orleans REPUBLICAN, the New Orleans Advocate and the Homer Iliad.

On motion, resolved that the official papers of this board be required to publish the constitution in their regular issues until the days of election, inclusive, to be paid at the regular rates fixed by the convention.

S. B. PACKARD, Chairman.

R. C. RICHARDSON, Secretary.

BOARD OF REGISTRATION, New Orleans, March 27, 1868.

At a regular meeting of the board, held on Friday, March 27, 1868, the following resolution was adopted:

"On motion, resolved that the final settlement of the tax collectors and sheriffs throughout the state with the state treasurer, as fixed in the original tax ordinance adopted by the constitutional convention December 24, 1867, section 4, be extended to the first day of May, 1868."

By virtue of the above ordinance, approved March 3, 1868, I hereby notify all tax collectors and sheriffs throughout the state that they continue to collect the convention tax up to the first of May next.

They are further instructed that the penalty imposed for non-payment of said tax, which penalty was revoked until after March 20, will be enforced from that date.

S. B. PACKARD, Chairman.

FROM THE PEN OF

Louisa Mulbach,

ENTITLED

ANDREAS HOFER,

Is Now Ready.

Andreas Hofer, that wonderful leader of the Tyrolese, with his childlike piety, his fervent patriotism, and his simple-hearted genius, is portrayed with the whole skill of the romancist. Interwoven with the historical part of the work is a love-story of exquisite delicacy and pathos, in which Eliza Wallner, the beautiful and heroic girl, who fought bravely in the ranks of her countrymen, and whose patriotic deeds are recorded by all cotemporary historians, is the heroine.

WARINE.

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDING.

'Twas a weird, wild wooing of ours, Warine,
In the forest dim and old,
Where the trees stood groaning their crude old rhymes,
Brooding above the mold.

The shadows put out their long thin arms,
And fingered the crumpled leaves,
That fell from the crest of the forest kings,
The old primeval trees.

In the dim, dead days of fall, Warine,
With the red and the brown on the leaves,
Where the frost-flowers lifted their glittering bells,
And the air was heavy with bees;
And the song of the winds in the wilds so lone,
And the clash of the nut through the leaves.

I pulled the long, red breaks, Warine,
For the fall of thy beautiful hair,
Blown back from the gloom of thy dusky eyes,
Dense with their slumbering fire.

I gathered the purpling mesh, Warine,
From thy bosom bright and brown,
I held it lovingly in my hands,
Those long and glistening ink-black bands,
That never were plaited or bound.

And I told my love, O bright Warine,
Thy picture is with me yet:
Thy young brown feet on the creamy leaves,
The rim of thy petticoat over thy knees,
That picture I ne'er can forget.

And soft hands, small as the fall-blown leaves,
And sliding over with native fall—
Scarf and hair so long and free,
The swell of the shining limb to the knee,
And thy naked arms' soft fall.

Only the red on the brown, Warine,
Like the red clover over the mold,
Burned on the dusk of thy cheek, Warine,
When I whispered my story bold.

The old trees stood up straight and tall,
And told their crude vespers again,
As I gathered my wild bride near—so near,
With lips like the winter, bright, full, and dear,
Till my happiness grew to pain.

As back from her forehead the dusk of her hair
Down to her waist in black meshes fell,
A still voice talked in the depths of her eyes,
And told me she loved me so well.

* * * * * *

Forgot is the burden of tired old years;
Gray winters have died in their crystallized halls,
My garners are full of sad, gathered tears,
And love has grown deaf to my call.

The wild jay calls from the dead gray trees,
And the silver-winged woodbirds sob to the air,
I roam no more with my wild-born queen,
But my heart still lives in the purpling snare,
Wove from the gloom of her dead, young hair.

The Power of Christ.

BY REV. E. DAVIES.

The tragedy of the Cross is passed: its bleeding victim has expired in triumph. He has visited the region of death and bound the monster in chains. He rises, a conqueror, and for forty days lingers on earth, to comfort and confirm his tempted followers. In one of the mountains of Galilee, he meets "the eleven," and makes to them the following gracious announcement: "All power is given to me, in Heaven and in Earth." How consoling to their trembling hearts.

This power of Christ was the purchase of his precious blood, and includes all the energy necessary to carry on the work of human redemption. It was not assumed or usurped, but given to him as his own purchased right.

All angelic power is at his command. These celestial spirits worship around his mediatorial throne, ready to go on an errand of mercy or of judgment. They are "ministering spirits sent forth to minister to those who shall be heirs of salvation." Christ is exalted at the right of his Father, "far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, in this world, and in that which is to come."

All redeeming power is given to Christ. The plenitude of the Holy Ghost was the "great gift of power" which he secured for men and shed down upon his infant Church, and still works in the salvation of men.

Christ has power, by the Holy Spirit, to enlighten, convert, and sanctify the souls of men. He has, also, power on earth to forgive sins, to call, qualify, and commission his embassadors, and send them out to the ends of the earth, and sustain them by the authority of "the King of kings."

He had power to lead forth his infant Church to certain victory. How feeble its beginning: without temples, without wealth, without secular or political power. Through the Roman empire, it was "the sect everywhere spoken against."

Yet, though philosophers scorned it, and the masses cried against it, it mightily prospered, and spread its beaming influence in the first century not only to the city of Rome, but also to the palace of Cesar.

In an age of literature, and when the arts and sciences flourished, it went forward from conquering to conquer. And when the Roman empire was decaying Christianity was still fresh and flourishing. Deep and strong its foundations were laid on the rock of eternal truth, and the gates of hell can not prevail against them.

The power of Christ preserved his church through the scholasticism and mysticism of the thousand years of the dark ages, till at length Luther arose and commenced the blessed era of the Reformation, which brought to light the doctrine of justification by faith and the infallibility of the word of God, which shook the foundations of Popery, and was the dawn of that latter-day glory that shall yet cover the whole earth.

Christ has power to carry forward his triumphs without the aid of intolerance and persecution. These are carnal weapons that the cause of Christ can well lay aside forever. We are told that even Calvin and Luther were inclined to use them, and that even Cranmer advised Edward the Sixth to put to death some persons for the opinions they held; and that Jeremy Taylor, the champion of toleration, was found considering what sects ought to be tolerated. Thank God! these days have forever passed, and now common sentiment enforces full toleration throughout Christendom. We no longer see the non-conformist exposed to the penalties of imprisonment, the rack, or the stake, or hunted down as wild beasts, for their religious views.

Christ has ever the war power in his hands, and it is refreshing to mark how successfully he has used it for the furtherance of the gospel within the last eighteen years. "The revolution of 1848, and the wars that followed it, planted constitutional government in Sardinia, and opened the door to the Bible in Piedmont. In 1854 came the war with Turkey. It had as its special issue the sultan's firman proclaiming toleration in the Mohammedan empire and repealing the death penalty attached to the profession of Christianity. In 1857 came the mutiny in India, followed by a great war in which the British arms triumphed, and with this triumph came the edict of toleration to all the tribes and languages of that great continent, in the shape of the queen's proclamation declaring Christianity to be the religion of the empire, of which India had now become a part. The next war broke out in the far East, and that war put an end to the complete isolation which China had maintained for so many centuries, and opened that distant land to the Bible and the missionary. Having touched the limits of the farthest East, war returned westward, and in 1859 broke out again in Italy. This, the war of independence as it is termed, opened the whole cuntry from the Alps to Sicily, the Papal States excepted, to the circulation of the Scriptures and to the preaching of the gospel.

War for a time had completed its mission in the old world. It now crossed the Atlantic and there with its hoarse voice it proclaimed liberty to the captive. Amid fields of unexampled carnage it struck down one of the most accursed systems of slavery the world ever saw. Having done its work in the new world it returned again to the old, and its thunder peal was now heard in the heart of Germany, and after a campaign of only nine days Austria was overthrown and ceased to exist as a German power. The last vestige of the once famous Holy Roman Empire was swept out of existence. The strongest political bulwark of the Papacy was overthrown, and by the rise of a great Protestant kingdom in Germany the balance of political power was turned in favor of liberty and evangelical truth.

This is a marvelous chain of events. It conspicuously reveals the footprints of Him who is the church's head and the world's king. Within the short period of eighteen years Satan's kingdom of idolatry has been smitten all around, and toleration has been proclaimed as law to the ends of the earth.

This Prince Immanuel can still make "the wrath of man to praise him," for all power is still in his hands. "And this power penetrates all depth of matter, moves in the roll of the sea, administers back of thrones, and tempers the courses of history."

Time would fail to tell of the power of Christ as seen in the glorious triumph of the missionary cause for the last fifty years. It is marvelous indeed to see how the kingdoms of this world are becoming the kingdoms of God and of his anointed. Take a single instance: "Upon the hopeful condition and future prospects of Africa." On the western coast alone within the last fifty years some two hundred Christian churches have been organized, and upward of fifty thousand hopeful converts have been gathered into these churches. Two hundred schools, several seminaries, and a college at Monrovia are in operation, and not less than twenty thousand native youths are receiving a Christian training in those institutions. Thirty different dialects have been studied out and reduced to writing, into most of which portions of sacred scriptures as well as other religious books have been translated, printed, and circulated among the people. And it is believed that some knowledge of the Christian salvation has been brought within the reach of five millions immortal beings, who have never before heard the name of the blessed Savior. 'Bright lights now begin to blaze up at intervals along a line of seacoast of three thousand miles where unbroken night formerly reigned."

"With anthems of devotion
Ships from all the isles shall meet,
And pour the wealth of ocean
In tribute at His feet—
For Christ shall have dominion
Over river, sea, and shore,
Far as the eagle's pinions,
Or dove's light wing can soar."

Revival Items.

The series of meetings which have been in progress for the last ten weeks in the Methodist Episcopal Church at Marlborough, New York, Rev. N. B. Thompson, pastor, have been crowned with glorious results. Two hundred and twenty-six have united on probation. On Sunday, March 22, the ordinance of baptism was administered to eighty-five, and on the following Sunday it was administered to fifty-one more. Among those who are converted are thirty-five men and their wives; nearly a score are from fifty to seventy years of age; many young men and women, and several of the Sabbath-school children. The people have been most generous in their care for the pastor and the church, and God has greatly blessed their united labors.

On the Napanock charge, New York Conference, Rev. M. Couchman, pastor, about two hundred have professed conversion, and about one hundred and sixty have already joined the Church on probation. The village of Napanock is not the Napanock that it was before the revival. At Port Benjamin the work is almost universal.

At Honesdale, Pennsylvania, Rev. W. J. Judd, pastor, two hundred and twenty-five have professed conversion in a great revival still in progress. Nearly two hundred of the converts have already united with the Methodist Episcopal Church. The pastor has been aided in the good work by Rev. J. A. Wood, formerly a member of the Wyoming Conference. The missionary collection recently taken in the congregation was over $200, nearly double that of any previous year.

Marine City, Michigan, the home of sailors, Rev. W. Hagadorne, pastor, has not been passed by during the past winter of gracious revival. Twenty have professed renewal, and have nearly all joined the Methodist Episcopal Church.

A note from Rev. E. Osborne, received last week, states that the revival still continues in Milton, Ulster county, New York, Rev. J. Croft, pastor. About one hundred have professed conversion in the last six weeks, and eleven were seeking religion the last evening before the preacher came to conference.

We are gratified to learn that the precious revival work in the Methodist Episcopal Church at Saratoga Springs, Rev. S. McChesney, pastor, is still in progress. Up to April 4 about three hundred had professed conversion. The pastor has been efficiently aided during a part of the services by the Troy Praying Band.

Dr. Hall and His System of Hygiene.

As the result of the practice of our principles we don't remember to have had but a single ache in thirty years, nor to have lost a meal for want of an appetite, nor to have closed our office for a single hour on account of sickness. We know that such a result has come from the goodness of the Infinite One, arising however from the carrying out of Cromwell's principles, "Pray to the Lord, and keep your powder dry," if you want to gain the battle on a rainy day, and he did. Here we are in our office from morning until night, and from night until morning, from one year's end to another, engaged in reading, writing, and arithmetic, prescribing, and listening to the long stories of the unfortunate sick; scarcely going outside of the city limits once a year; visiting nobody; not having a moment to spare from daylight until nine o'clock, when we jump into bed. Catch us trotting to a five-mile post and then back again before breakfast; or cutting monkey capers in a gymnasium two hours a day; or playing fisticuffs at imaginary windmills; or splashing around in cold water; we wouldn't wash our face and hands in cold water, even of a midsummer's morning for a premium; we should feel dirty all day afterward; cold water don't make the hands clean; the only legitimate use of cold water which we think of at present is to drink when one is thirsty; turn mill-wheels and float ships; and then, this way of scrubbing the skin by the hour with crash-towels, coarse brushes, and all that nonsense, as if it were desirable to make man's hide as tough and horny as that of a rhinoceros; what's the use of it? It's against nature and all common sense. Reader, what's the use of eating like a pig, and then have to work like a nigger—that is---a freedman to get rid of the surplus; wouldn't it be better to eat less, and have no surplus to work off? eat only as much as nature requires, then take your ease, that's just like what a pig does; you don't find him trotting round his pen by the hour to work off a surfeit: a pig don't surfeit himself; he has too much sense for that; he simply eats what he wants, then stops and lies down and takes it easy; but what does man do, with his magnificent mind, so towering above the humble instincts of the poor brute? He eats more than he wants, as you, reader, have done many a time; you have many a time eaten when you did not want anything; many a time have you coaxed your appetite with brandy and whisky and red pepper, as hot as fire, and pickles, and filthy "bitters," and made a confounded ass of yourself just for the good of a thing while it was passing down your gluttonous throat. Pshaw! you ought to be sick; no wonder you go around among your friends whining and mewing like a sick kitten, enumerating your aches and pains, and ailments, and wasting other people's time in listening to your pitiful lucubrations; to take you at your word, one would suppose you were at death's door, and couldn't possibly live a week: and yet you have been at the same old thing for years: get out!

It's all Tom-foolery about people killing themselves with hard study, by professional labor; if a man gets as much sleep as nature needs in every twenty-four hours, he will be as lively as a cricket at four score, if he will only eat and eat wisely. The papers have it now that Spurgeon is about being laid on the shelf from excess of labor; don't believe a word of it; that's only a kink that the supple London Doctors have put into his head; if he had consulted us as he ought to have done, we would simply have said "Go it, Spurgy," work while the day lasts and the fields are white, and while your hand is in; if you go to sleep, and rest on your oars, as young preachers do, when they marry rich wives, you will, when you wake up, find that it was a Delilah's blandishment, and that the locks of your strength are gone. Only think of Paul being advised to rest; to do nothing; he would have thundered out "As much as in me lies, I will preach the Gospel, if I hang for it." Do you think the impulsive Peter would have been persuaded to take a sea voyage for the sake of his health, when souls were perishing? Would the tender and loving John have been willing to have laid aside his work to take a course of shower baths, or movement cures of base ball or nine pins? or that grand old worker John Wesley; why if you had said he must rest a while, he would have told you, "Go to grass; I'd rather wear out than rust out." No, no; the way for a minister to recuperate is to work on; stop him suddenly, and like the puffing locomotive he will be exploded into atoms. It is not the variety of occupations which has impaired his health; the more different things a man attends to the less likely he is to receive injury; and to stop any machine in its busy whirl instantly is to destroy it. Mr. Spurgeon has become ill by a faulty method of eating, sleeping, and exercise.

Remarkable Escapes of Eminent Men.

John Wesley, when a child, was only just preserved from fire. Almost the moment after he was rescued, the roof of the house where he had been fell in.

Many years have now elapsed since three subalterns might have been seen struggling in the water off St. Helena; one of them was succumbing. He was saved to live as Arthur Wellesley, Duke of Wellington.

Baron, the sculptor, when a tender boy of five years old, fell into the pit of a soap boiler, and must have perished, had not a workman just entered and observed the top of his head, and immediately delivered him.

Two brothers were on one occasion walking together, when a violent storm of thunder and lightning overtook them. One was struck dead on the spot, the other was spared; else would the name of the great reformer; Martin Luther, have been unknown to mankind.

Doddridge when born was so weakly an infant that he was believed to be dead. A nurse standing by fancied she saw some signs of vitality. Thus the feeble spark of life was saved from being extinguished, and an eminent author and consistent Christian preserved to the world.

At the siege of Liecester a young soldier, about seventeen years of age, was drawn out for sentinel duty. One of his comrades was anxious to take his place. No objection was made, and the man went. He was shot dead while on guard. The young man first drawn became the author of the Pilgrim's Progress.

The holy St. Augustine, having to preach at a distant town, took with him a guide, who by some unaccountable means mistook the usual road and fell into a by-path. He afterward discovered that his enemies, having heard of his movements, had placed themselves in the proper road with a design of murdering him.

John Knox, the great Scotch reformer, was always wont to sit at the head of the table with his back to the window. On one particular evening, without being able to account for it, he would neither himself sit in the chair nor permit any one else to occupy his place. That very night a bullet was shot in at the window purposely to kill him; it grazed the chair in which he sat, and made a hole in the foot of a candlestick which was on the table.

Some years ago a young man holding a subordinate position in the East India Company's service, twice attempted to deprive himself of his life by snapping a loaded pistol at his head. Each time the pistol missed fire. A friend entering the room shortly afterward, he requested him to fire it out of the window; it then went off without any difficulty. Satisfied that the weapon had been duly primed and loaded, the young man sprang up, exclaiming: "I must be reserved for something great," and from that moment gave up the idea of suicide, which for some time previous had been uppermost in his thoughts. That man afterward became Lord Clive.

The life of John Newton is but the history of a marvelous deliverance. As a youth he had agreed to accompany some friend on board a man-of-war. He arrived too late; the boat in which his friend had gone was capsized, and all the occupants drowned. On another occasion, when tide surveyor in the port of Liverpool, some business had detained him, so that he came to his boat much later than usual to the great surprise of those who were in the habit of observing his undeviating punctuality. He went out in the boat as heretofore to inspect a ship, which blew up before he reached her. Had he left the shore a few minutes sooner he must have perished with the rest on board.

When Oliver Cromwell was an infant a monkey snatched him from his cradle, leaped with him through a garret window, and ran along the leads of the house. The utmost alarm was excited among the inmates, and various devices used to rescue the child from the guardianship of the new-found protector. All were unavailing; his would-be rescuers had lost all courage, and were in despair of ever seeing the baby alive again, when the monkey quietly retracted its steps, and deposited its burden safely on the bed. On a subsequent occasion the waters had well nigh quenched his insatiable ambition. He fell into a deep pond, from drowning in which a clergyman named Johnson was the sole instrument of his rescue.

The Bible at Death.

Life's last hours are grand testing hours; death tries all principles, and lays bare all our foundation. Many have acted the hypocrite in life who were forced to be honest in the hour of death. Misgivings of heart, that we have kept secret through life, have come out in death; and many also who seemed all right and fair for heaven have had to declare that they had been self-deceived. A gentleman of renown was on his dying bed, when a friend at hand spoke of the Savior.

"As to the Bible," he replied, "it may be true; I do not know."

"What then, are your prospects?" he was asked.

He replied in whispers, which indeed were thunders:

"Dark—very dark."

"But have you no light from the Sun of righteousness? Have you done justice to the Bible?"

"Perhaps not," he replied; but it is now too late—too late."

A mother who had laughed at and ridiculed religion and religious people was seen restless and miserable on her deathbed. She desired that her children should be called. They came. In impassioned accents she addressed them: "My children, I have been leading you in the wrong road all my life. I now find that the broad road leads to destruction. I did not believe it before. Oh! seek to serve God, and try to find the gate to heaven, though you may not see your mother." Her lips were closed forever, and her spirit departed to its account, while the household looked on terror-struck. Mother! father! would you die thus? Oh, no. Then point to heaven and lead the way.—Bible Society Union.

The Gospel Sickle.

God's harvest must be gathered with his own implement—a full, unadulterated, undiminished gospel! Human nature may incessantly devise improved implements of labor. Our implement was invented by Omniscience eighteen hundred years ago; it was made perfect, and no room left for skill to alter it!

We hear much now-a-days of adapting preaching to the age in which we live. If by that be meant the sterner and more rigid Christian system of by-gone ages, I say let us have it; but if by "adaption" be meant more philosophy and less Christianity, more mystic spiritualism, and less evangelical simplicity, may God in his great mercy save us from it! It is treason against truth, and against the God of truth. You may as well attempt to reap a harvest with a lady's scissors as to save souls by some men's preaching. It may have the polish of eloquence, and all the keenness of wit, but be as nothing after all.

We want men that labor in the closet, which must be the spring of all our labor; we should all be better preachers if we were holier men. We must sharpen our sickle on the whetstone of the Bible in our closet! We want men like Owen, Baxter, and Martin. These were the men!—Rev. J. A. James.

Hints for Young Christians.

1. Never neglect daily private prayer; and when you pray remember that God is present and he hears your prayers.—1 John v. 14.

2. Never neglect daily private Bible reading; and when you read remember that God is speaking to you, and that you are to believe and act upon what he says. All backsliding begins with the neglect of these two rules.—John v. 39.

3. Never let a day pass without doing something for Jesus. Every morning reflect on what Jesus has done for you, and then ask yourself, "What am I doing for him?"—Mathew v. 13-16.

4. If you are ever in doubt as to a thing being right or wrong, go to your room and consider whether you can do it in the name of Jesus, and ask God's blessing upon it.—Col. iii. 17. If you can not do this it is wrong.—Rom. xiv. 23.

5. Never take your Christianity from other Christians, or argue, because such and such people do so, that therefore you may.—2 Cor. x. 12.—You are to ask yourself, "How would the Lord have me act?" Follow him.—John x. 27.

6. Never trust your feelings, or the opinions of men, if they contradict God's word. If authorities are pleaded still "let God be true, but every man a liar."—Rom. iii. 4.—National Baptist.

Do You Know there is a God.

A Frenchman who had won high rank among men of science, who had denied the God who is the author of all science, was crossing the great Sahara in company with an Arab guide. He noticed with a sneer that at certain times the guide, whatever obstacles might arise, put them all aside, and kneeling on the burning sands called on his God.

Day after day passed and still the Arab never failed, till at last one evening the philosopher when he rose from his knees asked him with a contemptuous smile: "How do you know there is a God?"

The guide fixed his burning eyes on the scoffer a moment with wonder, and then solemnly said:

"How do I know that a man and not a camel passed my hut last night in the darkness? Was it not by the print of his feet in the sand? Even so," and he pointed to the sun, whose last rays were flashing over the lonely desert, "that footprint is not that of man."

Curing Corns.

The safest, the most accessible, and the most efficient cure of a corn on the toe is to double a piece of thick soft buckskin, cut a hole in it large enough to receive the corn, and bind it around the toe. If, in addition to this, the foot is soaked in warm water for five or more minutes every morning and night, and a few drops of sweet oil or other oily substance are patiently rubbed in on the end after the soaking, the corn will almost infallibly become loose enough in a few days to be easily picked out with a finger-nail; this saves the necessity of paring the corn, which operation has sometimes been followed with painful and dangerous symptoms. If the corns become inconvenient again, repeat the process at once.—Dr. Hall.

THE CROOKED TREE.—A child, when asked why a certain tree grew crooked, replied: "Somebody trod on it, I suppose, when it was a little fellow." How painfully suggestive is that answer. How many, with aching hearts, can remember the days of their childhood, when they were the victims of indiscreet impressions rather than the happy objects of some kind direction and culture. The effects of such misguided discipline have been apparent in their history and character, and by no process of human devising can the wrong be now rectified. The grand error in the education consisted in a system of rigid restraints, without corresponding efforts to develop, cultivate, and train in a right direction.

We clip the following from an exchange, and recommend it to the many "Aunt Judys" in the churches in these parts, when bestowing advice upon those who carry their demonstrations too far:

Concerning "hollering" in meeting, Aunt Judy, an old colored woman, said to one of her sisters:

"'Taint de rale grace, honey; 'taint de sure glory. You hollers too loud. When you gits de dove in your heart and de lamb on your bosom, you'll feel as ef you was in dat stable at Bethl'em, and de blessed Virgin had lent you de sleepin' baby to hold."

RING THE BELL SOFTLY.

Some one has gone from this strange world of ours,
No more to gather its thorns and its flowers;
No more to linger where sunbeams must fade,
Where, on all beauty, death's fingers are laid;
Weary with mingling life's bitter and sweet,
Weary with parting and never to meet,
Some one has gone to the bright golden shore—
Ring the bell softly, there's crape on the door!

Some one is resting from sorrow and sin,
Happy where earth's conflicts enter not in;
Joyous as birds when the morning is bright,
When the sweet sunbeams have brought us their light;
Weary with sowing and never to reap,
Weary with labor and welcoming sleep—
Some one's departed to Heaven's bright shore,
Ring the bell softly, there's crape on the door.

Angels were anxiously longing to meet
One who walks with them in Heaven's bright street;
Loved ones have whispered that some one is blest;
Free from earth's trials, and taking sweet rest.
Yes! there is one more in angelic bliss—
One less to cherish, and one less to kiss;
One more departed to Heaven's bright shore—
Ring the bell softly, there's crape on the door!

Humorous.

A bachelor's reply to a young lady, who rather significantly sent him, as a present, some wormwood:

"I'm glad your gift is not a Miss,
Much worse might me befall;
The wormwood's bad alone, but worse
The wormwood and the gal(l)."

The resolve of the landlords—"Let us prey."

A French newspaper's definition of a whale—an antediluvian sardine.

Judy knows a man so hard up that he sleeps on tick.

Another successful breeder of short "horns"—whisky tax.

An appropriate book for hotels—A come-an-tarry.

Long Odds—Tall husband and short wife.

A peaceful cargo of human beings—The Pacific mails.

Advice to husbands, "How to make home happy"—go off somewhere.

The "Poor in Spirit"—Bankrupt publicans.

An exchange asks, "How did Martin Luther die?" He was excommunicated by a bull.

A man behind the times is apt to speak ill of them. Probably they don't look well from behind.

It's no use to be miserable to-day because you're afraid you can't be happy to-morrow.

A club of hen-pecked husbands meet once a week out West, and their adjournment is called—the rising of the tied.

"Are our girls fitted for wives?" queries a sober exchange. "Are they fitted for husbands?" retorts a young itemizer.

"I am like Balaam," said a dandy on meeting a pretty girl in a narrow passage, "Stopped by an angel." "So am I," said she, "for I am accosted by an ass."

A friend in allusion to the practice of buying and selling wives in Egypt, said that though his wife didn't cost him a cent he was cheated in the bargain.

A good wife is like a printer's roller, which is composed of molasses and glue. She is sweet as the former article and sticks to her husband like the latter.

A young man in Chicago named Benedict, disgusted after a spree, undertook to shoot himself the other day, but the bullet flattened against the skull—showing in a very striking manner how hardened young men become in Chicago.

Mrs. Partington says that if she should be cast away she would prefer meeting with the catastrophe in the bay of Biscuits, for then she should have something to live on.

One of our exchanges praises an egg which it says "was laid on our table by the Rev. Mr. Smith." Mr. Smith seems to be a layman as well as a minister.

There is a man out West who drinks so much whisky that musquitoes that bite him die of delirium tremens.

Conversing one day with a fashionable and pretty belle the fastidious Mr. Spriggs observed that "ladies that lisped wished to be kissed." The young lady had before been speaking unaffectedly, but now replied, "tho' I've heard thay."

An old lady was admiring the beautiful picture called "Saved." "It's no wonder," said she, "that the poor child fainted, after pulling that great dog out of the water."

Joe S—— resides in southern Oregon. When his wife arrived in San Francisco en route to join her lord, a gentlemen asked her if she came by water.

"Yes, I came by steamboat."

"What steamship?"

"Well, I don't know what the name on't was—Sary Navady (Sierre Nevada) was onto the blankits; but I don't r'ally know whether it was the name of the chambermaid or the name of the steamboat."

Evidently not an operator in "Pacific Mail."

Republican National Ticket.

FOR PRESIDENT.

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Rev. Dr. Newman will preach in his church to-morrow at ten o'clock, and Rev. R. K. Diossy at half-past 7 o'clock.

Rev. James Lynch has been chosen one of the delegates to the National Republican Convention.

Personal.

On Monday next we leave for Chicago, to attend as delegate our General Conference. During our absence the editorial management of the Advocate will be with our assistant editor, Rev. Mr. Henry. We have engaged able writers to furnish editorial matter for the Advocate, and we shall keep up a weekly correspondence, and will furnish our readers with the doings of the General Conference and of the National Convention.

Book Notices.

The American Artisan.—This is one of the largest and best scientific journals published. It is filled with interesting matter pertaining to the sciences and arts, and amply illustrated with cuts and drawings. We always read it with interest. It is published by Brown, Coombs & Co., solicitors of patents, No. 189 Broadway, New York.

The Waterloo Chronicle—Edited and published by P. E. W. Moyer, Waterloo, Canada. An excellent family newspaper, filled with good selections and editorial matter. And we judge it to be a No. 1 medium of advertising.

Arthur's Home Magazine.—The contents of this magazine for the month of May are as interesting as the previous months, which is saying a great deal. It contains engravings and music as usual.

Harper's Bazar—With its weekly visitations appears as attractive as ever to its readers. Its patterns, drawings, fashion plates, etc., are considered the best.

The New York Tribune.—We would call special attention to the advertisement of the Tribune, found in another column. The price of this prince of newspapers, as will there be seen, is surprisingly low.

"Harper's Pictorial History of the Great Rebellion" is a magnificent affair. It will be immensely popular. This great work is comprised in thirty-five numbers including the index, and contains one thousand illustrations. These illustrations consist of portraits of persons prominent in the late war, of maps and plans of campaigns and battles, and of views and scenes photographed on the spot. Price of each number is thirty cents.

"Charlotte's Inheritance," by M. E. Braddon, is a novel of much interest. By the Harpers; price fifty cents.

"Harper's Phrase-Book, or Hand-Book of Travel Talk," for travelers and schools, being a guide to conversations in English, French, German, and Italian on a new and improved method, with concise and explicit rules for the pronunciation of the different languages.

"David the King of Israel," a portrait drawn from Bible history and the Book of Psalms, by Frederick William Krummacher, D.D. By the Harpers. This work is full of noble thoughts expressed in that grand language which gave so much power to Krummacher's "Elijah."

The above books can be had of Krull & Dickey, wholesale and retail booksellers and stationers, 106 Canal street, New Orleans, Louisiana.

Dentistry.—We take great pleasure in recommending all who wish an excellent job of dentistry done to Dr. B. F. Wright, 153 Customhouse street, between Bourbon and Burgundy streets. Dr. Wright expects to start North soon to spend the summer, and up to the time of his departure will attend to the work of all who call on him at one-half of his heretofore moderate rates, if paid in greenbacks. As he is a workman of the best order, we do not see why his rooms should not be crowded during the time he remains in the city, even though it is hard times.

Southwestern Methodism.

A history of the Methodist Episcopal church in the Southwest by Rev. Charles Elliott, D.D., is one of this eminent Christian authors' most valuable contributions to the literature of the church. It would we think difficult to produce a more interesting history of the times from 1844 to 1864 than is found in this volume. The exciting events of the late war have blotted from the minds of many of our people the trying incidents and sufferings of our ministers and the people who were zealously laboring to advance the cause of Christ in the States of Missouri, Arkansas, Texas, and Kansas. Dr. Elliot has preserved the records, and has presented them to the public, supported by testimony of the highest character. The reader can not peruse the book without being convinced that the Methodist Episcopal Church South was more solicitous about the preservation and spread of the institution of slavery than they were for the salvation of souls.

Wherever the Methodist Episcopal Church had an organization in the Southwest they were opposed by the "Church South," whose bishops and ministers aided to incite mob violence to drive them out, notwithstanding the Southwest was first occupied by preachers from the North. The warning of Rev. Mark Robertson to leave Arkansas, Rev. A. Bewley to leave Southwest Missouri; the persecution of Rev. William Sellers in North Missouri, Rev. W. H. Wiley in Southwest Missouri; the tarring and feathering of Rev. William Sellers and the murder of Benj. Holland in Andreas county, Missouri; the attack on Bishop James and the Arkansas Conference near Bonham, Texas, in 1859, and the arrest and murder by hanging without trial of Rev. A. Bewley, at Fort Worth, Texas, in September, 1860, were all crimes committed against the Methodist Church for remaining true the teachings and discipline as taught by the fathers of the Church, and such eminent statesmen as Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Randolph, and others. These crimes were all encouraged by the "Church South," whose bishops, ministers, and journals are on the record.

The author gives a full history of the first years of the war in Missouri, during which period two hundred thousand loyal people were driven from Missouri, including all the ministers and members of the Methodist Church, many of whom enlisted in the Union army, and who remained true to their religion and country, and when the armed traitors were dispersed reorganized their churches and called on their people to return. The history of the reorganization of the Methodist Church in the Southwest is full of interest. Truly, "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." Where our ministers were persecuted and compelled to flee for their lives, they now worship God without fear, and are building up an organization which will in a few years number hundreds of thousands of members of the Methodist Church in the "Southwest." We can not speak too highly of Dr. Elliott's book. No work of its size contains more historical facts connected with the history of our Church. It should be universally read.

A Moral View.

To the mere politician the recent election was brimful of excitement; he seemed to realize that all was at stake and that the hour had come for the final effort. Such a view was natural and consistent. But rising above the politician we felt influences at work of a moral character and felt the pulsations of a destiny big with consequences to the Church of God. It can not be denied that too many of the leaders on both sides derived their zeal from the promised benefits of office, while only a few calmly surveyed the whole field of action and entered the contest from profound convictions of right and duty. We sought the tranquillity of society. The people need rest. No community can forever endure the intense strain upon the nervous and mental systems which the events of the last seven years have caused. There must be release. The harp string will snap if not loosened. Society, maddened by such a pressure, will break into a thousand fragments. Believing that the cause of this abnormal condition of society is political, we sought a better state of things by political means, and confident that the ratification of the Constitution would be the peace of the State, we sought the desired end.

Where a people are frenzied with political excitement, it is impossible to induce them to attend to those great educational, charitable, and religious enterprises which relate to man's higher nature. These great interests flourish in peace—when the public mind is tranquil. Amid the tumult incident to the late partisan strife, they languished into dying, and ignorance, misanthropy, and irreligion were throwing their upas shadow upon the fairest portion of community. The good and the wise felt the deadly atmosphere and shuddered at the result. But the restoration of civil rule; the triumph of human rights; the ascendancy of Republicanism will avert the danger; relieve society of its burdens; and infuse into the body politic the vigor and joys of a new life.

How Did the Northerners Vote?

We have lived here long enough to know that it is no guarantee that a man will do right because he is from the North; and this was well illustrated in the late election. We are proud to state that some of our Northern merchants boldly avow their political and religious sentiments, and fearlessly voted the straight Republican ticket; but it is with shame that we have to record that not a few of our people from the North voted against the Constitution, and voted the whole Democratic ticket without the erasure of a name. And not only this, but on the election days they entered the canvass with ardor, denounced Republican Northern men, and threatened to discharge their own employes if the latter voted for H. C. Warmoth. Doubtless they had a right to do all this, and to their manner of voting we can not object; but we do object to their political hypocrisy. In the North these men have a Republican record, and in their annual visits are blatant, Red Republicans, but down here and under a Democratic mercantile pressure they are the fiercest of the "unterrified Democracy." And to prove to their Southern masters that they are sincere they carry their political hypocrisy into their churches, from which they exclude patriotism and the "rights of all men." We have watched the course of these men, and regret that they can prove that they were born on the other side of Mason and Dixon's line. Both morally and politically they are a positive disadvantage to society and New Orleans, and the sooner they can scrape together their few ill-gotten dollars and be off the better it will be for our community, for we predict for them failure in business rather than success. God will not prosper such men, and the Republicans who have now gained control of the State will see well to it that such men shall not be patronized at the expense of those who have stood firmly to their duty.

To General Buchanan.

The frauds perpetrated at the last elections are so gross and enormous, and attended by such unparalleled outrages on the rights and persons of citizens that when the evidence is gathered together and submitted to the country and to General Grant a grave responsibility will be found to attach to some one (who it may be we can not say.) The illegal acts done were in many cases said by the perpetrators to have been under the orders of the General.

The illegal seizures of the registration papers of voters by the commissioners of elections, especially by Cavaroc, Hughes, and Haupht, at poll one, precinct nine, fourth ward, were alleged by these men to be done under direct orders from the Commanding General, through a member of his staff. We doubt if the General himself knew the nature of this order. It was infamous, and resulted in the barefaced robbery in that ward alone from at least sixty voters of their registration papers, and of their votes at this election. We have seen the affidavits of most of these men. They are generally old residents, well known, who have voted before, and whose names appear on the revised lists as published.

To add to these outrages a darker dye, these men in most cases upon demanding the return of their registration papers, and in many cases even before they had said a word, were arrested by the order of General Buchanan's commissioners, and hurried off to jail and there incarcerated without charges and without trial for four days, and then released by a certain recorder upon the promise to "go home and drop the matter, and say no more about it."

In other cases these Commissioners abused and insulted voters, calling them "d—d black rascals," and other like choice epithets.

At one of the polls in the fifth ward the commissioner, Mr. Field, refused to admit the policemen, or the committee from the Republican party authorized to be present by the General, for one hour after the closing of the polls. And for that hour the ballot box was locked from the sight of the public, and in the hands of the commissioners and deputy sheriffs alone, and when the door was opened the ballot box was found opened.

At poll nine, fourth ward, a deputy sheriff assaulted a colored man, and placed with violence a Democratic ticket in his hands and ordered him to vote it, and on being reproved by a citizen threatened to arrest the citizen. Evidence is collected indisputable that at least two hundred legal voters in the second district were thus driven and frightened from the polls.

There is also evidence of tampering with the ballot boxes, taking out ballots, and forging false tally lists.

We submit to the General that he can not too promptly investigate these matters.

GRAND SCHOOL EXHIBITION BY COLORED CHILDREN.

Large Gathering of the Friends of Education in the Senate Chamber.

We were among the fortunate recipients of an invitation to attend the school exhibition of colored children, which took place in the Senate Chamber on Monday evening, April 20, 1868. Long before the appointed hour, which was eight o'clock P. M., crowds of persons were seen wending their way through the inclement weather to Mechanics' Institute, the place selected for the exhibition. We were ushered in by the attentive managers, and in a few moments a most enchanting spectacle was presented to our gaze. The chamber, which is quite large, was decked in evergreens, and filled with the elite of the colored population. On the platform sat Frederick K. Hyde, Esq., director; Mrs. G. Deval, Mrs. M. A. Nelson, Mrs. C. Hyde, managers; Miss Medora Hyde, pianist; R. W. Bowie, and about one hundred handsome girls and boys.

The exercises consisted of speeches, recitations, dialogues, songs, and music, and created a good impression on the audience. The music and singing of Mrs. Laura Jacobs and Miss Medora Hyde were of a highly interesting and patriotic character. But where all did so nobly it is invidious to institute comparisons either in the dress, appearance, conduct, or success of the participants. To the friends of liberty no sight could be more encouraging than those bright, beaming eyes, and happy faces, giving promise that the now "despised" rising generation is to take a bold and decided stand in days to come—that the hour is surely advancing when the rosy flush, the opening stream of education shall broaden the river, and lake, and sea; when its waves shall be purpled with the reflected glories of liberty; when, on the shore of prejudice, educated minds shall light the beacon of reason, the flame of wisdom, before whose magic radiance the shades of error and ignorance flee; when the bright star of a life of unity shall arise, and the God-given injunction of excelsior lead men to the heights of mental, moral, political, and religious equality.

The exercises of the occasion were worthy in the fullest sense of the great cause they represented, and evinced the refined taste of those who had the management of the affair.

During the exercises Mr. Hyde introduced the Hon. Messrs. T. W. Conway and G. M. Wickliffe,, who addressed their willing hearers upon the value of the school and the worth of the glorious boon of education.

The exercises were frequently interrupted by the applause of the audience, who seemed as if inspired with patriotic ardor.

Time slipped away so rapidly that ere we were aware the hour of midnight had arrived, and those who had been enjoying an intellectual feast for hours retired evidently well pleased with the festivities of that never to be forgotten occasion.

A bountiful supply of the substantial "good things" having been supplied by Mrs. Clarrissa Hyde, and enjoyed by the children, all were dismissed to their homes after singing that patriotic song of "Rally Round the Flag, Boys," which was rendered with unity and great effect, causing a prolonged applause from the audience.

While memory remains the influence of such scenes as these imprinted on the plastic heart of childhood will remain to cheer the path of life to come. The coming generation, like our own, may be called to pass through trying scenes. The time may come when "the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fail:" but let them not be discouraged, for we are promised that "they that wait on wisdom shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint:"

In conclusion we desire to congratulate all connected with the exhibition upon the perfect harmony of action and complete success which crowned their efforts to prove the capabilities of the colored race for improvement, and that all are of the same Adam and Eve.

Freedmen's Savings Bank.

We are happy to announce to the public that the Advisory Committee of this bank has been remodeled, and such modifications made as will increase the patronage of this excellent institution. Rev. Dr. Newman is chairman of the committee; C. S. Sauvinet is secretary, and with them are associated such gentlemen as Messrs. Waples, Crane, Bowie, Turner, Banks, Pemberton, etc. And we now invite the attention of our friends to the advantages of such a bank, where they may deposit their savings and receive a fair interest thereon. If you have a spare dollar, put it in the bank, and this will not only increase, but will incline you to put another there. Some laboring people give their spare dollars to some friend to keep, but it is better to place them in the bank, where they will be safe, and where you can draw them out when you have need of them.

THE RESULT.

The smoke of the battle has now been sufficiently cleared away to enable us to take a pretty accurate survey of the field. It is obvious that the contest has been most determined on both sides, but the victory is with the majority and discipline. Outside of the city the result is extremely gratifying. Report after report comes to us from the country parishes, announcing the success of the Union ticket and the entire overthrow of the rebels in about three-fourths of the state. We publish this morning returns from about half the parishes in the State, by which it will be seen that so far as heard from the Republicans have carried seventeen and the Democrats eight out of the twenty-five reported. Neither Orleans nor Jefferson is included in the estimate, as the vote in both is so close that there will not be much majority either way. The majority for the constitution in the twenty-seven parishes heard from will probably reach fifteen thousand. Nominally the figures are much higher, but we have reason to believe that some of the reported majorities will be reduced. It is safe to estimate, however, that the constitution has been ratified by at least twenty-five thousand majority. For Governor H. C. Warmoth will have a majority equal to if not greater than that for the constitution. The rest of the State ticket has no organized opposition. The rebels have generally voted for the present incumbents, while the Tribune nominees do not appear to have been heard of at all in some localities. The average vote of the self-nominated candidates appears to be about two in every thousand.

Among the parishes that have the largest reported majorities are Assumption, 756 (official); Concordia, 1900; Iberville, 2000; Madison, 1200; Plaquemines, 1500; St. Charles, 1500; St. James, 1900; St. John Baptist, 1200; Terrebonne, 1500; West Feliciana, 900, and Rapides, 1700. To these we shall doubtless be able to add Tensas, Carroll, Bossier, Natchitoches, and Vermillion, returns from which have not yet come in. Avoyelles, Caddo, St. Helena, St. Landry, St. Martin, Washington, and East and West Baton Rouge are already in with small rebel majorities. The highest reported is 800, and that will probably be reduced when the true count comes in. All their majorities combined can not offset any two of the largest Republican parishes. We publish in another place an estimate, based upon the returns, of the probable strength of the two parties in the General Assembly, by which it will be seen that that body will be Republican by a large majority. This will secure for our party the two Senators, besides giving other advantages which will be referred to by us hereafter.

The returns from Orleans parish foot up rather against the Republicans; but with a decided majority in the Legislature most of the accidents resulting from the loss of this parish and the city can be cured at the first session.

Altogether, the result is as favorable as we had reason to hope for. We have secured the ratification of the constitution, and elected a state government loyal to the Union, and loyal to the great national Republican party. There can be no doubt that under such auspices our Congressional delegation will be admitted. This will probably consist of two Republican Senators, and four out of the five Congressmen. The Democrats have no doubt elected their candidate in the Second District. We are now about to enjoy the blessings of civil government, and that too under the rule of enlightened men. Our laws will be made for the real benefit of the people, without regard to race or color, or length of residence in the state. It is impossible to overestimate the many blessings that we may reasonably expect to flow from the new and better order of things. For the first time in the history of this State, the whole people have spoken, and their verdict is recorded on the side of right and justice.—N. O. Republican.

THE ELECTION FRAUDS.

We assure our friends in the country that the outrages which have been committed during the election will not go unpunished, nor the wrongs unrighted. Within ten days Benjamin F. Wade will be President of the United States, and within twenty days the scoundrels who have committed these frauds and outrages will be tried before military commissions. In many parishes the election will doubtless be set aside and a new one ordered under the supervision of commissioners who, not honest men, will at least have before them the wholesome example of the punishment of their predecessors.

We believe Major General Buchanan desires to do what is right in these election matters, and it may be the guilty parties will have justice dealt out to them sooner than they expect.

The accumulating evidence is developing greater and more outrageous frauds than have ever before been perpetrated in this city, or perhaps in any other part of the country. Evidently they have extended to some of the country parishes; to how many we are now unable to state. The party machinery of the Republican party, however, is so complete throughout the State, that it will be easy to detect these frauds, and also easy to convict and punish the guilty parties.

The Board of Registration appointed by and representing the Constitutional Convention are acting wisely and energeticaly in the matter.

The evidence they have already accumulated of frauds in this city and parish are sufficient when fairly weighed to insure the election of our city and parish tickets by large majorities.

In several parishes near New Orleans the evidences of fraud are also damning, and some of the Commissioners will probably grow wiser if not better within the walls of the penitentiary.

Unquestionably, if the New Constitution is rejected by fraud and violence, of which the Board of Registration will judge, the Constitutional Convention will reassemble, and these disgraceful wrongs will be righted; and the rebel threats of violence with which the whole atmosphere is filled will be crushed down by loyal laws enforced by loyal men, and the strong hand of a new commander of this Fifth Military District.—N. O. Republican.

Letter from Thomas J. Durant.

We received the following letter from Mr. Durant last week a few hours after going to press. We therefore insert it this week. It speaks emphatically, and therefore needs no comment from us:

Washington, D. C., April 11, 1868.

Rev. J. P. Newman, Publisher New Orleans Advocate:

Dear Sir—In the New Orleans Tribune of the seventh instant is given General Frisbie's speech furnished them as delivered by him on Saturday, April 4, before a mass meeting held at the headquarters of the true Central Executive committee, in the course of which speech the general says in speaking of the deeds of those he opposes, "They deceived and betrayed," allow me to omit the general's overwrought epithet, "Thomas J. Durant."

This is a mistake. No man or set of men in Louisiana has either deceived or betrayed me for the reason that no promises have been made to me, and I have made none.

I am yours respectfully,
THOMAS J. DURANT.

Spurgeon's "Naturalness."

Apart from the undeniable power of genius, there is evidently nothing so sure of success in a preacher as naturalness, the artless expression of an intelligent mind and a feeling heart. Books written on the "art of preaching" are all conceived on a false idea. A London correspondent of the Christian Intelligencer has heard Spurgeon, and speaks thus of his manner and appearance:

He is a plain, rather thick set man, apparently about forty years of age; has an eloquent voice and strength of lungs sufficient to fill the vast area of his tabernacle. The first impression you get of the speaker is the absence of every thing like art; extreme naturalness, so to speak, characterizes his whole manner. Nobody would suppose that he felt that he had any special responsibility to discharge, or felt the least concern of how the task before him should be disposed of. His prayers indicated depth of feeling and breadth of view, as well as ease and versatility in the use of language; and yet they expressed nothing more than the common and ordinary wants of the human soul. No soaring flight to the clouds, nor rhetorical description of the vale of woe. Heaven is an ordinary, plain habitation for the just, and hell is but the abode of the damned. Plainness in expression, plainness of thought, and plain and common illustrations make up the body of his devotion. But no class, condition, or character of men are forgotten in his plain, homely, but eloquently uttered prayers. The babe in its mother's arms, the father in his infirmities of age, the youth in his temptations, those in the toils, cares, and ambitions of middle life, and the sons and daughters of sorrow, are all commended to God's mercy and grace.

What is here said of his apparent age forms a singular incidental contradiction to the impression of executive ease conveyed by the preacher's manner. Mr. Spurgeon is thirty-three. The labor he has performed, and does perform, might well add seven years to his looks. The gout from which he now suffers may have aided in deepening the lines, though he pleasantly speaks of the infirmity as one of the "good qualities" inherited from his father, and in no way whatever affecting his tongue.

Wonders of Man.

Wonders at home by familiarity cease to excite astonishment, but thence it happens that many know but little about the "house we live in"—the human body. We look upon a man as we look upon a house from the outside, just as a whole or unit, never thinking of the many rooms, the curious passages, and the ingenious internal arrangement of the house, or of the wonderful structure of the man; and the harmony and adaptation of all his parts.

In the human skeleton, about the time of maturity, are one hundred and sixty-five bones.

The muscles are about five hundred and nine in number.

The length of the alimentary canal is about thirty-two feet.

The amount of blood in an adult is near thirty pounds, or full one-fifth of the entire weight.

The heart is six inches in length and four inches in diameter, and beats 70 times per minute, 4200 times per hour, 100,800 times per day, 36,882,000 times per year, 2,565,440,000 in three score and ten, and at each beat two and a half ounces of blood are thrown out of it, 175 ounces per minute, 656 pounds per hour, seven and three-fourths tons per day. All the blood in the body passes through the heart every three minutes. This little organ by its ceaseless industry, lifts the enormous weight of 360,700,200 tons.

In the allotted span
The Psalmist gave to man,

The lungs will contain about one gallon of air at their usual degree of inflation. We breathe, on an average, 1200 times per hour, inhaling 600 gallons of air, or about 14,400 gallons per day. The aggregate surface of the air cells of the lungs exceeds 20,000 square inches, an area very nearly equal to the floor of a room 12 feet square.

The average weight of the brain of the adult male is three pounds and eight ounces; of a female two pounds and four ounces. The nerves are all connected with it, directly or through the spinal marrow. These nerves, together with their branches and minute ramifications, probably exceed 10,000,000 in number, forming a "body guard" outnumbering by far the mightiest army ever marshaled!

The skin is composed of three layers, and varies from one-fourth to one-eighth of an inch in thickness. Its average area in an adult is estimated to be 2000 square inches. The atmospheric pressure being about fourteen pounds to the square inch, a person of medium size is subjected to a pressure of 40,000 pounds! Pretty tight hug.

Each square inch of skin contains 3500 sweating tubes, or perspiratory pores, each of which may be likened to a little drain tile one-fourth of an inch long, making an aggregate length over the entire surface of the body of 301,156 feet, or a tile ditch for draining the body almost forty miles long.

Man is made marvelously. Who is eager to investigate the curious, to witness the wonderful works of Omnipotent Wisdom, let him not wander the wide world round to seek them, but examine himself. "The proper study of mankind is man."

The Art of Not Hearing.

The art of not hearing is fully as important to domestic happiness as a cultivated ear, for which so much money and time are expended. There are so many things which it is painful to hear, many of which, if heard, will disturb the temper and detract from contentment and happiness, that every one should be educated to take in or shut out sounds at will.

If a man falls into a violent passion and calls me all manner of names, the first word shuts my ears, and I hear no more. If in my quiet voyage of life I am caught in one of those domestic whirlwinds of scolding, I shut my ears, as a sailor would furl his sails, and making all tight scud before the gale. If a hot and restless man begins to inflame my feelings, I consider what mischief these sparks might do in the magazine below, where my temper is kept, and instantly close the door.

Does a gadding mischief-making fellow begin to inform me what people are saying about me, down drops the portcullis of my ear, and he can not get in any further. Some people feel very anxious to hear everything that will vex and annoy them. If it is hinted that one has spoken ill of them they set about searching and finding out. If all the petty things said of any one by heedless or ill-natured idlers were to be brought home to him he would become a mere walking pincushion stuck full of sharp remarks. I should as soon thank a man for emptying on my bed a bushel of nettles, or setting loose a swarm of musquitoes in my chamber, or raising a pungent dust in my house generally, as to bring upon me all the tattle of spiteful people. If you would be happy when among good men, open your ears; when among bad, shut them. It is not worth while to hear what your servants say when they are angry; what your children say after they slam the door; what a beggar says whose petition you have rejected; what your neighbors say about your children; what your rivals say about your business or dress.

I have noticed that a well-bred woman never hears an impertinent or vulgar remark.

A kind of discreet deafness saves one from many insults, from much blame, from not a little apparent connivance in dishonorable conversation.

The "Blue Laws."—The following from last week's Independent answers a question sometimes asked: "A correspondent desires to know if the blue laws of Connecticut were actual, bona fide statutes. No. They were satires. A tory churchman, who was driven out of New England for his toryism, indulged himself in the luxury of revenge by drawing up a code of laws as a caricature of the laws of Connecticut. The first publication of these pretended statutes (which never existed except in the author's brain and book) was in London in 1781. The name of the splenetic exile was Samuel Peters. Like the author of the Moon Hoax he had a good many believers at the time. And a good many innocent people (like those, for instance, who think that Andrew Jackson is still alive) still believe that the blue laws were veritable statutes, once on the statute book of the Nutmeg State. But let our correspondent ease his mind: the present distinguishing laws of Connecticut are not blue, but black."

What Luther Loved.—Luther, when studying, always had his dog lying at his feet—a dog he had brought from Wartburg, and of which he was very fond. An ivory crucifix stood on the table before him. He worked at his desk for days together, without going out; but when fatigued, and the ideas began to stagnate, he took his guitar with him to the porch, and there executed some musical fantasy, (for he was a skillful musician), when the ideas would flow upon him as fresh as flowers after a summer's rain. Music was his invariable solace at such times. Indeed, Luther did not hesitate to say that, after theology, music was the first of arts. "Music," said he, "is the art of the prophets; it is the only other art which, like theology, can calm the agitation of the soul, and put the devil to flight." Next to music, if not before it, Luther loved children and flowers. That great, gnarled man had a heart tender as a woman's.

No man knows less of pleasure than he who habitually seeks it. For him there is but a step between novelty and satiety, and the charm of the former is utterly destroyed by the intemperate haste with which he plunges into the latter.

Brigham Young attended the theatre lately with six dozen of his daughters. Three or four dozen more are understood to have been on the stage. The rest of the family were kept at home to take their turn another time.

LADIES AFTER BATHING

Who suffer from the smarting effects of the soap, will find instant relief in the use of Burnett's Kalliston. ap25

Burnett's Florimel is an exquisite perfume, and is so delicate and pure that it will not discolor muslin.

Ask druggists to order this delightful perfume, or obtain it at headquarters, 592 Broadway, New York.

Burnett's Cocoaine is not greasy or sticky. It is far superior to pomades or alcoholic washes as a hair-dressing.

LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Passed at the Second Session of the Fortieth Congress.

AN ACT granting a certain right of way to the Hudson River West Shore railroad company.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the consent of the United States is hereby given to the Hudson River West Shore railroad company to locate, construct, and operate its railroad on the Shore line, across the property belonging to the government at West Point, in the State of New York, upon such location and under such regulations as shall be approved by the Secretary of War.

Approved December 14, 1867.

AN ACT to provide for changing of names of persons in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Samuel Chase Barney, Jr., of the District of Columbia, be and he is hereby authorized to change his name to Samuel Chase De Krafft, and that this act shall take effect from December first, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That any person being a resident of the District of Columbia, being desirous to have his or her name changed may file a petition in the supreme court of the said District of Columbia, setting forth therein the reasons therefor, and also the name desired to be assumed; notice of the filing of such petition containing the substance and prayer thereof shall be published for three consecutive weeks in some newspaper in general circulation published in said District, prior to the hearing of said petition. The said supreme court, or the justice holding the civil term thereof, on proof of such notice, and upon such showing as may be deemed satisfactory, may change the name of such applicant according to the prayer of such petition.

Approved December 26, 1867.

AN ACT to prevent frauds in the collection of the tax on distilled spirits.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act no distilled spirits shall be withdrawn or removed from any warehouse for the purpose of transportation, redistillation, rectification, change of package, exportation, or for any other purpose whatever, until the full tax on such spirits shall have been duly paid to the collector of the proper district. And all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be and they are hereby repealed.

Approved January 11, 1868.

AN ACT to provide for the exemption of cotton from internal tax.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all cotton grown in the United States after the year eighteen hundred and sixty-seven shall be exempt from internal tax; and cotton imported from foreign countries on and after November first, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, shall be exempt from duty.

Approved February 3, 1868.

AN ACT to suspend further reduction of the currency.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act, the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to make any reduction of the currency, by retiring or canceling United States notes, shall be and is hereby suspended; but nothing herein contained shall prevent the cancellation and destruction of mutilated United States notes, and the replacing of the same with notes of the same character and amount.

AN ACT to facilitate the collection of the direct tax in the State of Delaware.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the valuation enumerated in the assessment list for direct tax in the State of Delaware, completed April nineteenth, A. D. eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, being the valuation of real estate as owned at or near the time of the completion of said assessment, is hereby declared and made a lawful assessment of the direct tax of seventy-four thousand six hundred and eighty-three dollars and thirty-three and one-third cents, apportioned to the State of Delaware by virtue of an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide increased revenue from imports to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved August fifth, eighteen hundred and sixty one, upon the valuation therein enumerated, with the same force and effect as if made with reference to the date mentioned in the thirteenth section of said act; and that all existing provisions of law for the collection of said direct tax in the loyal States, except as provided in the fifty-third section of said act, shall be applicable to the collection of the tax therein assessed. The notification of the time and place where appeals would be received and determined relative to said assessment, given by the assessor immediately after said completion, shall be deemed a lawful notice, and all proceedings under said notice, and in general in relation to said assessment, are hereby made as valid and legal as they would have been had the assessment been valid from its commencement.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the time within which the assessor is required to deliver the assessment list to the collector shall be within thirty days from the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the lien provided for by the thirty third section shall be and remain in force during two years after the taxes assessed in accordance with the first section of this act shall become due and payable.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That all necessary expenses in procuring copies of the State assessment lists, and for advertising connected with the assessment and collection of the tax shall be paid out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, the accounts for such expenses being first approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Approved February 21, 1868.

AN ACT to authorize the Southern Minnesota Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Mississippi river and establish a post route.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Southern Minnesota Railroad Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, is hereby authorized to construct and operate a railroad bridge across the Mississippi river, between the city of La Crosse, Wisconsin, and a point opposite, in the State of Minnesota, with the consent of the legislatures of the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin, and said bridge by this act authorized to be constructed is hereby declared to be a post route, and subject to all the terms, conditions, restrictions, and requirements, and entitled to all the privileges named in an act approved July twenty-fifth, eighteen hundred and sixty-six, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of certain bridges and to establish them as post roads."

Approved February 21, 1868.

AN ACT in relation to additional bounty.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That if any person or persons entitled to the bounty provided by sections twelve and thirteen of the act making appropriations for the civil service, approved July twenty-eight, eighteen hundred and sixty-six, shall have died or shall die before receiving said bounty, it shall be paid to the heirs of the soldiers as designated in said act in the order therein named, and to none other.

Approved February 21, 1868.

AN ACT for the protection in certain cases of persons making disclosures as parties, or testifying as witnesses.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no answer or other pleading of any party, and no discovery, or evidence obtained by means of any judicial proceeding from any party or witness in this or any foreign country, shall be given in evidence, or in any manner used against such party or witness, or his property or estate, in any court of the United States, or in any proceedings by or before any officer of the United States, in respect to any crime, or for the enforcement of any penalty or forfeiture by reason of any act or omission of such party or witness: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt any party or witness from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed by him in discovering or testifying as aforesaid.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That this act shall take effect from its passage, and shall apply to all pending proceedings as well as to those hereafter instituted.

Approved February 25, 1868.

AN ACT to establish and declare the railroad and bridges of the New Orleans, Mobile, and Chattanooga Railroad Company, as hereafter constructed, a post road, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the New Orleans, Mobile, and Chattanooga Railroad Company is hereby authorized and empowered to construct, build, and maintain bridges over and across the navigable waters of the United States on the route of said railroad between New Orleans and Mobile, for the use of said company and the passage of its engines, cars, and trains of cars, passengers, mails, and merchandise thereon; and said railroad and its bridges aforesaid, when constructed, completed, and in use, in accordance with this act and the laws of the several States through whose territory the same shall pass, shall be deemed, recognized, and known as lawful structures and a post road, and are hereby declared as such: Provided, however, That the said company, in the construction of its bridges over and across the waters known as the East Pascagoula river, and the Bay of Biloxi, the Bay of St. Louis, shall construct and maintain drawbridges in the channels thereof, which, when open, shall give a clear space for the passage of vessels of not less than eighty feet in the channels of the East Pascagoula, and of the Bay of Biloxi, and of the Bay of St. Louis, and of not less than one hundred feet in the channel of the Great Rigolet: and said company shall at all times open the said drawbridges, and shall provide reasonable and necessary facilities for the passage of all vessels requiring the same, except during and for ten minutes prior to and after the time of the passage of the mail and passenger trains of said company.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the right to alter or amend this act, so as to prevent or remove all material obstructions to the navigation of said rivers growing out of the construction of said bridges is hereby expressly reserved.

Approved March 2, 1868.

AN ACT extending the time for the completion of the Dubuque and Sioux City railroad.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the time for completing a line of railroad from Dubuque to Sioux City, in the State of Iowa, for the construction of which lands were granted in alternate sections to said State by act entitled "An act making a grant of lands to the State of Iowa in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of railroads in said State," approved May fifteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, be and the same is extended until the first day of January, eighteen hundred and seventy-two, subject to the reverter mentioned in said act at the expiration of the time therein limited: Provided, That said road shall be constructed on the most practical route by way of Webster City and Fort Dodge to Sioux City, which route shall be at all points within the limits of said land grant, and the same shall be completed to Fort Dodge on or before the first day of July, eighteen hundred and sixty nine, and thereafter at the rate of not less than forty miles each year: and the said road shall be constructed, operated, and maintained as one continuous and unbroken line of road from Dubuque to Sioux City: and no lands shall be disposed of, or patented, or certified for said purposes more than forty miles in advance of the point to which said road may be constructed from time to time.

Approved March 2, 1868.

AN ACT in relation to islands in the Great Miami river.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in the case of such islands in the Great Miami river, in the State of Ohio, as are undisposed of, or any vacant public lands adjacent thereto, which are in the actual and exclusive occupancy of any persons who have made improvements thereon or of their heirs or assigns, such occupants thereof shall have the preference right to enter the same at two dollars and fifty cents per acre, on making proof of the facts to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and paying for the land within twelve months from the passage of this act, and patents shall issue for the tracts so entered as usual in entries of public lands.

Approved March 2, 1868.

AN ACT authorizing the sale of an unoccupied military site at Waterford, Pennsylvania.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be and he is hereby authorized in his discretion to sell to the highest and best bidder the military site of three acres of land at Waterford, Erie county Pennsylvania, belonging to the United States, and pay the proceeds into the treasury of the United States.

Approved March 4, 1868.

AN ACT restoring lands to market along the line of the Pacific railroads and branches.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That nothing in the act approved July first, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," and the acts amendatory thereof, shall be held to authorize the withdrawal or exclusion from settlement and entry, under the provisions of the pre-emption or homestead laws, the even-numbered sections along the routes of the several roads therein mentioned which have been or may be hereafter located: Provided, That such sections shall be rated at two dollars and fifty cents per acre, and subject only to entry under those laws: and the Secretary of the Interior be and is hereby authorized and directed to restore to homestead settlement, pre-emption, or entry, according to existing laws, all the even-numbered sections of land belonging to the government, and now withdrawn from market, on both sides of the Pacific railroad and branches, wherever said road and branches have been definitely located.

Approved March 6, 1868.

AN ACT for the relief of settlers on the late Sioux Indian reservation in the State of Minnesota.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all actual settlers, who have duly filed their declaratory statements under the pre-emption laws with the register of the proper local land office, upon the unsold lands now included within the limits of the late Sioux Indian reservation, in the State of Minnesota, shall be allowed two years from and after the passage of this act within which to make proof and payment for their claims, in accordance with the provisions of the second and third sections of the act approved March third, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, providing for the disposal of said reservation.

Approved March 6 1868.

AN ACT in relation to the promulgation of the laws of the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act it shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to furnish the Congressional Printer with a correct copy of every act and joint resolution as soon as possible after its approval by the President of the United States, or after it shall have become a law in accordance with the Constitution without such approval. And so much of section seven of the act entitled "An act to expedite and regulate the printing of the public documents, and for other purposes," approved June twenty-five, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, as requires the Secretary of the Senate to furnish such copy is hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Congressional Printer, on receipt of the copy provided for in the foregoing section, shall in every case immediately cause an accurate printed copy of the act or resolution, as it shall have been furnished to him, to be prepared and sent in duplicate to the Secretary of State for revision, and on return of one of the revised duplicates the Congressional Printer shall at once have the marked corrections made, should there be any, and cause to be printed and sent to the Department of State fifty copies, and also cause to be printed separately the usual number for the use of the two houses of Congress: Provided, That on request of the Secretary of State the Congressional Printer shall furnish to the Department of State any additional number of copies of any act or resolution not exceeding five hundred copies.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to transmit to the Congressional Printer, at the beginning of each session of Congress, and thereafter when necessary, a list of all newspapers authorized by law to publish the laws of the United States, with their respective postoffices, so far as the same shall have been communicated to him by the Clerk of the House of Representatives; and it shall be the duty of the Congressional Printer, on the printing of each act or resolution, excepting those which are of a private character, and which shall be so designated by the Secretary of State, to transmit a copy thereof to each of the editors of such newspapers for prompt publication: and the number of copies of the public acts and resolutions requisite for this purpose are hereby authorized and required to be printed: and all letters and documents to and from the Congressional Printer relating to the duties and business of his office shall be transmitted by mail, free of postage, under such regulations as may be established by the Postmaster General.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That all the provisions of this act which apply to public acts and resolutions shall in like manner apply to treaties between the government of the United States and foreign governments, after they shall have been duly ratified and proclaimed by the President of the United States: and shall also apply to postal conventions made between the Postmaster General, by and with the advice and consent of the President on the part of the United States, and equivalent officers of foreign governments on the part of their respective countries, under the authority of the second section of the act entitled "An act to reduce and modify the rates of postage in the United States, and for other purposes," approved March three, eighteen hundred and fifty-one: Provided, That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to transmit a copy of each of said conventions to the Secretary of State for this purpose, and that the printed copy of said conventions shall be revised by the Postoffice Department.

SEC. 5 And be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws requiring the Secretary of State to send the laws first directly to newspapers for publication, as well as all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

Approved March 9, 1868.

AN ACT for the temporary relief of destitute people in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of fifteen thousand dollars be and the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the temporary relief of the destitute population in the District of Columbia, to be expended under the supervision and direction of the Commissioner of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands: provided, that as far as practicable said sum shall be expended in the employment of persons upon the public grounds and works in the District of Columbia for which appropriations have been heretofore made by Congress, such laborers to be under the direction of the officer acting as Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds.

Approved March 10, 1868.

AN ACT to amend the act passed March twenty-third, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, entitled "An act supplementary to 'An act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel State,' passed March second, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, and to facilitate their restoration."

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That hereafter any election authorized by the act passed March twenty-three, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, entitled "An act supplementary to 'An act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States,' passed March two, [second], eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, and to facilitate their restoration," shall be decided by a majority of the votes actually cast; and at the election in which the question of the adoption or rejection of any constitution is submitted, any person duly registered in the State may vote in the election district where he offers to vote when he has resided therein for ten days next preceding such election, upon presentation of his certificate of registration, his affidavit, or other satisfactory evidence, under such regulations as the district commanders may prescribe.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the constitutional convention of any of the States mentioned in the acts to which this is amendatory may provide that at the time of voting upon the ratification of the constitution the registered voters may vote also for members of the House of Representatives of the United States, and for all elective officers provided for by the said constitution; and the same election officers who shall make the return of the votes cast on the ratification or rejection of the constitution, shall enumerate and certify the votes cast for members of Congress.

SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
B. F. WADE,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

Indorsed by the President: "Received February 28, 1868."

JOINT RESOLUTION authorizing the Controller of the Currency to revoke the appointment of a receiver for the Farmers' and Citizens' National Bank of Williamsburg, New York, and to restore said bank to its owners under certain conditions.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Controller of the Currency be authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to revoke the order appointing a receiver for the Farmers' and Citizens' Bank of Williamsburg, New York, and restore the said bank and the management thereof to the directors, for the purpose of enabling the association to continue the business of banking; Provided, That said banking association shall first present to the Controller satisfactory assurances that the public interest will be promoted thereby, and shall secure, in such manner as the Controller shall direct, the full payment of all the creditors of the association, and shall restore the capital stock to its original amount in case the capital has been impaired by losses.

Approved March 2, 1868.

A RESOLUTION authorizing the Lighthouse Board to place warnings over obstructions at the entrance of harbors, or in the fairway of bays and sounds, and for other purposes.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Lighthouse Board be and they are hereby authorized when, in their judgment, it is deemed necessary to place a light vessel, or other suitable warning of danger, on or over any wreck or temporary obstruction to the entrance of any harbor, or in the channel or fairway of any bay or sound.

SEC. 2 And be it further resolved, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to appoint a board of competent engineers to consist of not less than three persons to examine the condition of the wreck of the steamer Scotland, now in the waters of the harbor of the city of New York, and ascertain whether the same is dangerous to navigation, and to report thereon at as early a day as practicable, with a particular estimate of the cost of the removal of said wreck.

Approved March 2, 1868.

A RESOLUTION relating to the survey of the northern and northwestern lakes.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the second section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight," approved March second, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, shall not apply to the appropriation for the survey of northern and northwestern lakes.

Approved March 2, 1868.

A RESOLUTION providing for the representation of the United States at the International Maritime Exhibition, to be held at Havre.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Navy be authorized to detail one or more officers of the navy, as he shall think best, to be present at the International Maritime Exhibition, to be held at Havre, under the auspices of the French government, from the first day of June to the thirty-first of October of the present year, there to represent the United States, and otherwise to promote the interests of the exhibitors from our country; Provided, That no expenditure shall accrue therefrom to the treasury, or to any public fund, nor shall any mileage or other expenses, or any additional compensation be paid to such persons as may be designated under authority of this resolution, nor shall any national or public vessel be employed to convey the officers so detailed to or from the place of such exhibition.

Approved March 12, 1868.

A RESOLUTION providing for the issue of clothing to soldiers and others, to replace clothing destroyed to prevent contagion.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be and he is hereby authorized, at any time on the recommendation of the Surgeon General of the army, to order gratuitous issues of clothing to soldiers who have had contagious diseases, and to hospital attendants who have nursed and attended such soldiers, to replace the articles of their clothing which have been destroyed by order of the proper medical officers to prevent contagion.

Approved March 12, 1868.

JOINT RESOLUTION relative to the Postoffice and Sub-treasury of city of Boston.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the mayor and postmaster of the city of Boston, the assistant treasurer of the United States at the city of Boston, the president of the Board of Trade of the city of Boston, Alpheus Hardy and Daniel Davis, of Boston, be appointed a commission to purchase a site for a building to accommodate the postoffice, sub treasury, and public offices of the United States in the city of Boston, in accordance with their report submitted to the Postmaster General and the Secretary of the Treasury, and by them approved, viz: The estates lying on Devonshire street, and between Water street and Milk street, in the city of Boston, containing about thirty thousand square feet, and that they be authorized to purchase the same for a sum not exceeding five hundred thousand dollars; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay such sum of money as may be necessary to carry the foregoing resolutions into effect from any money in the treasury hereafter to be appropriated: Provided, That no money shall be paid out of the treasury in pursuance of this resolution, until the title to the aforesaid estates shall be properly certified by the United States district attorney for the district of Massachusetts.

Approved March 12, 1868.

A RESOLUTION to authorize the erection of a military storehouse at Fort Monroe, Virginia.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be and he is hereby authorized to grant permission to William H. Kimberly, army and navy contractor at Fort Monroe, Virginia, to rebuild the military storehouse recently destroyed by fire at that post, upon such conditions and under such restrictions as the Secretary of War shall deem compatible with the interests of the government.

Approved March 16, 1868.

CONVENTION FOR THE AMELIORATION OF THE POSTAL INTERCOURSE BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE SWISS CONFEDERATION.

The post department of the United States, by its special commissioner, John A. Kasson, esq., and the federal council of the Swiss Confederation, by Dr. Jaques Dubs, vice-president of the federal council and chief of the federal post department, have agreed upon the following articles, subject to ratification by the respective authorities of the two countries:

ARTICLE I.

There shall be an exchange of correspondence between the United States of America and the Swiss Confederation by means of their respective post departments, and this correspondence shall embrace:

1. Letters, ordinary and registered.
2. Newspapers, book packets, prints of all kinds (comprising maps, plans, engravings, drawings, photographs, lithographs, and all other like productions of mechanical processes, sheets of music, etc.) and patterns or samples of merchandise, including grains and seeds.

Such correspondence may be exchanged, whether originating in either of said countries and destined for the other, or originating in or destined for foreign countries, to which these may respectively serve as intermediaries.

ARTICLE II.

The offices for exchange of mails shall be, on the part of the United States, New York.

On the part of the Swiss Confederation—
(a.) Basle.
(b.) Geneva (when the Swiss Confederation shall find it expedient.)

The two offices, by agreement, may at any time establish additional offices of exchange.

ARTICLE III.

The principle is agreed, that each office shall make its own arrangements for the dispatch of its mails to the other office by regular lines of communication, and shall at its own cost pay the expense of such intermediate transportation. It is also agreed that the cost of international ocean and territorial transit of the closed mails between the frontiers of the two countries shall be first defrayed by that one of the two departments which shall have obtained from the intermediaries the most favorable pecuniary terms for such conveyance, and which shall effect such transport in that case in both directions; and any amount so advanced by one for account of the other shall be promptly reimbursed.

ARTICLE IV.

The standard weight for the single rate of international postage and rule of progression shall be:

1. For letters, fifteen grammes.
2. For all other correspondence, mentioned in the second paragraph of the first article, that which the dispatching office shall adopt for the mails which it dispatches to the other, adapted to the convenience and habits of the interior administration. But each office shall give notice to the other of the standard weight it adopts, and of any subsequent change thereof. The rule of progression shall always be an additional single rate for each additional standard weight, or fraction thereof.

The weight stated by the dispatching office shall always be accepted except in case of manifest mistake.

ARTICLE V.

The single rate of postage on the direct correspondence exchanged between the two administrations, subject to the reserve mentioned in Article VII, shall be as follows:

1. On letters from the United States 15 cents.
2. On letters from the Swiss Confederation 80 centimes.
3. On all other correspondence mentioned in the second paragraph of the first article, the rate shall be, for the mails dispatched, that which the dispatching office shall adopt, adapted to the convenience and habits of its interior administration. But each office shall give notice to the other of the rate it adopts, and of any subsequent change thereof.

ARTICLE VI.

The prepayment of postage on ordinary letters shall be optional, subject to the conditions in Article VII mentioned, but on registered letters and on all other correspondence mentioned in paragraph second of the first article, it shall be obligatory.

ARTICLE VII.

If, however, the postage of any correspondence shall be prepaid insufficiently, it shall nevertheless be forwarded to its destination, charged with the deficient postage, adding full amounts instead of fractions, of 1 cent or 5 centimes.

Upon the delivery of any unpaid or insufficiently paid letter, or of any other insufficiently paid correspondence, there shall be levied a fine in the United States not exceeding five cents, and in Switzerland not exceeding twenty-five centimes. This fine, and also the deficient postage on all other correspondence than letters, shall not enter into accounts between the two offices, but shall be retained to the use of the collecting office.

ARTICLE VIII.

Registered correspondence shall, in addition to the postage, be subject to a register fee not exceeding ten cents in the United States, and not exceeding fifty centimes in Switzerland, and this fee shall be always prepaid.

ARTICLE IX.

Any correspondence may be registered, as well international correspondence as that originating in or destined for other countries to which these two administrations may respectively serve as intermediaries in either direction for the transmission of such registered articles. Each department shall notify the other of the countries to which it may thus serve as intermediary.

ARTICLE X.

Accounts between the two offices shall be regulated on the following basis: From the total amount of postages and register fees collected by each office on letters, added to the total amount of prepaid postages and register fees on other correspondence which it dispatches, the dispatching officer shall deduct the amount required as the agreed rate for the cost of intermediate transit thereof between the two frontiers, and the amount of the two net sums shall be divided between the two offices in the proportion of three fifths (3-5) to the United States office, and two-fifths (2-5) to the Swiss office.

ARTICLE XI.

The correspondence mentioned in the second paragraph of the first article shall be dispatched under regulations to be established by the dispatching office, but always including the following:

First—No packet shall contain anything which shall be closed against inspection, nor any written communication whatever, except to state to whom and from whom the package is sent, and the numbers and prices placed upon patterns or samples of merchandise.

Second—No packet may exceed two feet in length, or one foot in any other dimension, or the equivalent in Swiss measurement.

Third—Neither office shall be bound to deliver any article the importation of which may be prohibited by the laws or regulations of the country of destination.

Fourth—So long as any customs duty may be chargeable on any article exchanged in the mails, such duties may be levied for the use of the customs.

Fifth—Except as above no charge whatever otherwise than is herein expressly provided, shall be levied or collected on the correspondence exchanged.

ARTICLE XII.

The two post departments shall establish by agreement, and in conformity with the arrangements in force at the time, the conditions upon which the two offices may respectively exchange, in open mails, the correspondence originating in, or destined to, the other foreign countries to which they may reciprocally serve as intermediaries. It is always understood, however, that such correspondence shall only be charged with the rate applicable to direct international correspondence augmented by the postage due to foreign countries, and by any other tax for exterior service.

ARTICLE XIII.

Each office accords to the other the privilege of transit of closed mails exchanged in either direction between the latter and any country to which the other may serve as an intermediary, by its usual means of mail transportation whether on sea or land. Such transit across its own territory shall be reciprocally free of expense.

For such transit by sea the United States office shall receive as follows:

1. For transit across the waters of the Atlantic ocean:
a. For letters, 8 cents per single letter rate.
b. For other correspondence, 12 cents per kilogramme, net.
2. For transit across the waters of the Pacific ocean:
a. For letters, 10 cents per single letter rate.
b. For other correspondence, 20 cents per kilogramme, net.

For such transit by sea the Swiss office shall receive as follows:

For transit across the waters of the Atlantic ocean:
a. For letters, 8 cents per single letter rate.
b. For other correspondence, 12 cents per kilogramme, net.

For intermediate territorial transit each office shall receive the amount it actually disburses for such transit.

ARTICLE XIV.

The postal accounts between the two offices shall be stated quarterly, and transmitted and verified as speedily as practicable, and the balance found due shall be paid to the creditor office either by exchange on London or Paris, or at the debtor office as the creditor office may desire.

The rate for the conversion of the money of the two countries shall be fixed by common agreement between the two offices.

ARTICLE XV.

When in any port of either country a closed mail is transferred from one vessel to another without any expense to the office of the country where the transfer is made such transfer shall not be subject to any postal charge by one office against the other.

ARTICLE XVI.

Official communications between the two offices shall not be the occasion of any accounts on either side.

ARTICLE XVII.

Letters wrongly sent or wrongly addressed, or not deliverable for whatever cause, shall be returned to the originating office, at its expense, if any expense is incurred. Registered correspondence of all kinds not deliverable for any cause shall also be returned in like manner. All other correspondence which can not be delivered shall remain at the disposition of the receiving office.

Any postage upon correspondence returned which shall have been charged against the office of destination shall be discharged from the account.

ARTICLE XVIII.

The two offices shall by mutual consent establish detailed regulations for carrying those articles into execution, and they may modify such regulations in like manner from time to time as the exigencies of the service may require.

ARTICLE XIX.

This convention shall take effect at a time to be fixed by common accord of the two administrations, and shall continue in force until terminated by mutual agreement or otherwise until one year from the date when one office shall have notified the other of its desire to terminate it.

Executed in duplicate at Berne, this eleventh day of October, A. D. 1867.

Special Commissioner, etc., etc.
[SEAL.] DR. J. DUBS.

POSTOFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, November 12 1867.

Having examined and considered the aforegoing articles of a convention for the amelioration of the postal intercourse between the United States of America and the Swiss Confederation, which were agreed upon and executed in duplicate at Berne on the eleventh day of October, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven by Hon. John A. Kasson, special commissioner, etc., etc., on behalf of this department, and by Dr Jaques Dubs, vice-president of the federal council and chief of the federal post department on behalf of the federal council of the Swiss Confederation, the same are by me hereby ratified and approved, by and with the advice and consent of the President of the United States.

In witness whereof I have caused the seal of the Postoffice Department to be hereto affixed with my signature, the day and year first above written.

[L. S.] ALEX. W. RANDALL,
Postmaster General.

I hereby approve the aforegoing convention, and in testimony thereof I have caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

POSTAL CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE COLONIAL GOVERNMENT OF HONG KONG, CHINA.

Articles of agreement between the Postoffice Department of the United States and the General Postoffice at Hong Kong.

For the purpose of establishing and regulating the interchange of mails between the United States and Hong Kong and dependent Chinese ports, by means of the direct line of United States mail packets plying between San Francisco and Hong Kong, via Yokohama in Japan, it is agreed between the Postoffice Department of the United States and the Postoffice Department of Hong Kong.

ARTICLE I.

The postoffices of New York and San Francisco shall be the United States offices of exchange, and the General Postoffice at Hong Kong the office of exchange of the colony of Hong Kong for all mails transmitted under this arrangement.

ARTICLE II.

There shall be an exchange of correspondence between the United States of America and the colony of Hong Kong, by means of United States mail packets, plying between San Francisco and Hong Kong, comprising letters, newspapers, and prices current originating and posted in the United States, and addressed to and deliverable in Hong Kong and those Chinese ports with which the Hong Kong postoffice has postal relations, including the ports of Canton, Amoy, Swatow, and Foochow, and vice versa, of correspondence originating and posted in Hong Kong and the Chinese ports above designated, and addressed to and deliverable in the United States.

ARTICLE III.

The postage to be levied and collected at the office of mailing in the United States upon letters, newspapers, and prices current, destined for Hong Kong and the above designated Chinese ports, with which Hong Kong has postal connections, shall be ten cents per single rate of half an ounce or under on letters, and two cents each on newspapers and prices current; and the postage to be levied and collected at Hong Kong and dependent Chinese ports on correspondence originating in those ports and destined to the United States, shall be eight cents per single rate of half an ounce or under on letters, and two cents on each newspaper or price current. No postal accounts shall be kept between the respective postal departments upon the correspondence exchanged between them under this arrangement, but each department shall deliver the correspondence which it receives from the other free of all postage charge, that is to say the Hong Kong post department agrees to deliver without charge all letters, newspapers, and prices current, brought by the United States mail packets, addressed to Hong Kong, and also to forward without charge all such letters, newspapers, etc., as are addressed to the Chinese ports above named south of Shanghae; and the United States postal department on its side agrees to deliver without charge all letters, newspapers, etc., originating in Hong Kong, or the ports mentioned, and forwarded by said packets addressed to and deliverable in the United States. All letters, newspapers, etc., dispatched by either office to the other, under this arrangement, shall be plainly stamped with the words "paid all," in red ink, on the right hand upper corner of the face of the address, and shall also bear the stamp of the mailing exchange office on their face, and that of the receiving exchange office on their back.

ARTICLE IV.

The postal department of the United States and of Hong Kong shall each return to the other monthly, or as frequently as their regulations will allow, all letters, newspapers, etc., without claim, which can not for any cause be delivered.

ARTICLE V.

An exchange of mails shall also take place between the United States postal agency at Yokohama, Japan, and the Hong Kong postoffice, by means of United States mail packets, comprising correspondence originating in Japan and addressed to Hong Kong and the Chinese ports above designated, and vice versa, correspondence originating in Hong Kong and dependent Chinese ports and addressed to Japan, subject to the same terms and conditions as those established by Article III of this convention, with respect to the correspondence exchanged between the United States and Hong Kong and dependent Chinese ports.

ARTICLE VI.

All letters, newspapers and prices current intended to be forwarded from Hong Kong to the United States by the direct line of United States mail packets running between San Francisco and Hong Kong must be specially addressed to be forwarded by that route.

ARTICLE VII.

The two postal departments may by mutual consent make such detailed regulations as shall be found necessary to carry out the objects of this arrangement, such regulations to be terminable at any time on a reasonable notice by either office.

ARTICLE VIII.

This convention shall come into operation the first day of November, 1867, and shall be terminable at any time on a notice by either office of six months.

In witness whereof I have hereto set my hand and the seal of the Postoffice Department this twelfth day of November, 1867.

[L. S.] ALEX W. RANDALL,
Postmaster General.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and the seal of the colony of Hong Kong, at Victoria herein, this tenth day of August, 1867.

RICHARD GRAVES MAC DONNELL,
Governor and Commander-in-Chief.

I hereby approve the aforegoing convention, and in testimony thereof I have caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

L. S. ANDREW JOHNSON.

By the President:
WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.
Washington, November 12, 1867.

CONVENTION AGREED UPON BETWEEN THE POST DEPARTMENTS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND OF THE NORTH GERMAN UNION FOR THE AMELIORATION OF THE POSAL SERVICE BETWEEN THE TWO COUNTRIES.

ARTICLE I.

There shall be an exchange of correspondence between the United States of America and the North German Union, by means of their respective post departments; and this correspondence shall embrace—

1st. Letters ordinary and registered.

2d Newspapers, book-packets, prints of all kinds, (comprising maps, plans, engravings, drawings, photographs, lithographs, and all other like productions of mechanical processes, sheets of music, etc.,) and patterns or samples of merchandise, including grains and seeds.

And such correspondence may be exchanged, whether originating in either of said countries and destined for the other, or originating in or destined for foreign countries to which these may respectively serve as intermediaries.

ARTICLE II.

The offices for the exchange of mails shall be—
(A) On the part of the United States:
1st. New York.
2d Boston.
3d. Portland.
4th. Detroit.
5th. Chicago.
(B) On the part of the North German Union:
1st. Aachen. (Aix la Chapelle.)
2d. Bremen.
3d. Hamburg.

The two post departments may at any time discontinue either of said offices of exchange or establish others by mutual consent.

ARTICLE III.

Each office shall make its own arrangements for the despatch of its mails to the other office by regular lines of communication; and shall at its own cost pay the expense of such intermediate transportation.

The two offices, however, mutually agree that, in making contracts for the dispatch of mails from American ports, or from European ports, those steamers and lines should always be employed, so far as consistent with the rates of postage, by which the mails dispatched shall earliest arrive at their destination; and when the speed is substantially the same, that the most favorable pecuniary conditions should be preferred. It is also agreed that the cost of international ocean and territorial transit of the closed mails between the respective frontiers shall be first defrayed by that one of the two departments which shall have obtained from the intermediaries the most favorable pecuniary terms for such conveyance; and any amount so advanced by one for account of the other shall be promptly reimbursed.

ARTICLE IV.

The standard weight for the single rate of international postage and rule of progression shall be—

1st. For letters, 15 grammes.

2d. For all other correspondence mentioned in paragraph two of the first article, that which the dispatching office shall adopt for the mails which it dispatches to the other, adapted to the convenience and habits of its interior administration. But each office shall give notice to the other of the standard weight it adopts, and of any subsequent change thereof.

The rule of progression shall always be an additional single weight for each additional standard weight or fraction thereof. The weight stated by the dispatching office shall always be accepted except in case of manifest mistake.

It is, however, understood that so long as the German office employs the "loth" as its standard for the single weight of letters which it dispatches, it shall also be accepted by the United States office as the equivalent of 15 grammes, in respect to the mails which it receives from the German office.

ARTICLE V.

The single rate of postage on the direct correspondence exchanged between the two administrations shall be as follows:

1st. On letters from the United States via direct line of steamers to Hamburg and Bremen, (conditioned that the sea rate shall not exceed five cents for single letter rate and ten cents per kilogram for other correspondence,) ten cents

2d. On letters from the North German Union via said direct line, (subject to same condition,) four silber groschen.

3d. On letters from the United States via England, fifteen cents.

4th. On letters from the North German Union via England, six silber groschen.

5th. Of the international letter postage via England, the ocean single letter rate shall not exceed eight cents, nor shall the English and Belgian single letter transit rates exceed one cent each

6th. It is further agreed, that when any other regular line of steam communication acceptable to the two offices may be employed directly between any port of the United States and any port of the north of Europe at such rates that the entire cost of transportation between the two frontiers shall not exceed for each single letter rate five cents, and for each kilogram of other correspondence ten cents, in that case the international single rate of letter postage by such line shall be reduced to ten cents.

7th. On all other correspondence mentioned in paragraph two of the first article the rate shall be for the mails dispatched that which the dispatching office shall adopt, adapted to the convenience and habits of its interior administration. But each office shall give notice to the other of the rate it adopts, and of any subsequent change thereof.

ARTICLE VI.

The prepayment of postage on ordinary letters shall be optional, subject to the conditions of Article VII mentioned: but on registered letters, and on all other correspondence mentioned in paragraph two of the first article, it shall be obligatory.

ARTICLE VII.

If, however, the postage on any correspondence shall be prepaid insufficiently, it shall nevertheless be forwarded to its destination, but charged with the deficient postage.

Upon the delivery of any unpaid or insufficiently paid letter, or of any other insufficiently paid correspondence, there shall be levied in the United States a fine not exceeding five cents, and in the North German Union an additional charge not exceeding two silber groschen. This fine or additional charge, as well as the deficient postage on all other correspondence than letters, shall not enter into the accounts between the two offices, but shall be retained to the use of the collecting office.

ARTICLE VIII.

The correspondence mentioned in paragraph two of the first article shall be dispatched under regulations to be established by the dispatching office, but always including the following:

First. No packet shall contain anything which shall be closed against inspection, nor any written communication whatever, except to state from whom and to whom the packet is sent, and the number and price placed upon each pattern or sample of merchandise.

Second. No packet may exceed two feet in length, or one foot in any other dimension.

Third. Neither office shall be bound to deliver any article the importation of which may be prohibited by the laws or regulations of the country of destination.

Fourth So long as any customs duty may be chargeable on any articles exchanged in the mails, such duty may be levied for the use of the customs.

It is further agreed that except a small local carrier's charge, (so long as it shall exist in the rural districts of North Germany) no charge whatever, otherwise than is herein expressly provided, shall be levied or collected on the letters and other correspondence exchanged.

ARTICLE IX.

Any correspondence may be registered, as well international correspondence as that originating in or destined for other countries to which these two administrations may respectively serve as intermediaries for the transmission of such registered articles. Each department shall notify the other of the countries to which it may thus serve as intermediary.

Each department shall use its best exertions for the safe delivery, or, when miscarried, for the recovery of any registered correspondence, but is not responsible pecuniarily for the loss of any such correspondence.

ARTICLE X.

Registered correspondence shall, in addition to the postage, be subject to a registration fee, not exceeding ten cents in the United States, and not exceeding two silber groschen in the North German Union, and this fee shall be always prepaid.

ARTICLE XI.

Accounts between the two offices shall be regulated on the following basis: From the total amount of postages and register fees collected by each office on letters, added to the total amount of prepaid postages and register fees and other correspondence which it dispatches, the dispatching office shall deduct the amount required, at the agreed rate, for the cost of the intermediate transit thereof between the two frontiers, and the amount of the two net sums shall be equally divided between the two offices.

ARTICLE XII.

The two post departments shall establish by agreement, and in conformity with the arrangements in force at the time, the conditions upon which the two offices may respectfully exchange in open mails the correspondence originating in or destined to other foreign countries to which they may reciprocally serve as intermediaries.

It is always understood, however, that such correspondence shall only be charged with the rate applicable to direct international correspondence, augmented by the postage due to foreign countries, and by any other tax for exterior service.

But the North German office reserves the right to fix a time, if necessary, when this rule shall only apply to correspondence dispatched from the United States for such other countries, unless the latter shall have accepted the same rule in behalf of the correspondence dispatched through them by the North German office.

ARTICLE XIII.

Each office grants to the other the privilege of transit of the closed mails exchanged, in either direction, between the latter and any country to which the other may serve as intermediary, by its usual means of mail transportation, whether on sea or land, and the terms of transit shall be agreed upon when the exercise of the privilege is required.

ARTICLE XIV.

The postal accounts between the two offices shall be stated quarterly, and transmitted and verified as speedily as practictible; and the balance found due shall be paid to the creditor office, either by exchange on London or at the debtor office, as the creditor office may desire.

The rate for the conversion of the money of the two countries shall be fixed by common agreement between the two offices.

ARTICLE XV.

When in any port of either country a closed mail is transferred from one vessel to another without any expense to the office of the country where the transfer is made, such transfer shall not be subject to any postal charge by one office against the other.

ARTICLE XVI.

Official communications addressed from one office to the other shall not be the occasion of any accounts between the two offices.

ARTICLE XVII.

Letters wrongly sent, or wrongly addressed, or not deliverable for whatever cause, shall be returned to the originating office at its expense, if any expense is incurred. Registered correspondence of all kinds, not deliverable for any cause, shall also be returned in like manner. All other correspondence which can not be delivered shall remain at the disposition of the receiving office. Any postages upon correspondence returned which shall have been charged against the office of destination shall be discharged from the account.

ARTICLE XVIII.

In view of the possible desire of other German states to avail themselves of the advantages of postal association with the states now embraced in the North German Union, it is further agreed that the provisions of this convention shall be extended to and shall comprise them, whenever such other states shall declare their desire to join for this purpose, and notice thereof shall have been given to the United States Post Department.

ARTICLE XIX.

The two offices shall, by mutual consent, establish detailed regulations for carrying these articles into execution; and they may modify such regulations, in like manner, from time to time, as the exigencies of the service may require.

ARTICLE XX.

From the time this convention shall take effect, all former conventions between the two offices and between the United States office on the one part, and on the other part, of Bremen, and also of Hamburg, shall cease to be in force, except for the settlement of accounts which shall have previously accrued thereunder.

This convention, being first approved, shall take effect not later than the first day of January next, and shall continue in force until canceled by mutual agreement, or otherwise, until one year from the date when one office shall have given notice to the other of its desire to terminate it.

Executed in duplicate at Berlin the twenty-first day of October, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

ARTICLES

AGREED UPON

BETWEEN THE POST DEPARTMENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, REPRESENTED BY JOHN A. KASSON, ESQUIRE, SPECIAL COMMISSIONER, AND THE POSTAL ADMINISTRATION OF THE KINGDOM OF ITALY, REPRESENTED BY CAVALIERE AVVOCATO, GEORGE BATTISTA TANTESIO, DIRECTOR, Etc., Etc., BOTH INVESTED WITH THE NECESSARY POWERS FOR THE MODIFICATION OF THE CONVENTION EXECUTED BETWEEN THE TWO COUNTRIES, UNDER DATE OF THE EIGHTH JULY, 1863, AND AS PROVIDED IN THE XXIVTH ARTICLE OF SAID CONVENTION.

ARTICLE I.

There shall be a regular exchange of correspondence, in closed mails, between the post department of the United States of America and the postal administration of the kingdom of Italy, as well for correspondence originating in either of said countries and destined for the other, as for that originating in or destined for foreign countries to which the United States and Italy may respectively serve as intermediaries.

This correspondence shall embrace the following articles:

1. Letters, ordinary and registered.
2. Newspapers, prints of all kinds, books, maps, plans, engravings, drawings, photographs, lithographs, sheets of music printed or written, and pat-terms or samples of merchandise, including grains and seeds.

ARTICLE II.

The offices for the exchange of the mails shall be, on the part of the United States, New York.

On the part of Italy—

1. Susa—traveling office.
2. Camerlata—traveling office.
3. Arona—traveling office.

The two administrations may, by common accord, establish additional offices of exchange whenever it shall be found necessary; or suspend an existing office of exchange.

ARTICLE III.

Each administration shall make its own arrangements for the dispatch of its mails to the other, and shall transport them at its own expense to the frontier of the country of destination.

It is also agreed that the cost of the territorial and maritime transit of the mails dispatched by one administration to the other shall be first defrayed by that one of the two administrations which shall have obtained from the intermediaries the most favorable pecuniary terms for such transit; and any amount so advanced by one for the other shall be promptly reimbursed.

ARTICLE IV.

The standard weight for the single rate of postage, and the rule of progression shall be—

For letters, fifteen grams.

For all other correspondence mentioned in the second paragraph of the first article, it shall be that which the dispatching administration shall adopt for the mails which it dispatches to the other, adapted to the convenience of its interior service.

Each administration, however, shall notify the other of the standard weight it shall adopt, and of any subsequent change thereof.

The rule of progression shall always be and additional single rate for each additional standard weight or traction thereof.

The weight stated by the dispatching office shall always be accepted, except in case of manifest mistake.

ARTICLE V.

The single rate of postage for the direct correspondence is established as follows:

For letters from the United States, fifteen cents.

For letters from Italy, eighty centesimi.

For all other correspondence mentioned in the second paragraph of the first article, it shall be that which the dispatching administration shall adopt for the mails it dispatches, adapted to its own convenience, but each administration shall inform the other of the rate it adopts, and of any change of it.

The postage upon any correspondence, however, may be, by common accord, modified whenever the sender shall avail himself of any route which requires a higher rate than that established by this article, and the envelope shall indicate the route preferred either in writing or by the amount of postage prepaid.

ARTICLE VI.

The prepayment of postage on ordinary letters between the United States and Italy shall be optional.

The prepayment of postage on all other correspondence, including registered letters, shall be obligatory.

The correspondence of all kinds which shall not be prepaid shall be charged by the receiving administration with a fine not exceeding five cents in the United States, and not exceeding thirty centesimi in Italy.

The correspondence of any kind, insufficiently prepaid, shall be dispatched, but shall be charged by the receiving administration with the deficient postage, as well as the fine aforesaid.

Fractions of one cent in the United States, and of five centesimi in Italy, shall be counted for the full amount.

ARTICLE VII.

Any correspondence may be registered, as well that directly exchanged between the two countries, as that originating in either of them and destined to other foreign countries to which they may respectively serve as intermediaries for registered correspondence, vice versa.

The international correspondence registered must always be prepaid, both the postage and the register fee.

The fee shall be, not exceeding ten cents in the United States, and fifty centesimi in Italy.

ARTICLE VIII.

Accounts between the two administrations shall be regulated as follows:

From the total amount of the postage collected upon letters, added to the amount of register fees, and of prepaid postages upon other articles than letters as collected by each administration, it shall deduct the cost at the established rates of the intermediate transit of the mails it dispatches to the other, and the balance shall be equally divided between the two administrations.

There shall be excluded from the account all fines upon unpaid or insufficiently paid correspondence, and the deficient postages upon articles mentioned in the second paragraph of article first, all of which shall be retained to the use of the administration which collects them.

ARTICLE IX.

The correspondence mentioned in the second paragraph of article first shall be dispatched in conformity with the interior system of the dispatching administration, but always including the following rules:

(a.) The correspondence must be under bands, so that the contents can be readily examined.

(b.) There must be no written communication except the date, the name of the sender, the address, and the price, and manufacturers' marks upon samples of merchandise.

(c.) No pattern or packet may exceed sixty centimeters in length and thirty centimeters in any other dimension.

(d.) There shall be admitted no liquid nor other article which might injure the other correspondence, nor any article the importation of which may be prohibited by the laws or regulations of the country of destination.

ARTICLE X.

It is expressly agreed that all international correspondence exchanged shall be exempt in the country of destination from any charge whatever not expressly provided by this convention: Provided, nevertheless, That any duty which may be due to the customs upon any article, under the laws of the country of destination, may be collected.

ARTICLE XI.

The two administrations shall establish by common accord, and in conformity with the arrangements in force at the time, the conditions upon which the two offices may respectively exchange in open mails the correspondence originating in or destined to foreign countries to which they may reciprocally serve as intermediaries. It is always understood, however, that such correspondence shall only be charged with the international postage established by this convention, augmented by the postage due to foreign countries, or for other exterior service.

ARTICLE XII.

The post departments of the United States and of Italy reciprocally engage to transport gratuitously across their respective territories all correspondence which shall be exchanged in closed mails with any countries to which they may respectively serve as intermediaries: Provided always, That such conveyance shall be effected by the ordinary means of mail conveyance in use; and that the countries taking the benefits of such gratuitous service shall reciprocally accord the like privilege of free transit across their respective territories.

For the transport of closed mails by either administration for the other by sea, the following rates are fixed to be charged and received by the administration rendering the service, viz:

(a) For transport across the waters of the Atlantic ocean, 8 cents per single letter rate; and 12 cents per kilogram net of other correspondence.

(b.) For transport across the waters of the Pacific ocean, 10 cents per single letter rate, and 20 cents per kilogram net of other correspondence.

(c) For transport across the Mediterranean sea, 50 centesimi per 30 grams of letters net, and 60 centesimi per kilogram net of other correspondence.

(d) For intermediate territorial transport each administration shall charge and receive the amount which it shall have actually paid for account of the other.

ARTICLE XIII.

The accounts between the two administrations shall be stated quarterly, and transmitted and verified as speedily as practicable; and the debtor office shall pay the balance found due to the creditor office, either by exchange on London, or at the debtor office, as the creditor office may desire.

The rate for the conversion of the money of the two countries shall be fixed by common agreement between the two offices.

ARTICLE XIV.

When in any port of either country a closed mail is transferred from one vessel to another, without any expense to the office of the country where the transport is made, such transfer shall not be subject to any postal charge by one office against the other.

ARTICLE XV.

Correspondence exclusively relating to the postal service shall be transmitted on both sides free of all charge.

ARTICLE XVI.

Letters wrongly sent, or wrongly addressed, or not deliverable, for whatever cause, and all registered correspondence not deliverable for any cause, shall be returned as promptly as practicable to the originating office, at its cost, if any cost is incurred. Any postage on returned correspondence which may have been charged against the returning office shall be discharged from the account.

All other correspondence which can not be delivered shall remain at the disposition of the receiving administration.

ARTICLE XVII.

Small sums of money may be mutually transmitted from one country to the other by means of postal money orders; and the rates and conditions may be arranged by agreement between the two departments, as soon as such arrangement may be found convenient.

ARTICLE XVIII.

The two administrations shall in concert establish detailed regulations for the execution of these articles; and both the articles and regulations may be modified from time to time by accord of the two administrations, as the exigencies of the service may require.

ARTICLE XIX.

This convention shall take effect on the first of April next, and shall continue in force until one year from the time when one of the contracting parties shall have given to the other notice of its desire to terminate it, unless sooner terminated or modified by mutual agreement.

ARTICLE XX.

This convention shall be ratified on the part of the United States by the Postmaster General, and on the part of Italy by the Director General of Posts, and the ratifications exchanged as early as possible.

In testimony whereof the two commissioners have subscribed their names and affixed their seals thereto.

POSTOFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, November 29, 1867.

Having examined and considered the foregoing articles of a postal convention, for the modification of the convention executed between the United States of America and the kingdom of Italy under date of 8th July, 1863, which were agreed upon and signed in duplicate at Florence on the eighth day of November, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven, by the Hon. John A. Kasson, special commissioner, etc., on behalf of this department, and by Chevalier Advocate Giovanni Battista Tantesio, chief director of the postoffice department of the kingdom of Italy, on behalf of his department, the same are by me hereby ratified and approved, by and with the advice and consent of the President of the United States.

In witness whereof I have caused the seal of the Postoffice Department to be hereunto affixed, with my signature, the day and year first above written.

[SEAL.] ALEXANDER W. RANDALL,
Postmaster General United States.

WASHINGTON, November 30, 1867.

I hereby approve the aforegoing convention, and in testimony thereof I have caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

By the President:
WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State.

[PUBLIC RESOLUTION—No. 21.]

JOINT RESOLUTION appointing managers of the National Asylum for Disabled Soldiers, and for other purposes.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Erastus B. Walcott, of Wisconsin, John H. Martindale, of New York, and Hugh L. Bond, of Maryland, be, and hereby are, appointed managers of the National Asylum for Disabled Soldiers, under the provisions and conditions of the third section of an act approved March twenty-third, eighteen hundred and sixty six, from the twenty-first of April, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight; and that Hugh L. Bond, of Maryland, be, and is hereby, appointed manager to serve out the unexpired term of Horatio G. Stebbins, of California, resigned.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That the Secretary of War be authorized to furnish, from the captured ordnance such ordnance with their implements as he may deem proper, to the several national asylums for the purpose of firing salutes; and also such small arms and equipments as may be necessary for the purpose of guard duty at the asylums.

SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
B. F. WADE,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

Indorsed by the President: "Received March 12th, 1868."

[NOTE BY THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.—The foregoing resolution having been presented to the President of the United States for his approval, and not having been returned by him to the house of Congress in which it originated within the time prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, has become a law without his approval.]

[PUBLIC RESOLUTION—No. 22.]

JOINT RESOLUTION requiring certain moneys of the United States to be paid into the treasury, and for other purposes.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all moneys which have been received by any officer or employé of the government, or any department thereof, from sales of captured and abandoned property in the late insurrectionary districts, under or under color of the several acts of Congress providing for the collection and sale of such property, and which have not already been actually covered into the treasury, shall immediately be paid into the treasury of the United States, together with any interest which has been received or accrued thereon.

SEC. 2 And be it further resolved, That if any officer or person having the custody, possession, or control of any money derived or arising from the sale or other disposition of any such property mentioned in the preceding section shall convert the same to his own use, or shall refuse or neglect for the space of thirty days next after the passage of this resolution to pay the same into the treasury of the United States, or shall in anywise pay away or dispose of the same otherwise than by paying the same into the treasury as aforesaid, shall be deemed and held guilty of embezzling the public money of the United States and shall be punished therefor by imprisonment for a term of not more than ten years, and shall pay a fine equal to the sum so embezzled.

SEC. 3. And be it further resolved, That a sum of the proceeds of such sales not exceeding seventy-five thousand dollars is hereby appropriated for the payment of the necessary expenses incurred by or under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury for incidental expenses in acting under the laws respecting the collection and disposition of captured and abandoned property, and for the necessary expenses of defending, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, such suits as have been brought against him or his agents in the premises, and for prosecuting suits in the United States for the recovery of such property, and for providing for the defense of the United States against suits for or in respect to such property in the Court of Claims.

Approved March 30, 1868.

[PUBLIC—No. 26.]

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the judiciary act, passed the twenty-fourth of September, seventeen hundred and eighty-nine."

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That final judgments in any circuit court of the United States in any civil action against a collector or any other officer of the revenue for any act done by him in the performance of his official duty, or for the recovery of any money exacted or paid to him, which shall have been paid into the treasury of the United States, may, at the instance of either party, be re-examined and reversed or affirmed, in the Supreme Court of the United States, upon writ of error, without regard to the sum or value in controversy in such action.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That so much of the act approved February five, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, entitled "An act to amend 'An act to establish the judicial courts of the United States,' approved September twenty-four, seventeen hundred and eighty-nine," as authorizes an appeal from the judgment of the circuit court to the Supreme Court of the United States, or the exercise of any such jurisdiction by said Supreme Court on appeals which have been or may hereafter be taken, be and the same is hereby repealed.

SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
B. F. WADE,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

IN SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
March 26, 1868.

The President of the United States having returned to the Senate, in which it originated, the bill entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend the judiciary act, passed the twenty-fourth of September, seventeen hundred and eighty-nine,'" with his objections thereto, the Senate proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the same; and

Resolved, That the said bill do pass, two-thirds of the Senate agreeing to pass the same.

Attest:
J. W. FORNEY,
Secretary of the Senate.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.
March 27, 1868.

The House of Representatives having proceeded, in pursuance of the constitution, to reconsider the bill entitled "An act to amend an act entitled An act to amend the judiciary act, passed the twenty-fourth of September, seventeen hundred and eighty-nine," returned to the Senate by the President of the United States, with his objections, and sent by the Senate to the House of Representatives, with the message of the President returning the bill—

Resolved, That the bill do pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

Attest:
EDWD. McPHERSON,
Clerk of the H. R. U. S.

[PUBLIC—No. 29.]

AN ACT making appropriations for the service of the Postoffice Department during the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and sixty-nine.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be and the same are hereby appropriated for the service of the Postoffice Department for the year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, out of any moneys in the treasury arising from the revenues of the said department, in conformity to the act of the second of July, eighteen hundred and thirty-six:

For inland mail transportation, including pay of route agents, postal clerks, and mail messengers ten million five hundred and twenty-six thousand dollars.

For foreign mail transportation, four hundred and twenty thousand dollars, under the act approved March third, eighteen hundred and sixty-five, entitled "An act relating to the postal laws."

For ship, steamboat, and way letters, eight thousand dollars.

For compensation to postmasters, four million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

For clerks for postoffices, two million dollars.

For payments to letter carriers, seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

For wrapping paper, seventy thousand dollars.

For twine, fifteen thousand dollars.

For letter balances, three thousand five hundred dollars.

For compensation to blank agents and assistants, eight thousand five hundred dollars.

For office furniture three thousand dollars.

For advertising, fifty thousand dollars: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be paid to any papers published in the District of Columbia except for advertising mail routes in Virginia and Maryland.

For postage stamps and stamped envelopes, four hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

For mail depredations and special agents, one hundred thousand dollars.

For mail bags and mail-bag catchers, one hundred and fifteen thousand dollars.

For mail locks, keys, and stamps, thirty thousand dollars.

For payment of balances to foreign countries, three hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

For miscellaneous payments, including allowances to postmasters for rent, light, fuel, fixtures stationery, envelopes, and so forth, three hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be and the same are hereby appropriated for the year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated:

For steamship service between San Francisco, Japan, and China, five hundred thousand dollars.

For steamship service between the United States and Brazil, one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

For steamship service between San Francisco and the Sandwich Islands, seventy-five thousand dollars.

For preparing and publishing post-route maps, twenty thousand dollars.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That if the revenues of the Postoffice Department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations of this act, then the sum of eight hundred thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be and the same is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the revenue of the Postoffice Department for the year ending thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and sixty-nine.

Approved March 30, 1868.

[PUBLIC—No. 28.]

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the prompt settlement of public accounts," approved March three, eighteen hundred and seventeen.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the act of March three, eighteen hundred and seventeen, entitled "An act to provide for the prompt settlement of public accounts," shall not be construed to authorize the heads of departments to change or modify the balances that may be certified to them by the Commissioner of Customs or the Controller of the Treasury, but that such balances when stated by the Auditor and properly certified by the Controller as provided by that act, shall be taken and considered as final and conclusive upon the executive branch of the government, and be subject to revision only by Congress or the proper courts: Provided, That the head of the proper department before signing a warrant for any balance certified to him by a Comptroller may submit to such Controller any facts in his judgment affecting the correctness of such balance, but the decision of the Controller thereon shall be final and conclusive as hereinbefore provided.

Approved March 30, 1868.

U. S. MARSHAL'S SALES.

United States Marshal's Office, District of Louisiana—Robert Patterson vs. Medora A. MeGee, et als., No. 3646.

ALIAS FIERI FACIAS AGAINST PLAINTIFF on judgment rendered in favor of Intervenor, Mrs. Elizabeth Emilie De La Ronde, Widow and Testamentary Executrix of Pierre Hoa, deceased.

By virtue of a writ of alias fieri facias issued by the Honorable the United States Circuit Court for the Fifth Judicial Circuit and District of Louisiana in the above suit, and received by me on the 12th of December, 1867, I have seized and will offer for sale according to law, on SATURDAY, the twenty-fifth day of April, 1868, at 12 o'clock M., at the entrance to the Customhouse on Old Levee street, between Canal and Customhouse streets, in this city, the following movable and immovable property, viz—

A CERTAIN TRACT OF LAND established and cultivated as a Sugar Plantation, situated in the parish of Orleans, on the right bank of the Mississippi river, at about four miles below the city of New Orleans, having twenty-five and half arpents on said river, fourteen arpents of which on the upper side have a depth of seventy arpents, and the remaining eleven and a half arpents on the lower side have a depth of seventy five arpents bounded on one side by P. Cazelar's plantation, and on the other side by the public road leading to the parish of Plaquemines, together with all the buildings and improvements thereon, viz:

One Sugar house with Machinery and Apparatus.
One Main Dwellinghouse and Outbuildings.
One Cotton Gin and Engines.
One Stable, twenty Negro Cabins.
One Hay Shade.

And also the following stock and farming utensils, viz:

Twenty-six Mules, twenty-two Plows, and nine Carts.

Which above described property is seized to satisfy the judgment rendered in this case in favor of the above named intervenor for the sum of $31,833 33, and costs, with preference and privilege on the above described property, acquired by the said Robert Patterson, the plaintiff in the above suit, at a sale made in the said suit by the late marshal of this court on the 23d June, 1866.

Terms of Sale—This being the second adjudication, the above described property will be sold at twelve months' credit, the purchaser being required to furnish good and sufficient joint and several security, with special mortgage on the said property, bearing interest at eight per cent per annum, and to pay in cash an amount to cover all costs of suit, amounting to about ($1000) one thousand dollars, more or less.

Costs of deed and internal revenue stamps, recording, etc., at expense of purchaser.

United States Marshal's Office, New Orleans, April 6, 1868.

Margaret R. Deas, Widow, etc., vs. Mrs. C. D. Moncure and als, Children and Heirs of Henry Doyal, Deceased.

IN THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, for the Fifth Circuit and District of Louisiana, No. 3788.—By virtue of a writ of fieri facias, issued and to me directed by the above named court in the above entitled and numbered suit, and received by me on the sixth March, 1868, I have seized and taken into my possession, and will expose for sale at public auction to the highest bidder, on MONDAY, the fourth day of May, 1868, at the hour of twelve o'clock noon, at the door of the courthouse of the parish of Ascension, in Donaldsonville, Louisiana, the following described property, viz:

A CERTAIN PLANTATION, situated on the left bank of and fronting on the Mississippi river, in the parish of Ascension in this state, formerly known as the "Hard Times," but now known as the "Southwood" plantation, and bounded on the upper line by the line of the parish of Iberville, and on the lower line by lands now or formerly belonging to S. R. Tiltotson, and measures about twenty-eight and a half arpents front on the Mississippi river by eighty arpents in depth between diverging lines, with the opening thereto belonging; together with all the buildings and improvements thereon, as well as all the cattle, live stock, implements of husbandry, etc., of whatsoever kind or nature thereon or thereunto belonging; twenty-three Mules, four Carts, thirty-five Plows, twenty thousand new Bricks and a lot of Corn in barrels.

Seized to satisfy, as far as may be, the plaintiff's claim herein, viz: Five thousand four hundred dollars, together with interest and all costs, as per judgment.

Terms—Cash at time of adjudication, in United States Treasury notes; act of sale, records, and Internal Revenue stamps at expense of purchaser.

Commentary on St. Luke,

—BY—

REV. W. H. VAN DOREN,

OF CHICAGO.

Two Volumes, Crown 8vo, containing Twelve Hundred Pages. Price, $3 50.

These volumes have received the warmest commendations from clergymen of every denomination in England, where they have only recently appeared. They are now published for the first time in this country.

We append a few extracts from the opinions of the English press:

The Commentary is novel of its kind, and well sustains its title of suggestive.—Sword and Trowel.

The idea of this book is an exceedingly happy one.—The Freeman.

We heartily commend the book.—The Homilist.

We can think of nothing better for theological students, preachers of limited libraries, and Sunday-school teachers.—Morning Star.

To our lay preachers, home missionaries, Scripture readers, and Sunday school teachers, it is an invaluable treasure.—Baptist Messenger.

It is cheap, compact, and suited to this hard-working age.—The Forward.

This is an excellent idea admirably worked out.—Wesleyan Times.

We think so favorably of this work that we have brought it under the special notice of our friends in private.—Presbyterian Messenger.

This is a remarkable book, and if ever there was a multum in parvo, it is in this Commentary.—The Independent, London.

Sent free, by mail, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

NOW IS THE TIME TO FORM CLUBS.

The New York Weekly Tribune

is printed on a large double-medium sheet, making eight pages of six broad columns each. It contains all the important Editorials published in THE DAILY TRIBUNE, except those of merely local interest; also Literary and Scientific Intelligence; Reviews of the most interesting and important New Books; the Letters from our large corps of Correspondents; the latest news received by Telegraph from Washington and all other parts of the country; a summary of all important intelligence in this city and elsewhere; a Synopsis of the proceedings of Congress and the State Legislature when in session; the Foreign News received by every steamer; Exclusive Reports of the Proceedings of the Farmers' Club of the American Institute; Talks about Fruit, and other Horticultural and Agricultural information essential to country residents; Stock, Financial, Cattle, Dry Goods, and General Market Reports; making it, both for variety and completeness, altogether the most valuable, interesting, and instructive WEEKLY NEWSPAPER published in the world.

The full Reports of the American Institute Farmers' Club, and the various agricultural reports, in each number, are richly worth a year's subscription.

Ever since its commencement, THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE has been authority upon the farm. We make features of the Farmers' Club, and permit no question of interest to the agriculturist to pass without comment and advice. When it is remembered that this advice is given by one of the most conscientious farmers in the country, the reader may estimate its value. It has been well observed that a careful reading and study of the Farmers' Club Reports in THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE alone will save a farmer hundreds of dollars in his crop. In addition to these reports, we have arranged to print the best things written on the subject of agricultural by American and foreign writers. We intend to increase these features in the coming year very largely. As it is, no prudent farmer can do without it. As a lesson to his workmen alone, every farmer should place THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE upon his table every Saturday evening.

THE TRIBUNE is the best and cheapest paper in the country. This is not said in a spirit of boastfulness. We do not claim any essential superiority over our neighbors, except the superiority of place and opportunity. It has fallen to New York to create the greatest newspapers of the country. Here concentrate the commerce, the manufactures, the mineral resources, the agricultural wealth of the Republic. Here all the news gathers, and the patronage is so large that the journalists can afford to print it. A newspaper can be made in New York for half the money, and yet with twice the value of newspapers elsewhere. This is the strength of THE TRIBUNE. We print the largest, and cheapest, and best-edited weekly newspaper in the country. There is little special merit in this. We have all the advantages around us. We have great Daily and Semi-Weekly editions. Their machinery and resources are only a part of the Weekly. This paper has long had the largest circulation in America, and we have tried to justify the confidence. The result is that we have so systematized and expanded our resources that every copy of THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE contains as much matter as a duodecimo volume. Think of it! For two dollars the farmer in the course of one year buys as much matter as though he filled a shelf of his library with fifty volumes, and those volumes containing the greatest works of the language. The force of cheapness can no further go.

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE is the paper of the people. Here the eager student may know the last lessons of science. Here the scholar may read reviews of the best books. Here may be found correspondence from all parts of the world, the observations of sincere and gifted men who serve the TRIBUNE in almost every country. All the elaborate and intricate machinery of our establishment—perhaps the most complete in America—is devoted to the purpose of making the best and cheapest weekly newspaper in the world. We think we have reached that point in giving for two dollars fifty-two duodecimo volumes a year.

THE TRIBUNE is strong by reason of its enormous circulation and great cheapness. It has long been considered that THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE has the largest circulation in the country. For years we have printed twice as many papers, perhaps, as all of the other weekly editions of the city dailies combined. This is why we are enabled to do our work so thoroughly and cheaply. The larger our circulation, the better paper we can make.

What are the practical suggestions? Many. Let every subscriber renew his subscription, and urge his neighbor to do the same. If a man can not afford to pay two dollars, let him raise a club by inducing his neighbors to subscribe, and we shall send him a copy gratis for his trouble. No Newspaper so large and complete as THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE was ever before offered at so low a price. Even when our currency was at par with gold, no such paper but the TRIBUNE was offered at that price, and the TRIBUNE then cost us far less than it now does. We have solved the problem of making the best and cheapest newspaper in America—perhaps in the world. Let us see if we can not give it a million weekly circulation.

BUTTERFLIES.

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDING.

A mist cloud of crimson hangs over the clover,
Swinging and shimmering on the young dawn;
A mist cloud of crimson puffs up from the daisies,
Up from the daisies so wet and so warm.

Out from the hedge where the busy blue spiders
Have spun o'er the roses with tidies so bright,
Have spun o'er the roses so sweet and refreshing,
And pinned them with dew drops, that fell through the night.

Deep through the meadows the brown cows are wading
Knee deep in clover and cowslips and dew,
Frighting the butterflies slowly coqueting
Up from the trail of the long grasses blue.

Then the mist cloud of crimson swings up from the clover,
And is puffed by the breezes so musky and low;
Like small jets aflaming both under and over,
They flit in the sunlight with quaver and glow.

Deep in the foam of the ghost-faced lily-bells,
White as the woof of the moonbeams so thin,
Kissing the wax of her lips with a fervor,
Lavished on all, both brilliant and dim.

Oh! how many loves has a butterfly, pray?
Conquesting morning and night;
Burning with ardor the whole summer day,
Loving all things that are pretty and gay;
Loving from morn until night.

Deep in the mesh of the amber-haired lillies,
Probing their hearts till their sweetness has flown,
Kissing the tears from the blue eyed forget me-nots,
Draining their souls till their essence is gone.

The round cheek clover has frizzed her red tresses,
And holds up her pretty mouth, jaunty and gay;
Her conquest is sure, but its surety is fleeting,
The easiest won is the soonest to stray.

Oh! silly young beauties. Oh! daisies and clover!
Oh! roses and lilies so faultless and fair,
Why will you unlace your pure souls to a wanton,
And spill your soft sweetness on nothing but air.

But the fickle young butterflies burn on the meadows—
The fickle young butterflies flash on the world.
The heart of the maid is as slow as the clover,
And the fate of the flower is the fate of the girl.

Intelligence from Our Mission Rooms.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.—The following letter and resolution were received from the Secretary of State, Hon. William H. Seward, by the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church:

"Pursuant to the provisions of a resolution of the Congress of the United States, approved March 2, 1867, a copy of which is hereunto annexed, I transmit a copy of a volume which you will please accept from this Government as a testimonial of the grateful appreciation by the people of the generous expressions of condolence and sympathy in the national bereavement which were communicated in so touching a manner by the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church to the Department of State of the United States."

"Resolved, By the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in addition to the number of copies of papers relating to foreign affairs now authorized by law there shall be printed for distribution by the Department of State, on fine paper, with wide margin, a sufficient number of copies of the appendix to the diplomatic correspondence of eighteen hundred and sixty-five to supply one copy to each Senator and each Representative of the Thirty-ninth Congress, and to each foreign government, and one copy to each corporation, association, or public body whose expressions of condolence or sympathy are published in said volume. One hundred of these copies to be bound in full Turkey morocco, full gilt, and the remaining copies to be bound in half Turkey morocco, marble edged. Approved March 2, 1867."

A copy of this national work, "Tributes of the Nations to Abraham Lincoln," has reached our office, containing over one thousand articles, including the action of our Missionary Society, taken when the calamity which befell the nation in the assassination of President Lincoln occurred.

SOUTH AMERICA.—Rev. H. G. Jackson, with his wife and two children, left the port of New York in the steamer Merrimac for Buenos Ayres, via Rio de Janeiro, on Thursday last, April 23, from pier 43 North River.

WHERE ARE THE MEN?—Rev. Presiding Elder Boynton, of the Grand Traverse Mission district, Michigan Conference, writes under date of April 8: "The spirit of revival is still with us on this district. The tide of salvation is 'rolling on' in great force, and souls are being saved. Applications for preachers to dispense the word of life in destitute places are multiplying, but where to obtain the men to occupy these places I do not know. 'O Lord, send forth laborers into thy vineyard!'"

FACTS AND FIGURES.—The statements which we made under this head some time since have elicited much attention in various directions. We have now before us a letter from a friend who seems deeply affected at the small average amount given by our people for the conversion of the heathen world. His language is: "At the most we suppose our work for the salvation of the nine hundred millions of heathen who never heard of Jesus is now receiving ten cents each from our members." He does not count our German, Scandinavian, and South American missions, though foreign, among those; of course not, and this accounts for his reaching so small an average, which is not, we are sorry to say, very far from the fact in the case. He goes on to say: "Now I know a man who has given $50 a year and more for work among the heathen, besides doing about his share of the home work. He has creditably supported a family of eight children, and at no time in the twenty-six years, since he began this course, has his income been more than $1000, or averaging say $700, and nearly all of it the fruit of his daily labor. If he had no family to provide for he could as easily furnish $800 for the heathen this year as he now does the $75 which he is in the way of doing."

A MONTHLY OFFERING.—The largest monthly missionary offering of which we have heard lately came in on Sabbath afternoon, April 19, from the juveniles of the St. John's Sunday School and Juvenile Missionary Society, Brooklyn, one hundred and forty dollars.

THE FORTY-NINTH ANNUAL REPORT.—Rev. Dr. Crary, of the Central Christian Advocate, says of it:

"It is always a pleasure to see it, for it brings good news. The society is not half a century old, yet it has done incalculable good, and grows in strength as it grows in age. Its collections in the aggregate seem large, and yet it never has attained to a sum equal to the aggregate of two cents a week per member. 'Take the whole Church together,' Dr. Hitchcock said the other day, 'and we do not pay two cents apiece per member per week.' We sometimes indulge in little calculations which do not increase our boasting. For instance, two cents a week for each member would give us over $1,000,000 for the missionary cause. Would it kill us if we should pay five cents a member? which would yield $2,500,000. Suppose we should give five cents a week to the cause of missions, yielding $2,500,000, two cents for Sunday schools and tracts, $1,000,000, two and a half cents for Church extension, $1,250,000, one-half to American Bible Society, $500,000. Then we have ten cents a week and $5,000,000 for benevolent purposes, and can not raise ten cents a week for the cause of Christ? There are very few that could not earn at least one dollar a week, and the tithe of that would yield a wonderful return. The report before us shows that the average per member runs from one cent a year for each member to $1 88. Georgia Conference—just organized—is the lowest, and Colorado the highest. Would it not be a good plan to bring up all our members if possible to the way of paying five cents a week?"

LAYING FOUNDATIONS.—A good woman within the bounds of the Pittsburg Conference is giving a special amount of one hundred and fifty dollars annually to the missionary cause to constitute some one of her children a life manager of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, presenting to the party a certificate to that effect. After this manner it is that this good woman is laying foundations in the hearts of her children whereby to commit them to the maintenance of the missionary cause through all their days.

INDIA.—From a letter just received at the mission rooms from Rev. J. M. Thoburn, President of the India Mission Conference at its last session, we learn that the increase of members and probationers will be an advance of fifty per cent over last year.

He that indulges himself in ridiculing the little imperfections and weaknesses of his friends will in time find mankind united against him. The man who sees another ridiculed before him, though he may for the present concur in the general laugh, yet in a cool hour will consider the same trick might be played against himself.

It is the duty of every man who would be true to himself to cultivate if possible a disposition to be pleased.

The Funeral of Mirabeau.

"Open the window. I shall die today. All that can now be done is to envelop one's self in perfumes, to crown one's self with flowers, to surround one's self with music, that one may sink quietly into everlasting sleep."

So said Mirabeau on the morning of the day of his death.

He had reached the summit of worldly glory. He was the popular idol of France. His statesmanship had given to the people a constitution to protect them from the tyranny of courts and kings. The king, in the presence of five hundred thousand people, had accepted that constitution amid the booming of cannon, the peal of triumphal music, and the ringing acclamations of popular applause. The shout that ascended when the proud monarch swore eternal fidelity to that charter of civil rights had been echoed from Paris to the Pyrenees, from the Rhine to the Alps, from the Alps to the ocean. Paris for a week had known no night, for the blaze of countless torches had linked the festal days. And in these unparalleled days of enthusiasm and festivity the name of Mirabeau had been perpetual music to the ear of every republican Frenchman.

With these scenes of triumph fresh in mind, Mirabeau was suddenly stricken with a mortal sickness. His thoughts were all engrossed in worldly concerns. He was a man of the world. His life, from the bravura of youth to the strength of maturer years, had been one of restless ambition. The current of infidelity that inundated France had borne him along its destructive course. He had never felt the presence of God in prayer, he had never known the streams of delight that flow from the unseen world. Such things to him were dark, vague, and mysterious, and death found him without hope or consolation. "All that can now be done," said the departing statesman, "is to envelop one's self in perfumes, to crown one's self with flowers, to surround one's self with music, that one may sink quietly into everlasting sleep." With such delights he would fain have lulled the voice of conscience and diverted his unquiet thoughts.

The funeral of Mirabeau was inconceivably splendid. Four hundred thousand men, headed by Lafayette, joined in the imposing pageant. The streets of Paris were draped, the bells tolled, and pealing requiems rose on every hand. The funeral oration was pronounced at eight in the evening, at the church of Saint Eustache. The arms of twenty thousand of the National Guard were simultaneously discharged, shivering to atoms every pane of glass in the costly edifice. It was midnight when the vast procession turned away from the vaults wherein was deposited the sarcophagus.

And all this pomp and homage was for one who had never known his God, and whose soul hungered for sensual delights to soothe his dying pillow. The reflection throws a shadow over the dazzling spectacle, and dampens our sympathetic elevation of soul, for our hearts beat in sympathy with the pulse of liberated France, and in Mirabeau there is much to admire.

"This is the last of earth. I am content," said John Quincy Adams dying in the national capitol. He asked not for music, nor perfume, nor flowers. The dying Christian needs them not. He breathes the aroma of heaven, and hears afar the music of celestial harps and the chiming of celestial bells. "I breathe the air of heaven," said Dr. Gano when dying. "Home, home," said Normand Smith. "I see the New Jerusalem. They praise Him, they praise Him!" At such hours

"The massive gates
Of Paradise are open wide,
And come forth * * *
Sweet echoes of unearthly melodies
And odors snatched from beds of amaranth."

Vibrations.

The thought of the whole world of science is now directed to vibrations. The investigation of the subject commenced with those vibrations of the atmosphere which produce sound. These were first very thoroughly examined. It was ascertained that the particles of air vibrate in lines radiating from the sounding body, causing first a condensation and then a rarefaction of the air in hollow globes which expand swiftly outward. By means of that ingenious instrument, the sirene, the number of vibrations in a second to produce any given note can be exactly counted, and, from the ascertained velocity of sound, the length of the waves can be calculated.

The fact that sound is a vibration, or a series of vibrations, of the particles of the air, led to the suggestion that heat and light may be also a series of vibrations in the heated body. Some years since the great French astronomer, M. Arago, suggested a series of experiments to settle the question in regard to light, and the result was that light is a vibration, and not an emanation, as held by Newton. It is now regarded as almost if not absolutely settled, that all the forces—heat, light, electricity, magnetism, and chemical affinity—are vibrations of different kinds.

If we fasten one end of a cord to a rigid support and hold the other end, we may, by shaking the loose end up and down, or horizontally sideways, or round in a circle, or alternately in different directions, produce vibrations of various kinds, which will be propagated in waves along the cord. We can not, however, make that sort of vibration back and forth in the direction of the wave which corresponds to the vibration of sound, and we can imagine other vibrations in the particles of air that can not be represented by the motions of a cord. In air or ether we can conceive of enough different kinds of vibrations to produce all the imponderable forces.

It is well known that any one of these forces may be made to produce any other. In the galvanic battery the action commences by oxygen entering into combination with the zinc (chemical affinity); this generates electricity, the electricity will heat a wire, and when the wire becomes red hot it begins to give out light. The theory is that when the oxygen strikes the zinc it produces that kind of vibration which exhibits the phenomena of electricity; when the flow of electricity is obstructed, its vibrations are altered to those that present the phenomena of heat; and when these become sufficiently active, the heated body is put into that kind of vibration which impresses the retina of the eye with the sensation of sight.

It is supposed that these several vibrations, or at least those of light and heat, are transmitted from the vibrating body by means of similar vibrations in a subtle ether which pervades all space. The masters of science are now coming, or have come, to the conclusion that all this theory is established truth.

The earth is whirling on its axis, and sweeping its vast orbit around the sun; the sun with its attendant planets is moving on in its majestic march among the stars; the stars are weaving their dance in our stellar system; and the several stellar systems of the universe are revolving in orbits of inconceivable extent around each other. At the same time all matter is shivering and trembling in various and rapid vibrations.

The Standard of Dress.

We are always excessive when we sacrifice the higher beauty to obtain the lower one. A woman who will sacrifice domestic affection, conscience, self-respect, honor, to love of dress, we all agree loves dress too much. She loses the true and high beauty of womanhood for the lower beauty of gems and flowers and colors. A girl who sacrifices to dress all her time, all her strength, all her money, to the neglect of the cultivation of her mind and heart, and to the neglect of the claims of others on her helpfulness, is sacrificing the higher to the lower beauty. Her fault is not the love of beauty, but loving the wrong and the inferior kind.

In fine, girls, you must try yourselves by this standard. You love dress too much when you care more for your outward adornings than for your inward dispositions, when it afflicts you more to have your dress tern than to have lost your temper—when you are more troubled by an ill-fitting gown than by a neglected duty—when you are less concerned at having made an unjust comment, or spread a scandalous report, than having on a passe bonnet—when you are less concerned at the thought of being found at the last great feast without the wedding garment than at being found at the party to-night in the fashion of last year. No Christian woman, as I view it, ought to allow it to take up all of three very important things, viz: all her time, all her strength, all her money. Whoever does this, lives not the Christian, but the Pagan life—worships not at the Christian altar of our Lord Jesus, but at the shrine of the lower Venus of Corinth and Rome.—Mrs. Stowe.

The Candle and the Snuffers.

"You are a great snuff taker," said the candle to the snuffers.

"For your good not my own," replied the snuffers.

"You are indebted to me for snuff," said the candle.

"And you to me for snuffing," responded the snuffers.

"Your phiz is foul," said the candle.

"It has been in contact with yours," retorted the snuffers.

"All you have you receive from me," said the candle.

"What I receive from you," rejoined the snuffers, "is worthless to you and useless to me."

"You are cold and dark; I'm a burning and shining light," said the candle. "I give my body to be burned; my light shines before men, and for their good I'm burning up."

"No, you are burning down," said the snuffers.

Here they submitted the query to the candlestick, to decide whether the candle was burning up or down.

The candlestick, who held all the light there was on the subject, stated that the candle was neither burning up nor down, but burning out.

A puff of wind extinguished the candle.

"A temporary light," said the candlestick, "can not bear puffing."

"I care not," said the snuffers, "whether the candle went up or down, or out—enough for me that I survive my opponent."

"The candle lacked love," said the candlestick, "you lack light. He that exults at the fall of a rival shows that he feared him—and he that fears a foe will fail a friend. In all your debate," continued the candlestick, "self was in the ascendant; and self is but another name for sin, and savors more of one who saw him fall."—Fables.

Humorous.

The Boston Post says: "Nothing is good when run into the ground." How about plows, and—and—posts, eh?

Note from the new cook book: In eating raw oyster peel the shells off before swallowing. They are indigestible, and are apt to lie heavy on the stomach.

A new volcano has been discovered in the moon—inaccessible to tourists at present.

A Leavenworth (Kansas) paper has a correspondent who thinks the colored citizens of that State are far too ignorant to be intrusted with ballots. He writes as follows:

KIKAPOO, nov the 24, 1867.

DERE ZUR—Will you pleze inform me whether nigger suphrage Was carried at The late lection. If sech ignrant peepul is to voat, I want to leave this God fursaking State, and go back to Souther illinois.

yeurs trool,

Why do Irishmen resemble the waves of the Atlantic? Because they never cease lavin the shores of the "ould country."

HOW PAT HEAVED THE LEAD.—Any one who has traveled on the Mississippi during low water has witnessed the process of heaving the lead, and will see where the laugh comes in in the following without much difficulty:

The —— was coming down the upper Mississippi loaded with pig lead. As she was going over a shoal place the pilot gave the signal to heave the lead. The only man forward at the time was a green Irishman.

"Why don't you heave the lead?"

"Is it to heave the lead, your honor? Where to?"

"Overboard, you blockhead!"

The Irishman snatched up one of the pigs of lead and threw it overboard. The mate in endeaving to prevent him lost his balance and fell into the river.

The captain running to the edge of the roof asked: "Why don't you heave the lead, and sing out how much water is there?"

"The lead is heaved, your honor, and the mate has gone down to see how much water there is," responded Pat.

SUCCESSFUL BEGGING.—It requires tact to draw money from cold hearts and tight purses, and many expedients of doubtful morality are resorted to to gain the desired end. The following device may be suggestive to those who are anxious for good collections:

A London preacher once delivered the anniversary discourse for a charitable institution, closing his remarks with a powerful exhortation to the audience to give liberally for its support. Just as the plates were being passed round for the collection the preacher rose and said, as follows:

"From the sympathy I have witnessed in your countenances, and the strict attention you have honored me with, there is only one thing that I am afraid of, that some of you may feel inclined to give too much. Now, it is my duty to inform you that justice, though it is not pleasant, should always be a prior virtue to generosity; therefore, as you will all be called upon in your respective pews, I wish to be thoroughly understood that no person will think of putting anything on the plate who can not pay his debts!"

It need not be added that his advice produced an overflowing collection.

HIGH UP ON THE ROCK.—Once on a time there lived a powerful king, who reigned over a large and fertile country. He had crowns of gold and pearls, and scepters of ivory and precious stones. His treasury was full of the costly things of earth; tens of thousands of armed men were ready to obey his bidding, and his dominion extended from sea to sea. But without God's blessing worldly possessions are but an increase of care, and as this mighty monarch feared not God he was dissatisfied and unhappy.

In the dominions of the king there lived a certain dervish, famed for abstinence, sanctity, wisdom, and piety; and the king, willing to profit by the instructions of the holy man, paid him a visit. He found him clothed in sackcloth, living in a cave surrounded with high rocks, on the borders of a wilderness.

"Holy man," said the king, "I come to learn how I may be happy."

Without giving any reply, the dervish led the king through the rugged pathways of the place, till he brought him in front of a high rock, near the top of which the eagle had built her eyrie.

"Why has the eagle builded her nest yonder?"

"Doubtless," replied the king, "that it may be out of the way of danger."

"Then imitate the bird," said the dervish; "build thy throne in heaven, and thou shalt reign there unmolested and in peace."

Now, the king would have willingly given the dervish a hundred pieces of gold, if he would have accepted it, for this precious piece of advice. It may be as useful to you as to the king, for you are all as much interested in being happy as he was. As the eagle built her nest on the rugged rock, build your hope on the "Rock of Ages." As the dervish told the king to erect his throne in heaven, so I tell you to "seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affections on things above, not on the things of the earth." Do this, and you will be above the reach of danger for time and eternity.

"I find," says Sanderman, "almost invariably, that the more I am engaged in doing something for the good of others, the happier I am in my mind." The secret of his burning zeal was the threefold motto he took from the day of his conversion. "Looking unto Jesus." "My grace is sufficient for thee." "Whose I am, and whom I serve."

An Australian Drought Fast.

The great drought of 1838 and 1839 was terrible. "God," said a dear old friend, "gave us a drop of rain now and then just to keep us alive, but it was terrible." If the reader should ever visit the western mountains of New South Wales, and the beautiful table lands lying beyond, the people of the Cornish settlement and Guyong will tell him of things worth hearing about the great drought and the great fast. The condition of the country was frightful. The Cornish settlement and Guyong resolved to fast. That night came the rain. None at Bathurst. Bathurst heard of what had transpired, and one week later Bathurst fasted. That night came the rain at Bathurst. Perhaps they erred at both places in not erecting memorials of these events, but the children of God need neither marble nor stone, obelisk or pyramid, to convince them that the Lord is a prayer hearer and a prayer answerer. We were mentioning these blessed things to a poor German woman in the western district as an incentive to her faith, when she replied: "Vell, I do remember ven I vos in Shermany ter vas von krate grout, te cattel vos tying, and te minishters and te pepel has von fast vot you call it, for all te pepel to go to te prayers, pecause ter vas no krass for te cattel, and I rememper vell te rain come ver soon after tat!" Glory be to God say we; "te rain come ver soon after tat." The poor German woman involved in it the realization of a principle so great and so blessed that if the children of men only knew its glory, they would fall down and worship before the throne from whence it always flows an everlasting, undimmed and glorious ray.—Vanderkiste's Lost, but not Forever.

The Michigan Constitutional Election.

A correspondent of the New York Independent gives the following account of the causes for the defeat of the new Constitution in Michigan at the recent election:

LANSING, April 7, 1868.

DEAR SIR—Let me assure you that our Constitution was not defeated by the enemies of equal suffrage. Multitudes voted against it for other reasons. Some were indignant with a wretched clause relative to the power of supervisors. Some preferred to keep the old Constitution rather than risk the liquor question under the new. Thousands had the mistaken idea that it made salaries too high; and many feared that the expenses of the State generally would be ruinously increased. Of course, every besotted negro hater voted no; but they are not a majority. The battle was lost not by numbers on that question, but, as battles often are, by a combination of unforeseen causes outside of the relative strength of armies.

The party of progress has lost nothing but a little time in the result. The next Legislature will surely offer an amendment providing for equal suffrage, and the people will, on a distinct issue, ratify it. We have lost nothing in the election of township officers; and Michigan is just as sure as Massachusetts for 25 000 majority for Grant (and Colfax, I hope) next fall.

Yours, truly, C. B. STEBBINS.

Cheering reports of crop prospects continue to come to us from all parts of the West. The indications are said to show that the harvest of 1868 will be a large one. In Wisconsin the winter wheat is looking remarkably well, but little of it having been winter killed, and from the Northwestern States the prospect is equally cheering. Kansas promises the largest crop the State has ever been blessed with, and Illinois is equally hopeful. Indiana will have plenty and to spare. In Indiana it is said that wheat never looked better, and a much larger breadth has been sown than last year. The same good reports come from Ohio.

ACROSS THE RIVER.

BY FRANCIS L. KEELER.

Ah! why do we sigh for the joys that are fled?
We know they are flown forever;
And we can not go back to bury our dead
Across Time's rapid river;
We see them die and are hurried away
Across the pitiless river,
And our pleadings are vain with them to stay
In the silence across the river.

But still we reach our helpless hands
Back across the river,
To phantom forms in viewless lands
That lies across the river.
We listen long for low replies
To float from o'er the river;
Weeping we watch with wistful eyes
For light across the river.

And oh! 'tis well for all to cast
At times across the river
A backward glance into the Past
That sleeps beyond the river.
Alas! for those who drink no joy
While sailing o'er the river,
Whose gold of life is all alloy,
Whose mourning lasts forever.

Cheer up, cheer up, unhappy life!
Look forward to the morrow;
Forget earth's bitterness and strife,
And banish thoughts of sorrow.
For oh! beyond the treacherous tide of Time's temptestuous river,
Away upon th' eternal side,
Our joys will last forever.

FOR PRESIDENT,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Rev. Dr. Newman,

The Editor of the Advocate, though not fully recovered from his congestive chill, left this city on Monday evening last to attend as a delegate the General Conference of our Church in Chicago, Illinois. He was accompanied by his wife, also by Rev. R. K. Diossy and wife. Brother Diossy goes to visit a sick mother in Brooklyn, New York, and will return in two or three weeks.

Rev. Henry G. Jackson.

In a private letter received by the Assistant Editor of the Advocate from Brother Jackson he states that he is in New York city, awaiting the departure of the steamer Merrimack, on which he was to take passage on the 23d instant for Buenos Ayres, South America. He goes out as a missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is accompanied by his wife and two small children.

It will be remembered that Brother Jackson spent about a year in New Orleans in the work of our Church, and left here after receiving a dangerous wound on the day of the massacre, July 30, 1866.

His friends here will wish him great success in his new field of labor.

Rev. Hardy Ryan.

A letter from Brother Lynch, Presiding Elder of Jackson District, Mississippi, informs us that Brother Ryan was to leave Columbus, Mississippi, last week for Liberia, Africa. Though Brother Ryan is about sixty years of age, yet he is hale and hearty, and good for several years hard labor.

He will doubtless accomplish much good in this distant field of labor. We hope and believe that he is but one of many thousands of preachers and teachers that will in a few years find their way to their native Africa, their fatherland, to bring this dark, benighted land to a knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Personal.

We have had the pleasure of welcoming to our city this week the Hon. L. B. Jacks, Senator from Iberville, the Hon. Carlos Wilcox, Senator from Pointe Coupee, and the Hon. J. S. Mathews, Representative from Tensas. They are all reliable Republicans, and we are glad that their constituents have sent gentlemen of such ability, character, and influence to represent them.

With such men in the General Assembly it will soon recover the tone and dignity which it had lost under Democratic auspices.

Zion's Herald and the Ames Methodist Episcopal Church.

On the twelfth of March the Zion's Herald contained an editorial on caste in the Ames Methodist Episcopal church, to which the trustees of our church replied, but up to date the editor of the Herald has declined to publish their replication; we therefore give it to the public this week. In the meantime if Mr. Haven still refuses to publish the response we shall feel it our duty to say some plain things about him and his notions.

Secret Prayer.

Reader, do you spend much time in secret prayer? Candidly ask yourself the question and give answer. If you do not you are not a strong Christian, nor a growing Christian. How could you be when you neglect so plain an admonition as this. "But thou when thou prayest enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." That is, retire from the world, its cares and toils, to commune with your God. Not to say your prayers, but to pray. To commune with God as with a bosom friend. Of course you should always have a spirit of prayer, should always walk circumspectfully before God, and do, speak, and think all with a special view to please him; should feel that you are more clearly in his sight than in that of your friend with whom you walk at midday.

But aside from this and your public and family devotions, you need to withdraw from the sight of men and the cares of this world, and with nothing to distract your mind pour out your soul before God, unbosom your heart to him, confess to him your misdoings and shortcomings, and seek his mercy and his strength. Do you fear this being alone with God? If so, there is not perfect love and sympathy existing between you and your God. The faithful, obedient child will always reverence a kind and true parent, but will not fear to be alone in that loving parent's presence. Then why do you fear? Because you are a disobedient or unfaithful child. You are not doing all that you know you should do. But until you are reconciled this dread will continue. Now tell me where you would recommend an erring child to become reconciled to its parent if not alone with him? Take then your own advice to yourself, and seek alone an interview with your Heavenly Parent. Become fully reconciled and consecrated and your dread will be gone, and the hour spent each day in secret prayer will be by far the happiest as well as the most profitable portion of the day.

It is in secret prayer more especially that the soul receives its strength. And whatever robs us of this privilege, though it be the public means of grace, will not prove to us a source of profit. Young Christians particularly should remember this. It is secret prayer more especially that "Is the Christian's vital breath—

The Christian's native air."

Neglect not then this great privilege, this solemn duty. Do you say that you have not time for secret prayer? What! not time to obey God? To whom does your time belong? Did you not consecrate this with all things else to God? Not time to serve God? For what, then, have you time if not for this most important matter of your life? You find time to meet and converse with friends; time for making visits; time to sit in idleness, when rest is not absolutely demanded; time for trashy or unimportant reading; time for much that is trifling; but no time to spend alone with God.

You, upon reflection, must confess that it is not for want of time but for a want of disposition that secret prayer is neglected. If a special friend in whom you delighted or from whom you expected some temporal good were near at hand you could find an hour each day to spend with him. Be mindful then of the fact that you may receive more good from Jesus than from all earthly friends combined.

Seek him with your whole heart and he will give you a love for secret prayer—will so charm your soul that so far from dreading you will look forward with longing desire to the hour when you are to have your special interview with your Savior and your God. The moments will then fly too quickly away, and the song of your heart will be,

"My willing soul would ever stay
In such a frame as this,
And sit and sing herself away
To everlasting bliss."

The Danger of Bolting.

As the smoke of the battle clears away it now becomes apparent to our people how dangerous was the experiment tried by the bolters, and how near it came not only to defeating the regular candidates in many cases, but the Constitution itself. This was the great danger which this journal was the first to forsee and to point out to the people.

The rebels have come much nearer controlling the General Assembly than is at all pleasant. If they had done so the Constitution would have been just as dead as though every vote in the State had been polled against it. Let Republicans look at the danger so narrowly escaped, and let it teach them this lesson: never in the hour of battle to tolerate bolters and deserters. They are like the bummers, sutlers, and teamsters of an army, always in the rear in a fight; in the front when there's plunder.

Rev. Mr. Brown, of Washington City, will preach in the Ames Methodist Episcopal church on Sunday morning at eleven o'clock, and in the evening at half-past seven.

Old Maids.

This class of the community has so often been lightly spoken of in jest, and the terms used, "As cross as an old maid," "as notional as an old maid," or "as queer as an old maid," that some persons seem to believe that these terms are really applicable to them. We suppose that at the first some one in their good nature pretended to tease a maiden aunt or friend by telling her that the tendency of a single life was to make her become notional; that she would be happier if married; that perhaps she did not marry for the same reason that Jack did not eat his supper, etc., not thinking for a moment that any would be found so weak as to seriously receive as truth such absurd remarks, and really believe her condition would be bettered by a change. But here was his error. There are some people who can't understand a joke, and these idle remarks have been passed around in all seriousness by some of these numbsculls until scores of people are really beginning to believe them. We think, therefore, that the joke has been carried quite far enough. We would enter on their defense. If a young lady wishes to refuse the many offers of marriage made her, and live in single blessedness, we conclude she has some good reason for so doing. Perhaps she has noticed that the motto of the married woman is, "We, Us, & Co.;" that all she thinks of is her husband and children; that all her affections, interest, and cares are for them alone. And she, being a woman of broader, more generous views—a real philanthropist—looks beyond self and the little group she might gather around her to the world at large. She does not wish to dwarf or fetter these noble feelings. She therefore refuses all offers of marriage lest she restrict her usefulness, and do less good for the world. She intends to go about visiting the poor, careworn, and afflicted ones of the earth, the wives especially, and cheer them up and encourage all in the great battle of life. See how unselfish she is.

But as she goes about from house to house on her mission of love, as we have often seen her, you misjudge her and say that she goes on a mission of curiosity, that she goes to gossip. And when and where she makes inquiry about all the little family affairs you say she is pumping for news to go and tell elsewhere. You miserable fellow! You are judging her by married women. No, sir! She is simply inquiring about these matters that she may manifest her deepest sympathy.

But you say they generally are so cross. No, sir! That's another whopper! They are sensible women; women of great minds, generally, and do not go giggling about continually, but only laugh when there is something to laugh at.

Do you say they always seem to have a look of anxiety, as though they envied the married women they meet? Fudge! How blinded you are by prejudice. If you wish to speak the truth, why do you not say that the wifes are manifesting this envious spirit toward their single sisters.

To say nothing of being married to a tyrant or to a drunken brute, which is too horrible to mention, take the one beloved of her husband and contrast her with the single lady or the "old maid," as you call her. A thousand cares, which we will not attempt to enumerate, have occupied her attention until she discover, that it is nearly dinner time. The children are not yet washed and dressed. This must be attended to. Hastily she dips a large dish of hot water from the boiler to temper the cold water in the bath tub. Just then she hears little Kate and Charley in the next room struggling and quarreling over a China pitcher. She puts down the hot water on the floor and runs to save her pitcher from destruction. Scarcely has she succeeeed when a terrific scream from Tommy, whom she was preparing to wash, assures her of some calamity. She flies to his rescue and finds that he has commenced operations on his bath by thrusting his hand into the scalding water and has completely parboiled the flesh thereon. His screams waken the sick baby that she has spent so much time in getting to sleep, and the little thing, frightened from its slumber, vies with Tommy in its screeching. While she is attending to the unfortunate child she glances across the room, and there is little Maggie with mother's nice new lace cape which she had pulled from the drawer that in the haste was left open after getting the cloths to wrap up the wounded hand. And the innocent little creature is using this to wipe up the water which in the excitement was spilled on the dirty door. She snatches this, but alas! too late to save it. Just then she smells the meat in the oven burning, and for the first time recollects that the cook, a half-hour before, when going out on an errand, left the roast in her charge. It is now probably burnt to a coal, and the company that husband was to bring home to dinner, and who are soon expected, will have a poor prospect for satisfying their appetites. But the door bell is ringing furiously, and as one of the little ones manages to open it, there is seen Mrs. Highfalutin, Mrs. Gadabout, and Mrs. Talkforever come to make a call. The baby, to whom one of the children had given some bright red peppers from the kitchen table, has rubbed them in its eyes and is now squalling worse than ever. The one bestowing them has met with a similar accident, and is joining in the uproar. But we will not tell you of the rest of this poor wife's troubles, which rapidly followed those we have related. We know you could not endure listening to them. Suffice it to say that this is not half that occurs some days. Look at her sad and careworn expression as she, half-dead, drags herself about. Look at her pale or sallow countenance—contrast it with the rosy cheeks and smiling face of your maiden aunt. Yet this is what you call "domestic bliss," connubial felicity." We confess that we can't see it. Still there may be a great deal of poetry in this, to those who are better qualified for appreciating it.

O how greatly have old maids been misjudged! How much pity has been foolishly wasted on them who need none at all.

And now, dear girls, pray never allow the thought to enter your mind that to live a maiden life is a calamity, but consider it rather a privilege.

In conclusion, we would say, if you want to find persons not given to gossiping, persons devoid of curiosity, of envy, of jealousy and hatred, who are unselfish, philanthropic, sympathetic, cheerful, rosy-cheeked, happy, sensible, agreeable, contented creatures, then go among our maiden ladies to find them. Right heartily do we indorse them, and shout at the top of our voices, Old maids to-day! and Old maids forever!

Long may they wave!"

Ames M. E. Church of New Orleans.

At a meeting of the official members of this church held on the evening of the 20th instant among other matters of business the attention of the board was called to an editorial article in Zion's Herald, of the 12th instant, based on a communication furnished the editor of that paper by a member of the Mississippi Mission Conference. The board, after carefully considering the correspondence and the editorial based thereon, were unanimously of the opinion that injustice thereby had been done both to Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman, the pastor, and to the trustees of the church.

Therefore, we the official board of this church, wish respectfully to disabuse your mind of the erroneous impressions that have been made by the correspondent referred to, and place ourselves and the church here in our true light before our generous friends of the North.

With all the Christian charity we can prayerfully command, we can not think that the author of the communication was actuated by sincere Christian feelings, or a desire to benefit our colored brethren, or to advance our great Redeemer's cause in this portion of our Zion. But on the contrary we believe that it was for the gratification of some personal and perhaps ambitious feelings that this firebrand, which failed to create the strife and division here which its author hoped for, has been thrown among our friends in the North to alienate them from us, while we are religiously struggling here to unite every Christian element to give us position in this great metropolis of the Southwest, and thus enable us to successfully combat the enemies of our religion, and also the enemies of our country, and build up a church that shall be a power for good throughout all the South.

It is true that this is a church for the whites to worship in. It is so from the fact that at the organization of our church in this State the proposition was distinctly submitted to the pastors and official members of the several colored churches, assembled for this purpose, for their action, whether they preferred churches to themselves and ministers of their own color, or all, white and colored worship together. They unanimously and very decidedly chose the former course, which was acquiesced in by our minister, and has ever since been satisfactorily adhered to by both parties. This course necessitated the erection of Ames' church, and its occupancy by the whites.

Our course of conduct toward our colored brethren here is not complained of by them, but is, on the contrary, fully approved, as is shown by the accompanying certificate of the ministers in charge of the churches in this city and vicinity.

Our prospects as a church here are to-day very flattering. The only course we could have pursued to get access to the great mass of the whites in this city is the one we have pursued. But we have abandoned no principle. Instead of furnishing our enemies, both of church and State, with clubs to injure us, we have disarmed them of an expected weapon with which they thought to crush us out, namely, depriving ourselves of a church for whites to worship in, and thus confining our labors and influence exclusively to the colored people. We have designed and are now in the providence of God prepared to offer places of worship to all classes of our fellow men.

We thank God that in his wonderful providence he has sent here a servant, the Rev. J. P. Newman, D. D., as our pastor, eminently endowed him with intellect and rare attainments, with piety and zeal, with energy and endurance, to carry forward the great work of re-establishing the mother church here in the Southwest against all the stupendous opposing influences that surround her. To this great work the Rev. Dr. Newman has unceasingly applied his varied abilities with a zeal and success for the last four years that challenge our admiration and gratitude, and that the long annals of eternity will be required to develop all the worth of these labors.

Our friends in the North can neither comprehend nor appreciate the wonderful labors of this man, both of mind and body, since he has been in this city, to accomplish the mission of the church in the South, as we who have witnessed his toils, listened with delight to his eloquent and instructive discourses, and in some measure endeavored to labor with him.

We can not, without violence to our own sense of duty and Christian feeling, see so eminent a servant of the church as Dr. Newman so misrepresented to the church in the North by this correspondent without entering our protest. We who have been here all the time have witnessed his conduct and approve his course.

Trustees and Stewards of the Ames Methodist Episcopal church.

From the colored pastors.

We the ministers in charge of the following Methodist Episcopal churches in this city and vicinity certify that we advised the course pursued by Rev. Dr. Newman in giving our people ministers of their own color, and separate churches in which to worship, and that we still adhere to the preference, and believe that it will providentially be the means of reaching more souls with the gospel, and bring them to the Redeemer from this city than by having mixed churches. And we also approve of the course of the trustees in the management of the Ames Methodist Episcopal church in regard to our people:

A. Ross, Pastor of Wesley chapel.
Scott Chinn, Pastor of the Marais street church.
Henry Green, Pastor of First street church.
E. P. Royal, Pastor of Laharpe street church.
E. Green, Pastor of Poet street church.
J. Gould, Pastor of Ross chapel.
New Orleans, March 20, 1868.

Other ministers who were present at this meeting, all of whom recommended the course pursued, are now on distant charges, and their signatures could not be conveniently procured.

[For the New Orleans Advocate.]

Mr. Editor:

The negro has heretofore been publicly assailed as an idler, and when freed from the "institution" now doomed in almost every part of the civilized world, has been, times without number, heralded as too lazy to earn his bread without having some one to drive him to it: but we have had occasion to see the influences that slavery in its mildest form exert over the mind, will, and disposition of a race considered superior mentally, morally, and intellectually to the negro. The results produced are to us one and equal, and prove to our own mind conclusively that like causes must inevitably produce like effects. Hence the white man under the influence of slavery is no more energetic and persevering when freed from its baneful and pernicious influences than the black man, and according to certain rules the converse must also be true.

From The Guardian, an English paper, of December, we make the following extract:

Russia.—The emancipation of the serfs is said to have produced results here something like the abolition of slavery did in the West Indies. A letter from St. Petersburg says: At this moment the condition of the country is very melancholy. The descriptions given of it by the Russian papers are very gloomy indeed. The peasant in many cases interprets personal independence as the right to do nothing beyond what is required to buy him a little food and a great deal of gin, etc.

Now, Mr. Editor, it is well known to your readers that the serfs of Russia are whites, and not blacks. The same results produced by the emancipation of the blacks of the West Indies by the British were followed by similar results, and to our minds hurls the oft-repeated declaration of unceasing maligners in their teeth, that the negro is inferior to the Caucasian race in every and any position. It gives us the right under such an admission as the above extract indicates to assert that no one race is superior to the other, and the negro being allowed equal facilities and advantages, actuated by the same motives, is equal to his would-be-called superior in capacity, acumen, and intellectual development.

Such an admisssion on the part of those who have so long and zealously labored in various ways and divers manners to prove the inferiority of the negro just now we consider opportune. Our beloved republic has been forced to extirpate slavery, and that, too, in its most hateful form—thus throwing millions upon their own resources for the first time since their birth, who will doubtless interpret freedom according to their own ideas, false though they be; but still we feel that the same stigma can not, and will not, in truth and justice to their education of the lash and chains and other means of torture, be attached to them as a race; but the fact that slavery, in any form, generates a certain degree of idleness, be the victim white or black.

Action and reaction are equal in ethics as in matter. The strength and tenacity of the wicked, unnatural prejudice which at present exists toward the colored race is itself a sufficient guarantee that public sentiment must and will receive a reactionary impulse.

"Knowledge is power." And the time is not far distant when the most inveterate unbeliever in the capacity of the negro must yield to indubitable evidence, so earnestly do these persecuted people clutch at the hitherto "forbidden fruit" of knowledge, and so persistent are they in its acquisition.

Education is the silent instrumentality destined to lift this down-trodden race from the slough of ignorance and imbecility where it has remained since the tiny, apparently insignificant seeds of slavery were dropped at Jamestown. Taking deep root, they grew into the gigantic upas tree, whose branches overshadowed the entire nation. And they did notice in the bud the bitterness which to their sorrow they have tasted in the fruit.

Less than seven years ago the "Stars and Stripes" were to the colored race but emblems of the cruelest oppression; beneath its folds they groped in the darkest shadows of ignorance. Iniquity framed into law made it a penal offense, punishable with imprisonment for a certain term of years, and sometimes with death, to teach a slave the letters of the alphabet.

"Now the schoolmaster is abroad," and is reaping an abundant harvest from the seeds of instruction so industriously sown. It is Justice strikingly illustrated that churches from which eight years ago a slaveholding gospel was promulgated should be converted into schools for the instruction of the freedmen and women, that walls polluted by the breath of treason should now re-echo peans of praise and thanksgiving for the redemption of a race from worse than Egyptian bondage.

Everywhere in the South you may see a pacific band of teachers and civilians, whose glorious privilege it is to lift these brutalized people from their low estate, substituting the spelling-book and slate for the whipping-post and the lash, thus casting up a highway for the progressive civilization of the now despised and persecuted race.

When the South shall be reconstructed, and peace shall again wave her olive branch over our tortured country, when she shall come with her myriad attendants to rebuild our despoiled and dismantled cities, and to recultivate fields which have been swept by the fiery torrent of war, then will the equal humanity of these hitherto antagonistic people, wholly disenthralled, and brought into fraternal and harmonious relationship with the more favored race, be recognized and appreciated. As an industrial population they will prove, not the "mud-sills," but the prop of the political and social fabric—the sinews of wealth and prosperity to the country—restoring the worn and wasted Southern States to something better than their former condition, rebuilding the desolated towns and cities, and by the magic influence of free labor making the solitary places to be glad, and the plantations to rejoice and blossom as the rose, and conclusively prove that the light of intelligence beams beneath the swarthy complexion of the negro.

Respectfully,
FRED'K K. HYDE.
New Orleans, April 25, 1868.

New Orleans, April 24, 1868.

General E. W. Leavenworth, Syracuse, New York:

Dear Sir—Your kind letter affords me great pleasure, mingled with very deep melancholy, in the long list of so many of our old friends gone to that bourne from whence there is no returning, so soon open to us. You ask my "best judgment what is to flow from and be the result of extending the elective franchise to the blacks of the Southern States?"

I answer never in the history of the world has any race of human beings improved so much in centuries as that race has in these States since the inauguration of the rebellion. And what has done this? It is the inspiration sent down from Heaven enunciated in the Declaration of Independence by our fathers, and that inspired the blacks to shed their blood so freely for the Union and rights of citizenship—the ballot-box, the equalizer and grand elevator and guarantee against overshowing aristocracy, despotism, and oppression of the masses of all races of men.

You would be astonished could you see what citizenship, schools, and association with our race in political meetings, clubs, and political rostrums have done and is to do for them. Many of them now in imagination and oratory on the political stage vie with our ablest men. In fact, that race in these States are now as capable of duly exercising the elective franchise as the greater number of that class denominated the "white trash" by our aristocracy—would-be aristocracy—men and women who have been living on the sweat and blood of human beings without just compensation, denying the race the privilege of education or reading the word of God. If more heavenly reasoning do not inspire our people to avoid further sin of slavery severer judgments and greater calamities are certain to overtake the nation.

In 1834, in Mr. Redfield's bookstore in Syracuse, our old friend V. W. Smith and several gentlemen alluded to the project of the New York and Erie Railroad, and all of them dissented—in fact, said it was impossible to build a railroad over that rough country. I said to them, "Gentlemen, you are mistaken. Politics will build that railroad," and politics did build it.

As sure as politics have done that—as sure as politics have opened the ballot-box to the Germans and Irish, will politics secure to the colored citizens of this State and nation the ballot-box as long as free government endures, and no majority party will ever venture to curtail it.

It is the virtuous and saintly men and women and virtuous press, who are wisely and surely working out the great problem of universal freedom and higher development of all races of human beings—one language, one universal brotherhood. If, then, your Northern and Western people believe God made all peoples of one flesh and one blood, let the dry bones of "good men" and "Christians" shake who deprive a citizen of the ballot-box, of freedom and progress and nobler manhood here, and higher hopes of happiness in heaven.

Freedom and the ballot box are the schools of progress, the fulcrum, the Archimedean lever of our republic to raise the world.

It is not for New Orleans or the blacks of our Union, but for all the races of human beings on the wide globe, for whom my soul sympathizes and would ask the attention of your people to the golden rule found in the book of books. You little know how painful it is for good Republicans to be taunted with the fact that your States labor for and desire the extension of the franchise to the blacks here and refuse them the boon there, without which boasted "liberty" and "freedom" are but terms of mockery.

Our revolutionary fathers ignored the law of primogeniture in justice to every member of the domestic family, to check the dangerous tendency of aristocracy, and elevate the masses.

God has been scourging our nation to prepare it to do justice to every member of the national family; to make man truly man. I answer yours asking "my best judgment" in this matter. It is that the inspiration sent down from Heaven to our revolutionary fathers is penetrating the hearts of this, and I hope your people, that equal freedom to both races to the ballot-box is imperative and destiny. God's will is in it, and such States as do not secure the honor, and that power, will give it to the Democratic party in two years from now, and I repeat no majority party will ever dare to curtail it. Colored men have been a most valuable element in saving the country once; arm them with the power to vote, and they will be equally useful and faithful in defending the Union—not a white man's or a black man's government, but a government of the people.

Fear not then, dear sir; ere long all will be well, and the republican oppressed from all lands will come to this great and grand republic to live under the egis of the declaration of American independence, and our glorious flag wave in far-coming time the beacon of freedom to the world.

With great respect,
Your sincere friend,
JOHN WHITE.

A New Methodist Church at Vicksburg, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor:

We are seriously considering the propriety of making an effort to build a new church at Vicksburg at a cost of from five to eight thousand dollars. The pastor, Rev. Lev. Baker, has already with great energy commenced an effort to raise funds to make improvement, but the poverty of the people will scarcely permit them to raise more than a few hundred dollars.

We think, however, that we should have a substantial, large, and elegant building, to take the place of the rude, unplastered, and rickety building the congregation now own. Among the many reasons we suggest the following: First—This society is the only Methodist Episcopal society in Vicksburg. It has grown from ten persons to six hundred. Second—There is a growing Northern element in Vicksburg representing advanced views, and it contains some Methodists (though very few) who would become a constituent part of this society if there were such church accommodations as would be in keeping with their previous association. Third—Vicksburg is a growing city, the second if not the first in the State, large dwelling houses and stores have recently been erected, improvement is visible everywhere, and the house of God should be as respectable in appearance as its surroundings. Vicksburg is a point where the Methodist Episcopal Church needs a representative building, showing the strength and liberality of Methodism as does the Ames chapel in New Orleans. Fourth—There is a probability that the State of Mississippi will constitute before long a separate conference, and such a building as is proposed will be needed for conference gatherings, anniversaries, etc. Such a building would greatly encourage Methodism in the State, and be instrumental in adding to its efficiency. We look with hopefulness to our friends at the North to encourage this project.

The Board of Registration.

ORDINANCES CREATING THE BOARD.

NOTICE TO TAX COLLECTORS AND SHERIFFS,

Committee Rooms, Board of Registration,
New Orleans, March 10, 1868.

The board of registration was organized by the election of S. B. Packard, chairman, and R. C. Richardson, secretary.

On motion, resolved, that the following ordinance and resolution creating said board, and fixing its duties, be published in the official paper of this board:

ORDINANCE.

Whereas, The act of congress of the twenty-third of March, 1867, sets forth as one of the purposes of the assembling of this convention "to establish a civil government for the state:"

Be it ordained by the people of Louisiana in convention assembled, That a board of registration for the state be appointed by this convention, to consist of seven members thereof, whose term of office shall begin with the adjournment of the convention, and end with the inauguration of state officers, as provided for in the constitution.

Be it further ordained, etc., That it shall be the duty of said board to elect a chairman from among its members, and a secretary, and that all public notices, proclamations, and orders shall be signed by the president and attested by the secretary.

Be it further ordained, etc., That the said board shall have power and authority to make rules, regulations, and orders concerning the registration of voters, the duties of registrars, the holding of elections, the duties of commissioners of the respective polls, the making of returns, and the announcement of the result of the election; Provided, That such rules, regulations, and orders shall in no wise conflict with the provisions of the act known as the reconstruction act, or with the schedule or ordinance contained in the constitution to be submitted by this convention, or with the lawful authority of the district commander, exercised in pursuance and furtherance of said acts and provisions, but shall be in co-operation with and furtherance of the same. Their authority shall extend to all matters of execution or detail not fully provided for in said reconstruction acts and constitution, and in case of the non-action of any officer of the state, or district commander, or any omission in carrying out said law, regulations, or ordinances, or detail "necessary to carry into effect the purposes" of said act, according to their letter or spirit.

Be it further ordained, etc., That they shall be empowered for the administration of oaths of office and the issuing of commissions to act in case of vacancy or the non-action or omission to perform their duties of any or all elective officers.

Be it further ordained, etc., That it shall be the duty of said board to fix the salary and regulate the duties of all officers of elections ordered to be held by the reconstruction acts and the constitution, and the salary and expenses incurred in carrying this ordinance into effect, shall be paid upon the certificate of the chairman of said committee, out of any funds raised by the tax ordinance of this convention, passed December 24, 1867, not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the board of registrars shall not have the power to fix their salaries at a greater sum than $5 per day.

Adopted in convention at the city of New Orleans this thirteenth day of February, Anno Domino eighteen hundred and sixty-eight.
JAMES G. TALIAFERRO,
President.

Attest:
Wm. Vigers, Secretary.

Be it ordained by the constitutional convention of the state of Louisiana, That the board of registration created by ordinance adopted by the convention February 13, 1868, shall have authority to enforce the collection of the taxes levied by the several ordinances of the convention, and to perform any and all duties appertaining to the same.

Adopted in convention this third March, 1868.
JAMES G. TALIAFERRO,
President.

Attest:
Wm. Vigers, Secretary.

CERTIFICATE OF ELECTION.

The following delegates having received the highest numbers of votes cast were duly elected to compose the board of registration created by ordinance passed by the Louisiana constitutional convention at its session of February 13, 1868, to-wit:

Messrs. S. B. PACKARD,
N. UNDERWOOD,
J. H. INGRAHAM,
J. S. HARRIS,
W. JASPER BLACKBURN,
O. H. HEMPSTEAD,
G. W. WICKLIFFE.

New Orleans, March 12, 1868.
JAMES G. TALIAFERRO,
President.

Attest:
William Vigers, Secretary.

In accordance with the foregoing ordinance and resolution, the board of registration adopted the following:

On motion, resolved that all official minutes of the proceedings of this board, together with all proclamations, resolutions, and other legal notices be published in the New Orleans Republican, the New Orleans Advocate and the Homer Iliad.

On motion, resolved that the official papers of this board be required to publish the constitution in their regular issues until the days of election, inclusive, to be paid at the regular rates fixed by the convention.
S. B. PACKARD, Chairman.
R. C. Richardson, Secretary.

Board of Registration,
New Orleans, March 27, 1868.

At a regular meeting of the board, held on Friday, March 27, 1868, the following resolution was adopted:

"On motion, resolved that the final settlement of the tax collectors and sheriffs throughout the state with the state treasurer, as fixed in the original tax ordinance adopted by the constitutional convention December 24, 1867, section 4, be extended to the first day of May, 1868."

By virtue of the above ordinance, approved March 3, 1868, I hereby notify all tax collectors and sheriffs throughout the state that they continue to collect the convention tax up to the first of May next.

They are further instructed that the penalty imposed for non-payment of said tax, which penalty was revoked until after March 20, will be enforced from that date.
S. B. PACKARD, Chairman.

The Georgia Homestead and Exemption Bill.

I. Each head of a family, or guardian, or trustee, of a family of minor children, shall be entitled to a homestead of realty to the value of $2000, in specie, and personal property to the value of $1000, in specie, both to be valued at the time they are set apart. And no court or ministerial officer in this State shall ever have jurisdiction or authority to enforce any judgment, decree, or execution against said property so set apart—including such improvements as may be made thereon, from time to time—except for taxes, money borrowed and expended in the improvement of the homestead, or for the purchase money of the same, and for labor done thereon, or material furnished therefor, or removal of incumbrances thereon. And it shall be the duty of the General Assembly, as early as practicable, to provide by law for the setting apart and valuation of said property, and to enact laws for the full and complete protection and security of the same to the sole use and benefit of said families as aforesaid.

II. All property of the wife, in her possession at the time of her marriage, and all property given to, inherited, or acquired by her, shall remain her separate property, and not be liable for the debts of her husband.

Queen Victoria's last drawing room reception was held on the first instant. As on the preceding reception, Minister Adams "was prevented by unavoidable circumstances from attending." The "circumstances" referred to are that court etiquette demands that he should wear a fancy suit of clothes, while Congress forbids him to do so.

Green's Chapel.

An entertainment will be given at Wesleyan Hall, on Liberty street, between Poydras and Perdido streets, on Tuesday evening, May 5, for the benefit of Green's Chapel, otherwise known as Poet Street Church. Tickets for supper, fifty cents. All are invited.

Dentistry.—We take great pleasure in recommending all who wish an excellent job of dentistry done to Dr. B. F. Wright, 153 Customhouse street, between Bourbon and Burgundy streets. Dr. Wright expects to start North soon to spend the summer, and up to the time of his departure will attend to the work of all who call on him at one-half of his heretofore moderate rates, if paid in greenbacks. As he is a workman of the best order, we do not see why his rooms should not be crowded during the time he remains in the city, even though it is hard times.

Mr. Nelson's Speech.

The Washington agent of the Associated Press has had so much to say laudatory of the speech of Mr. Nelson, one of the counsel for the President in the impeachment trial, that public curiosity has become somewhat excited as to the forensic effort of the Tennessee backwoodsman. The following from the Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette shows with how much judgment the press reporters criticise when they make the attempt:

SPECIMEN OF TENNESSEE ORATORY.

Governor Boutwell finished his argument at one o'clock to-day, and, after a recess, Mr. Nelson, of the President's counsel, began what proved to be one of the most ludicrous speeches ever delivered in the Senate—in the manner of the speaker, in some of the matter, in gestures, in earnestness, and in effect upon the Senators. It was fully equal to a hard-shell sermon. It more than overbalanced the worst that has been charged upon the matter or bearing of any of the managers. Judge Curtis and Mr. Evarts could not by any effort conceal their disgust, and Curtis withdrew at an early hour, but Evarts and Groesbeck sat it through. By turns the Senators were disgusted and amused, and these feelings were displayed without regard to party. Mr. Nelson began by giving a brief outline of his own professional career, from which it appeared that he had been a lawyer for thirty years, and had tried cases involving life, liberty, and character. The following is a fair specimen of the first portion of the speech:

"The charges had been made that the President was an unworthy successor to those who had filled his high office; that he was a ribald and a wanton, and that he bandied jests, etc., with the crowd. These charges had been made and reiterated, and until now no reply had been made to them, and he proposed now before entering on a review of the articles of impeachment to answer them. If the President was such a man as had been painted, then he (Mr. Nelson) would have said he was indeed a monster of such frightful mien as to be hated needed but to be seen: that a whip should be placed in the hands of every man to lash him naked through the world: that his name should be used to frighten children with: that the memory of his crimes would cause each particular hair to stand on end like quills upon the fretful porcupine."

He then read from Wirt a paragraph, for the benefit of the managers, and went on with what appeared to be a parody on the old school-book speech, beginning "Who was Blennerhassett?" repeating frequently, instead of the above, the words "Who is Andrew Johnson?" Then he traced him from the time he was a small boy, in Greenville, where he soon after engaged in what Mr. Nelson termed a humble mechanical pursuit, up through his whole career, omitting, however, his service of alderman, to the Presidency. This, and his service in the Senate as a Union man, was Mr. Johnson's usual speech on that subject, almost word for word, bad grammar and all. In explaining who Andrew Johnson was, he declared he was an old Democrat, had so announced himself in his letter accepting the Republican nomination, and had been true to his early views. He had followed Mr. Lincoln's policy, and, according to Mr. Nelson, had retained Mr. Lincoln's Cabinet, which was thought to be quite an admission by the managers. He next defended at length, with great warmth, the right and duty of the Chief Justice to assume and exercise judicial powers, and the earnestness with which he demanded that the Chief Justice should assert his right in these respects was regarded by all as utterly out of place. He however announced that he did not know as he was expressing the views of any other gentlemen of the counsel. The whole speech bore evident marks of being directly inspired by the President, and is universally laughed at by both parties to-night. Mr. Nelson did not finish, but will, unless counsel succeed in restraining him, occupy fully half the session to-morrow.

One of the meanest things in the impeachment trial was developed in the testimony of Walter Cox, a witness for the defense. Mr. Cox, who is a lawyer, swore that President Johnson told him he wanted to have the tenure of office act tested, and wanted him to see "Stanbery, who had been too lazy to look into the matter." Considering that Mr. Stanbery has been a faithful friend to this President, and has done everything possible to advance his interests, this abuse of him behind his back is most discreditable. The truth seems to be that A. J. is a very poor creature, and that if he is turned out the relief of the country will be great.—N. Y. Sun.

Senator Rice, of Arkansas.

Hon. B. F. Rice, who has just been chosen United States Senator, for the "long term," by the Legislature of Arkansas, was, a few years since, a well-known citizen of Minnesota. At the beginning of the war he resided at Mankato, in Blue Earth county, where, we believe, he was engaged in the practice of law. A native of Kentucky, and a moderate Democrat in politics, he from the first gave a zealous support to the government in its conflict with rebel slaveholders, and in the fall of 1861 enlisted in the service, being mustered in as captain of company H, third regiment Minnesota volunteer infantry. Soon after the arrival of his regiment in Kentucky he was detailed on duty as judge advocate of a general court martial, and after General Grant had opened the way into Tennessee in the spring of 1862, by the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, he was assigned to duty as provost marshal at Murfreesboro. In the following summer he acted as judge advocate under General Buell at Nashville. After the re-organization of the regiment and its return to the field, which followed its capture at Murfreesboro, he was again detached on the same duty in Arkansas, where he served as provost marshal under General Fred Steele. In July, 1864, having served nearly three years, he resigned and settled in Little Rock, where, we believe, he has since resided engaged in the pursuit of his profession.

Senator Rice is a gentleman of excellent abilities, while his record in the army, as well as his choice as the first radical United States Senator from the newly reconstructed State of Arkansas, prove his patriotism to be of a sterling quality. We do not doubt that he will prove an able and faithful representative in the United States of the first Southern State to reorganize its government on the basis of the reconstruction acts of Congress.—St. Paul Press.

The police president of Berlin has recently published a small, but rather startling, official document on prostitution in Berlin. He says the police has registered the names of twenty-five thousand professional prostitutes, and knows that as many women more, though seemingly respectable, lead a life of shame. He says also that the twenty-five thousand prostitutes spend annually on an average at least eight hundred dollars each, or twenty million dollars together, and that they have to pay for all the necessaries of life at least three prices.

LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Passed at the Second Session of the Fortieth Congress.

[Public Resolution—No. 22.]

JOINT RESOLUTION requiring certain moneys of the United States to be paid into the treasury, and for other purposes.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all moneys which have been received by any officer or emp'oye'e of the government, or any department thereof, from sales of captured and abandoned property in the late insurrectionary districts, under or under color of the several acts of Congress providing for the collection and sale of such property, and which have not already been actually covered into the treasury, shall immediately be paid into the treasury of the United States, together with any interest which has been received or accrued thereon.

Sec. 2. And be it further resolved, That if any officer or person having the custody, possession, or control of any money derived or arising from the sale or other disposition of any such property mentioned in the preceding section shall convert the same to his own use, or shall refuse or neglect for the space of thirty days next after the passage of this resolution to pay the same into the treasury of the United States, or shall in anywise pay away or dispose of the same otherwise than by paying the same into the treasury as aforesaid, shall be deemed and held guilty of embezzling the public money of the United States and shall be punished therefor by imprisonment for a term of not more than ten years, and shall pay a fine equal to the sum so embezzled.

Sec. 3. And be it further resolved, That a sum of the proceeds of such sales not exceeding seventy-five thousand dollars is hereby appropriated for the payment of the necessary expenses incurred by or under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury for incidental expenses in acting under the laws respecting the collection and disposition of captured and abandoned property, and for the necessary expenses of defending, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, such suits as have been brought against him or his agents in the premises, and for prosecuting suits in the United States for the recovery of such property, and for providing for the defense of the United States against suits for or in respect to such property in the Court of Claims.

Approved March 30, 1868.

[Public—No. 26.]

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the judiciary act, passed the twenty-fourth of September, seventeen hundred and eighty-nine."

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That final judgments in any circuit court of the United States in any civil action against a collector or any other officer of the revenue for any act done by him in the performance of his official duty, or for the recovery of any money exacted or paid to him, which shall have been paid into the treasury of the United States, may, at the instance of either party, be re-examined and reversed or affirmed, in the Supreme Court of the United States upon writ of error, without regard to the sum or value in controversy in such action.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That so much of the act approved February five, eighteen hundred and sixty seven, entitled "An act to amend 'An act to establish the judicial courts of the United States,' approved September twenty-four, seventeen hundred and eighty-nine," as authorizes an appeal from the judgment of the circuit court to the Supreme Court of the United States, or the exercise of any such jurisdiction by said Supreme Court on appeals which have been or may hereafter be taken, be and the same is hereby repealed.

SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
B. F. WADE,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

In Senate of the United States,
March 26, 1868.

The President of the United States having returned to the Senate, in which it originated, the bill entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend the judiciary act, passed the twenty-fourth of September, seventeen hundred and eighty-nine,'" with his objections thereto, the Senate proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the same; and

Resolved, That the said bill do pass, two-thirds of the Senate agreeing to pass the same.

Attest:
J. W. FORNEY,
Secretary of the Senate.

In the House of Representatives, U. S.,
March 27, 1868.

The House of Representatives having proceeded, in pursuance of the constitution, to reconsider the bill entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend the judiciary act, passed the twenty-fourth of September, seventeen hundred and eighty-nine,'" returned to the Senate by the President of the United States, with his objections, and sent by the Senate to the House of Representatives, with the message of the President returning the bill—

Resolved, That the bill do pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

Attest:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That if the revenues of the Postoffice Department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations of this act, then the sum of eight hundred thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be and the same is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the revenue of the Postoffice Department for the year ending thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and sixty-nine.

Approved March 30, 1868.

[Public—No. 28.]

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the prompt settlement of public accounts," approved March three, eighteen hundred and seventeen.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the act of March three, eighteen hundred and seventeen, entitled "An act to provide for the prompt settlement of public accounts," shall not be construed to authorize the heads of departments to change or modify the balances that may be certified to them by the Commissioner of Customs or the Controller of the Treasury, but that such balances when stated by the Auditor and properly certified by the Controller as provided by that act, shall be taken and considered as final and conclusive upon the executive branch of the government, and be subject to revision only by Congress or the proper courts: Provided, That the head of the proper department before signing a warrant for any balance certified to him by a Comptroller may submit to such Controller any facts in his judgment affecting the correctness of such balance, but the decision of the Controller thereon shall be final and conclusive as hereinbefore provided.

Approved March 30, 1868.

[Public—No. 30.]

AN ACT making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the government for the year ending thirtieth June, eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be and the same are hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the objects hereafter expressed, for the fiscal year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, namely:

For salaries of envoys extraordinary, ministers, and commissioners of the United States at Great Britain, France, Russia, Prussia, Spain, Austria, Brazil, republic of Mexico, China, Italy, Chili, Peru, Portugal, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Turkey, Greece, Ecuador, United States of Columbia, Bolivia, Venezuela, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Sandwich Islands, Costa Rica, Honduras, Argentine Confederation, Paraguay, Japan, and Salvador, three hundred and one thousand dollars.

[Public—No. 31.]

AN ACT to exempt certain manufactures from internal tax, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That sections ninety-four and ninety five of the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and all acts and parts of acts amendatory of said sections, be and the same are hereby repealed, except only so much of the said sections and amendments thereto as relates to the taxes imposed thereby on gas made of coal wholly or in part, or of any other material; on illuminating, lubricating, or other mineral oils or articles the products of the distillation, redistillation, or refining of crude petroleum, or of a single distillation of coal, shale, peat, asphaltum, or other bituminous substances, on wines therein described, and on snuff and other manufactures of tobacco, including cigarettes, cigars, and cheroots: Provided, That the products of petroleum and bituminous substances hereinbefore mentioned, except illuminating gas, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be taxed at one-half the rates fixed by the said section ninety-four.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to repeal or interfere with any law, regulation, or provision for the assessment or collection of any tax which, under existing laws, may accrue before the first day of April, anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty-eight. And nothing herein contained shall be construed as a repeal of any tax upon machinery or other articles which have been or may be delivered on contracts made with the United States prior to the passage of this act.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That after the first day of June next no drawback of internal taxes paid on manufactures shall be allowed on the exportation of any article of domestic manufacture on which there is no internal tax at the time of exportation; nor shall such drawback be allowed in any case unless it shall be proved by sworn evidence in writing, to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that the tax had been paid, and that such articles of manufacture were, prior to the first day of April, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, actually purchased or actually manufactured and contracted for, to be delivered for such exportation; and no claim for such drawback, or for any drawback of internal tax on exportations made prior to the passage of this act, shall be paid unless presented to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue before the first day of October, eighteen hundred and sixty eight.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That every person, firm, or corporation who shall manufacture by hand or machinery any goods, wares, or merchandise, (breadstuffs and unmanufactured lumber excepted,) not otherwise specifically taxed as such, or who shall be engaged in the manufacture or preparation for sale of any articles or compounds not otherwise specifically taxed, or shall put up for sale in packages with his own name or trade mark thereon any articles or compound not otherwise specifically taxed, and whose annual sales exceed five thousand dollars shall pay for every additional thousand dollars in excess of five thousand dollars, two dollars, and the amount of sales in excess of the rate of five thousand dollars per annum shall be returned quarter-yearly to the assistant assessor, and the tax on the excess of five thousand dollars shall be assessed by the assessor and paid quarter-yearly in the months of January, April, July, and October of each year, as other taxes are assessed and paid. And the first assessment herein provided for shall be made in the month of July, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, for the three months then next preceding.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That every person engaged in carrying on the business of a distiller who shall defraud or attempt to defraud the United States of the tax on the spirits distilled by him, or any part thereof, shall forfeit the distillery and distilling apparatus used by him, and all distilled spirits and all raw materials for the production of distilled spirits found in the distillery and on the distillery premises, and shall, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred dollars, nor more than five thousand dollars, and be imprisoned not less than six months, nor more than three years.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That if any officer or agent appointed and acting under the authority of any revenue law of the United States shall be guilty of gross neglect in the discharge of the duties of his office, or shall conspire or collude with any other person to defraud the United States, or shall make opportunity for any person to defraud the United States, or shall do, or omit to do, any act with intent to enable any other person to defraud the United States, or shall make or sign any false certificate or return in any case where he is by law or regulation required to make a certificate or return, or having knowledge or information of the violation of any revenue law by any person, or of fraud committed by any person against the United States under any revenue law of the United States, shall fail to report, in writing, such knowledge or information to his next superior officer, and to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, he shall, on conviction, be fined not less than one thousand dollars, nor more than five thousand dollars, and shall be imprisoned not less than six months, nor more than three years.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That no compromise, or discontinuance, or nolle prosequi of any prosecution under this act shall be allowed without the permission in writing of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General.

Approved March 31, 1868.

RINK'S ORGAN SCHOOL,

Carefully Revised; with the German Directions and Terms translated into English, and the Pedal Part printed on Separate Staff. The whole edited by W. T. BEST.

"This is a good edition of a standard work, perhaps we should say the best of all works for the formation of a correct style of organ playing and the mastery of the instrument in all its varied resources. Rink's teacher was Kittel, of Erfurt, a distinguished pupil of John Sebastian Bach, and in this collection of preludes and exercises we have an excellent reflection of the thorough method of which the great German master is the acknowledged representative."—*N. I. Hand-Book to the Mastery Series, 12mo ...50c.
II. The Mastery Series. French. 12mo.........50c.
III. The Mastery Series. German. 12mo.......50c.

From the American Preface, by Prof. E. M. Galliaudet.

"Most opportunely making the acquaintance of Mr. Prendergast and of his theory before leaving England for the Continent, the writer determined to put the Mastery System to the test in Germany.

"The results which crowned the labor of the first week were so astonishing that he fears to detail them fully, lest doubts should be raised as to his credibility. But this much he does not hesitate to claim, that, after a study of less than two weeks he was able to sustain conversation in the newly acquired language on a great variety of subjects."

Letter from a Postmaster
IN FAVOR OF
JONAS WHITCOMB'S REMEDY FOR ASTHMA.

MONROVIA, Ind., April 29, 1856.

MR JOSEPH BURNETT—Dear Sir: I am now nearly out of WHITCOMB'S REMEDY FOR ASTHMA. I let a friend of mine have half of the last dozen I sent for. I would not be without the medicine for any consideration. Before I commenced taking the medicine I was totally unfit for business two-thirds of my time. But now I can attend to business all the time. When I have symptoms of Asthma, or even an attack, a few doses subdues it at once.

Please send me one dozen more as low as you can afford it. Send to Belville on Terre Haute and B. Railroad by express. I can remit by letter if you prefer it.

Very respectfully,
JOHN McLELLAND.

Have Just Published:
A Suggestive
Commentary on St. Luke,
—BY—
REV. W. H. VAN DOREN,
OF CHICAGO.

Two Volumes, Crown 8vo, containing Twelve Hundred Pages. Price, $3 50.

These volumes have received the warmest commendations from clergymen of every denomination in England, where they have only recently appeared. They are now published for the first time in this country.

We append a few extracts from the opinions of the English press:

The Commentary is novel of its kind, and well sustains its title of suggestive.—Sword and Trowel.

The idea of this book is an exceedingly happy one.—The Freeman.

We heartily commend the book.—The Homilist.

We can think of nothing better for theological students, preachers of limited libraries, and Sunday-school teachers.—Morning Star.

To our lay-preachers, home missionaries, Scripture readers, and Sunday school teachers, it is an invaluable treasure.—Baptist Messenger.

It is cheap, compact, and suited to this hard-working age.—The Forward.

This is an excellent idea admirably worked out.—Wesleyan Times.

We think so favorably of this work that we have brought it under the special notice of our friends in private.—Presbyterian Messenger.

This is a remarkable book, and if ever there was a multum in parvo, it is in this Commentary.—The Independent, London.

The New York Weekly Tribune

is printed on a large double-medium sheet, making eight pages of six broad columns each. It contains all the important Editorials published in THE DAILY TRIBUNE, except those of merely local interest; also Literary and Scientific Intelligence; Reviews of the most interesting and important New Books; the Letters from our large corps of Correspondents; the latest news received by Telegraph from Washington and all other parts of the country; a summary of all important intelligence in this city and elsewhere; a Synopsis of the proceedings of Congress and the State Legislature when in session; the Foreign News received by every steamer; Exclusive Reports of the Proceedings of the Farmers' Club of the American Institute; Talks about Fruit, and other Horticultural and Agricultural information essential to country residents; Stock, Financial, Cattle, Dry Goods, and General Market Reports; making it, both for variety and completeness, altogether the most valuable, interesting, and instructive WEEKLY NEWSPAPER published in the world.

The full Reports of the American Institute Farmers' Club, and the various agricultural reports, in each number, are richly worth a year's subscription.

Ever since its commencement, THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE has been authority upon the farm. We make features of the Farmers' Club, and permit no question of interest to the agriculturist to pass without comment and advice. When it is remembered that this advice is given by one of the most conscientious farmers in the country, the reader may estimate its value. It has been well observed that a careful reading and study of the Farmers' Club Reports in THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE alone will save a farmer hundreds of dollars in his crop. In addition to these reports, we have arranged to print the best things written on the subject of agricultural by American and foreign writers. We intend to increase these features in the coming year very largely. As it is, no prudent farmer can do without it. As a lesson to his workmen alone, every farmer should place THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE upon his table every Saturday evening.

THE TRIBUNE is the best and cheapest paper in the country. This is not said in a spirit of boastfulness. We do not claim any essential superiority over our neighbors, except the superiority of place and opportunity. It has fallen to New York to create the greatest newspapers of the country. Here concentrate the commerce, the manufactures, the mineral resources, the agricultural wealth of the Republic. Here all the news gathers, and the patronage is so large that the journalists can afford to print it. A newspaper can be made in New York for half the money, and yet with twice the value of newspapers elsewhere. This is the strength of THE TRIBUNE. We print the largest, and cheapest, and best-edited weekly newspaper in the country. There is little special merit in this. We have all the advantages around us. We have great Daily and Semi-Weekly editions. Their machinery and resources are only a part of the Weekly. This paper has long had the largest circulation in America, and we have tried to justify the confidence. The result is that we have so systematized and expanded our resources that every copy of THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE contains as much matter as a duodecimo volume. Think of it! For two dollars the farmer in the course of one year buys as much matter as though he filled a shelf of his library with fifty volumes, and those volumes containing the greatest works of the language. The force of cheapness can no further go.

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE is the paper of the people. Here the eager student may know the last lesson of science. Here the scholar may read reviews of the best books. Here may be found correspondence from all parts of the world, the observations of sincere and gifted men who serve the TRIBUNE in almost every country. All the elaborate and intricate machinery of our establishment—perhaps the most complete in America—is devoted to the purpose of making the best and cheapest weekly newspaper in the world. We think we have reached that point in giving for two dollars fifty-two duodecimo volumes a year.

THE TRIBUNE is strong by reason of its enormous circulation and great cheapness. It has long been considered that THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE has the largest circulation in the country. For years we have printed twice as many papers, perhaps, as all of the other weekly editions of the city dailies combined. This is why we are enabled to do our work so thoroughly and cheaply. The larger our circulation, the better paper we can make.

What are the practical suggestions? Many. Let every subscriber renew his subscription, and urge his neighbor to do the same. If a man can not afford to pay two dollars, let him raise a club by inducing his neighbors to subscribe, and we shall send him a copy gratis for his trouble. No Newspaper so large and complete as THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE was ever before offered at so low a price. Even when our currency was at par with gold, no such paper but the TRIBUNE was offered at that price, and the TRIBUNE then cost us far less than it now does. We have solved the problem of making the best and cheapest newspaper in America—perhaps in the world. Let us see if we can not give it a million weekly circulation.

ALONE.

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDING.

A cloud was in my heart—I could not see the sun;
A sob convulsed my being, and its wail
was, "I'm alone!"
I could not cheer my senses, I could not rouse a smile;
For a woe sat sadly sobbing, like a poor neglected child.

I caught the dirge she murmured, and I
wailed it o'er and o'er;
And I closed my every window, and I bolted
every door
Of my heart, that none might enter save
my melancholy moan;
And my poor blind senses chanted, "Alone,
I am alone!"

From a friendly ray of sunlight a beam crept o'er my brow;
Its touch was full of kindness, it said, "I'm with you now."
The warble of a birdling, as it flashed its wing of blue,
Said plain as words could tell me, "I sing
this song for you."

A wild flower flashed its azure bells, and breathed its life away;
Its language talked in perfumes, as it glowed above the clay.
A moonbeam laid its thin white cheek on the pillow of my own,
And told me with its dim white lips "You are not left alone;
I've traveled many a league to-night to shine upon your brow:
Have done with all thy moanings, for I am
with you now."

Afar off in the distance a great light seemed to break,
And it showed a fearful error and a long delayed mistake;
Its light was full of language, for it spoke in glow and tone,
And I saw by its effulgence that I NEVER was alone.

Then my spirit ceased its sobbing, and opened every door,
And I caught a million voices I had never heard before.
And when earthly friends forsake me and all I love are gone,
I shall know that he is with me—that I am not left alone.

And he speaks in gentle language through birds and light and flowers;
He talks in simple sweetness through all the passing hours.
O my sister! O my brother! you have no cause to moan,
For our father ne'er forsakes us—we are NEVER left alone!

[For the New Orleans Advocate.]

MR. EDITOR:

Deity has wisely implanted in the human breast a desire to be respected. This disposition may justly be esteemed as a characteristic of his wonderful goodness, and ought to excite in our hearts the most sensible gratitude. Such a desire may be well ranked among our strongest motives to act well our part. Notwithstanding the depravity of human nature we, generally speaking, know how to appreciate an action; but little reflection is necessary to ascertain its real character—whether it is produced by a laudable or unworthy cause—whether it is entitled to our praise or dispraise.

So strong is our inclination to gain the esteem of the world that if we chance to deviate from the right way we offer many apologies and excuses for the departure. Indeed the dread of censure drives us many times to wicked resorts; we plead human frailty, inexperience, or the examples of others if we can not deny the fact. We all have some idea of the advantages of a good name. Daily observation attests the anxiety many men have to attain such a name who are strangers to the practice of virtue; but the efforts of such must prove abortive.

The reputation of a good man can not be too highly valued. It is not the production of a day nor a year, and it is not to be acquired by barely abstaining from the perpetration of offenses. It grows out of a steady, undeviating discharge of those positive duties which are incident to us as rational beings and as members of a community.

A good name has many great advantages; it possesses charms with which every description of citizens must be enamored. To the owner it is real wealth, such as the mines of Peru never produced. It affords him the means of acquiring a competency, and what is better, it yields to his heart an indescribable satisfaction which is not to be obtained by gold or silver. A poet of great fame has justly said,

"A wit's a feather, and a chief's a rod,
An honest man's the noblest work of God."

And Shakspeare writes that—

"Good name in man and woman
Is the immediate jewel of their souls.
Who steals my purse steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Tis mine, 'twas his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he who filches from me my good name
Robs me of that, which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed."

What then are we to think of him whose poisonous breath tarnishes respectability?

High as a good name ought to be appreciated, how numerous are those who labor assiduously to blast it—to scandalize merit? What neighborhood is exempt from slanderers? Rather, where is the man of HONESTY whose character has not been assailed by defamation? The good man rises like the mighty oak on the mountains, and alas! his elevation exposes him the more to the blasts of detraction. Sometimes he survives the mighty attack, but more generally falls; and his only consolation is a consciousness of having merited different treatment.

He who speaks evil of his neighbor may very aptly be compared to the midnight assassin, who makes his approaches when least expected, unsheathes his sharpened steel, and buries it in the bosom of the innocent unsuspecting citizen—or to the robber, who leaps disguised from his unnoticed covert, and plunders the unwary travelers. He indeed is worse—he robs of that which can not ameliorate his own condition, and which to the possessor is life itself. Who, I ask, could wish to survive his injured, ruined reputation? Who that has sensibility could endure to live slighted and despised? To be treated with unmerited indignity is among the greatest misfortunes that can befall a human being. An attack upon character must proceed from the worst of motives—envy. This passion prompts men who are conscious of their own insignificance, and unwilling to behold the prosperity of others, to deal in defamation. Rankling in the heart, it finds relief in the pollution of a good name, in the contamination of a whole neighborhood. The envious man sickens at hearing his neighbor extolled for his industry, his honesty, and other virtues. He listens with painful anxiety, he speaks, he demurs; says he has one objection to him, which prudence and his friendship induce him to conceal; that he dislikes telling things which might turn to the prejudice of anybody, particularly his neighbor; that everybody will hear it before long. Thus he discourses in this ambiguous manner; hints, tells one half, and leaves the rest to be conjectured He is solicitous to asperse the reputation of his neighbor, and at the same time impress bystanders with the belief that he abhors slandering. At other times he is more bold and daring. He will with wonderful industry circulate some infamous report and give some other person whose name he is under the strongest promises to conceal as the author. He is very cautious—is unwilling to mention persons' faults—dislikes to say much, or at least, he is careful to conceal names, and will use such descriptions as no one can doubt.

It would be a happy circumstance were the fair sex free from this monstrous vice—a happy consideration indeed, if they would by their example endeavor to suppress it in the other sex. Such an accomplishment would raise them many grades higher, and entitle them to the veneration of all true lovers of true felicity.

Miss Frizzle appears to be quite dissatisfied with her present reputation among the youths of her acquaintance. Though she is not a beauty her person is far from being despicable. She dresses fine, appears very complaisant, and smiles like an angel, but alas! her suitors are few; she thinks she is neglected. Indeed, report says she is frequently in the last stages of despair. Upon inquiring into the reasons why Miss Frizzle is so shamefully forgotten I learned that she takes such unwarrantable liberties with characters that she is really dangerous. So sure as she attends a sermon or any other assemblage, so sure is she to make the most sarcastic and wanton remarks on her return. She tells fifty tales prejudicial to the young ladies in the vicinity, which in every recital she magnifies. Such a one is unladylike in her dress, and would make a poor housekeeper. Another is deeply in love with a young man of no merit. Another is always trolloping about hunting a beau; another drinks liquor; another shouldn't be her sister-in-law; and another is a stranger to chastity, etc., and she abuses their parents without bounds for not teaching their daughters better. And so many have had their feelings wounded in this way by Miss Frizzle that she is very unpopular. I might mention she does not confine her severities to her own sex. Young gentlemen who do not bow and pay their respects to her, or who show attention to other young ladies, find no mercy at her hands. She spares no pains to detract from their merits, hoping it will mortify their favorites. Such conduct, I may venture to say, bolts the temple of hymen against her.

It is a fact too notorious to be doubted that many undertake the investigation of character who are by no means capable of doing justice to such a task.

The person who undergoes the ordeal need not calculate on having justice done him. He receives no credit for his virtues, while his foibles are magnified into crimes and misdemeanors.

The envy of the connoisseur affects his vision, and will not allow any other to possess qualities superior to his own. He exults in the discovery of a blemish as if it were to draw upon him the plaudits of an interested community.

Since defamation is attended with such ruinous consequences—since the peace and felicity of an individual, indeed of a whole family connexion, may be destroyed by it—how many and strong are the arguments in favor of checking such a VICE. A lady of exalted merit may sustain the most irreparable loss from a single wink or nod. Indeed, sometimes a silence may be so ingeniously and significantly calculated as to injure if not demolish the fairest reputation. And when a female suffers an attack of this kind, though innocent, what must be her sensations! An attempt to retrieve the loss may but involve her in greater difficulties. Some miscreant may appear and attest to the truth of the report and her vindications be turned into mock and ridicule. Her nerves may be too delicate, her fortitude insufficient to prevent her descending to the grave.

Rather stab some vital part
Than wound dear reputation.

Respectfully,
FREDERICK K. HYDE.
New Orleans, May 5, 1868.

Intelligence from Our Mission Rooms.

Missionary Recruits.

The question of a supply of missionaries, especially for the foreign work, is attracting increased attention. It seems to have taken definite form from the publication of several articles from some of our brethren in India; and an impression is made that there are young men enough willing and ready to go if they were properly called for. One writer says, "Now I know that the fault is not with the Christian young men of our church; the fault is with our system." Perhaps this brother is a little too sure. We could gladly wish that he was not in error; but is he aware that there is a provision in our Discipline by which the Bishop officiating is required to ask the members of the class severally, when about to be received into full connection "whether they are willing to devote themselves to the missionary work, and a list of the names of all those who are willing to do so shall be taken and reported to the Corresponding Secretary of the Missionary Society, and all such shall be considered as ready and willing to be employed as missionaries, whenever called for by either of the Bishops." Discipline, Part II, chap ii, page 81.

For several years the Bishops put this question to the young men about to be received, after two years on trial, into full connection, and so far as the Corresponding Secretary knows not a name of one willing candidate has been returned to his office. The Bishops have nearly ceased to put the question to the young men as provided above.

Under this condition of things the Bishops and Secretaries have turned their thoughts toward young brethren of good education, particularly biblical and theological, and who have passed into the regular work of the ministry and served for a year or two. This sound education and this personal experience in the ministry are deemed very important qualifications for the foreign missionary work. But we do not always find in the regular work of the ministry the young men of the education so much desired who are ready to go, and we then turn to our biblical and theological schools for the men we want. We want young men of good education, and of one or two years' experience in the ministry. It is desirable that these two conditions should be found in every young missionary; but we have not always been able to find them combined in the candidate for foreign missionary work. Sometimes we find a well-educated young brother, but without ministerial experience; sometimes we find one whose ministerial experience is satisfactory, but his education is deficient. We must then choose between them. This we will have to do until we can find young men enough who are filled with the missionary spirit and are well educated, and have had some experience in the regular work.

The regulations and the practice of supplying men for the foreign work are substantially as follows:

1. The mission asks for the men it judges it needs the following year.

2. This request, with the expenditure that will follow, is submitted to the General Missionary Committee at its session in November. If it is not granted there the matter ends. But it is always granted if the condition of the treasury will allow of it, or as far as its condition will allow. If the mission asks for four men the committee may not be able to give them more than two.

3. When the General Committee has given authority and made the appropriations for so many men to be sent, the Bishops having charge severally look for the men. Sometimes they know men whom they incline to judge favorably of, and they direct the secretaries to make suitable inquiries in writing of wise and experienced brethren who have had good opportunities of knowing them well. The result of these inquiries are laid before the Bishop in writing, and he then decides the case. If favorably, the young missionary is placed under the direction of the secretaries, to be sent forward to his field of labor.

From what precedes it will appear that the supply of suitable young men for our foreign missionary work is not so abundant as some who have written have supposed. But the supply is increasing. This impression that the supply was abundant and the money at command having reached our mission in India, and our brethren there having supposed or assumed that the home authorities were not so much concerned as they ought to be about the greatness and exigencies of their glorious work, very naturally and rightly expressed their views and feelings in regard to their want of men to enable them to hold their work.

In regard to this subject we were led to append the following remarks to the annual report of the India Mission, which is now being distributed:

Shortly after the mission was established, under the superintendency of Dr. Butler, the brethren took formal possession of the territory as the part of India for the evangelization of which our Church ought to become responsible. The district thus assumed contained at least twelve millions of people and was without a single mission station. The brethren surveyed their field, and commenced their work. They found that, in their judgment, they could with men raised upon the field occupy the principal cities as missionary centres for the outlying villages around, if the Church would give them twenty-five missionaries from home to occupy the centres and supervise the large circuits, which would be formed around the central cities severally. They reported to the missionary authorities at home a description of their mission field, and of their proposed plan of operation; and after careful examination of their field and plan the home authorities gave both their hearty sanction. But in doing this they did not come under any formal obligation, or contract to keep a force of twenty-five missionaries from home in the field, or even to send so many. They declared their approbation of the field and of the plan; and also declared their purpose to occupy the one, and work up to the other, to the best of their ability.

Under these conditions of the mission the other Protestant Missionary societies signified their readiness to leave the large and populous territory we had selected to us alone, holding us to a moral responsibility in their judgment for the evangelization of the same. Our own brethren in the mission naturally regarded the matter in the same light, and we incline to think that our own home missionary authorities, and indeed the church in general have regarded it in the same light also, and would not willingly allow a failure in carrying out the plan if they were fully aware that there was danger. A careful perusal of the preceding reports will satisfy the reader that there is danger. There have at no one time been twenty American missionaries in service in India, including Brother Knowles and Brother Cawdell, who entered our service from Europe. There have been more than twenty-five sent out during the last ten years, but death has removed one, (Brother Downey), and ill-health others, so that our India Mission Conference is now scarcely as strong as it was two years ago. And when we remember that God has raised up, and is raising up, native helpers who are now to some extent evangelists to their countrymen, and becoming more so every year, but who very much need the experienced supervision of American missionaries, we will find good reasons on the part of our brethren for calling loudly for additional help in their preceding reports.

We feel distressed when we see clearly that our brethren are apprehensive that they cannot hold all their work strongly in hand without reinforcements; and that they are anticipating that the other missionary societies will see their inability to occupy strongly, and hence will enter our territory, because we do not occupy. It is to be carefully noted that our brethren do not express discouragement, except in their inability to fully occupy their assigned field for want of men. In all other respects they say their work is prosperous. The government still gives liberal aid to our schools; the European population still declare their confidence and interest by annually increasing contributions. These contributions will approximate $14.475 in the year 1867.

A somewhat new feature, but one of great importance and promise, is developing itself. We refer to "zenana schools," or schools among the ladies and daughters in the harems or private homes of the better class of the people. These schools receive instruction from ladies only, and hence there has arisen a new requisition for well prepared young ladies to go out to serve in our missions in India. These zenana schools are extending to the lower classes of young females. The reader will see that one hundred girls attend them in the city of Lucknow. The Church will take note of this new department of mission work in India, and the additional demand for lady teachers and for money for this new missionary field service. The ladies in our mission are actively engaged in this service, and the Board gives it pecuniary support as a part of our proper work.

From the preceding reports, as well as from the general tenor of the correspondence from India for the last year or two, it is apparent that the stations actively occupied are yielding precious fruit, the quantity and value of which are increasing, and was greater in 1867 than in any former year. [See statistical tables.] And nothing but additional men and money are wanted to make it one of the most fruitful mission fields to be found among Protestant missions. The brethren have been calling loudly for several years for more men; and from their standpoint it seems strange that they are not sent, according to their wishes and necessities. One of them says, "We have reason to know that the Church, with the men and means, are ready to supply both if she only knew the wants of our work." Another one says, "Good men from home write us of their willingness and anxiety to join us, but cannot get themselves appointed. We at this distance cannot understand this." If the first brother had been at the meeting of the General Missionary Committee, and there learn that a million dollars were needed to carry on our missions in the South, and in the Annual Conferences at home not in the South, and in our foreign work, with a heavy debt upon us, and that we could not count upon more than eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars, he would then understand why we can not give India more money and more men immediately; and if the second brother was aware what varied and important qualities and qualifications were required, and rightly, too, by the general tenor of our correspondence with India, he would not be surprised that the administration at home finds it difficult to get the suitable men, and might well have some doubts in regard to those who write to India that they can not get themselves appointed. When we have authority from the General Missionary Committee to send men, and a good and true man feels his heart and spirit stirred within him to go to the foreign work, and so signifies to his Presiding Elder, or directly to the Bishop, or to the Corresponding Secretaries, and his abilities and qualifications are satisfactory, there is no difficulty in such a one being appointed except the want of money.

Methodist Singing.

BY BISHOP KINGSLEY.

The dispensation of instrumental music, for better or for worse, has fairly commenced in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Some hail it as the beginning of a musical millenium, others bewail it as the precursor of decline and spiritual apostacy. Both are wrong. It will neither do all the good nor all the harm that has been predicted. If instrumental music were to banish congregational singing, it would certainly be a vast calamity. But there is no necessity whatever for this. Probably the best congregational singing in the United States is found in connection with the organ. When the singers lean on the organ and fail to utter distinctly the words sung so that they may be heard and understood by the congregation, the instrument does more hurt than good. But after all this is not the fault of the instrument. Some of the most distinct and best enunciated singing in the United States is in connection with the organ. An instrument is often a great advantage when the singing is weak, on account of the few that can join advantageously in the service. It then becomes a kind of leader and educator of the congregation. The question is not whether the Church would be just as well off, or better, without instrumental music, if the people only thought so. The matter of fact is, the people do not think so, and will not think so, at least until they have an opportunity of trying what virtue there is in instruments. And it is better, as it seems to me, to allow the experiment to be fairly made, and submit to it in good nature, than to live in a constant storm. If our hearts are right God will prosper us with or without instrumental music; and it is worse than idle for any man to pretend that he can not enjoy religion in a house of worship which holds an organ or a melodeon. In such cases the devil is not in the instrument, but he has managed to get into the heart of the party complaining. He is not a very valiant soldier who can be vanquished by a little wind from an organ. The heart that for itself reposes confidence in Jesus Christ can enjoy the love of God even if the singing is not exactly to the taste.

When a man is tempted to leave the church because an instrument has been introduced into it he may set it down for certain that Satan is at work with him. Does any man in his senses believe that God has left the church? Are not the accomplished results of the gospel plain proof that God is still with us? May we not still know the tree by its fruit? If then God has not forsaken the Methodist Episcopal Church can not a poor, weak, sinful man afford to stay when God can afford to stay? Suppose the singing is not in our judgment the best that we can desire, is that any reason why we should quit serving the Lord? That will only ruin our own souls without at all helping the church music. It is melancholy, indeed, to see for what reasons some people will deliberately determine to sever their connection with the Church of God. Such a movement usually ends in perdition.

There is one practice, however, generally associated with instrumental music which certainly ought to be discontinued. It has no redeeming feature, but is only evil and that continually. I allude to the habit almost universal in this country of playing an interlude between each two stanzas of the hymn. These interludes are positive nuisances in every light in which they can be viewed. In wealthy churches where the organist is a fine performer the thing is done to show off. And weaker and poorer churches keep up the practice to be in the fashion. Many of our very best hymns form a continuous and connected discourse from beginning to end. Many of them are most earnest prayers, others earnest exhortations. Others embody sound Christian experience, and others set forth in a glowing light the plan of salvation, and so on. The sense is often incomplete at the end of a verse, and the hearts of all true worshipers are prepared by what has gone before for what is to come. Just then the connection is spoiled, the continuity of thought and feeling broken up by a diddling interlude! Every devout worshiper feels it to be an incongruity and an infliction, and is glad when it is over, so that the worship of God can proceed. How beyond all comparison better it is to sing right through. With persons to whom these hymns are familiar one verse calls up the next, but by the time the interlude is finished we have generally forgotten the connection. Why should the tune any more than the words be banished from the mind and heart at the end of every verse? Why should the warm glow of devotional feeling be chilled as by a cold bath every two or three minutes?

But it is said the singers need time to take breath. This is but a flimsy reason for perpetuating a fashionable folly. How comes it to pass that people have become so short-winded all of a sudden? Troops of musicians go through the country singing pieces three times as long as the average of our hymns, and so manage as not to get out of breath. There is more reason why the preacher should stop every few minutes to get his breath, and yet a public speaker will address an audience for hours together without resorting to any interlude. It is to be hoped that the time will never come when the ministry will become so short-winded as to need to stop at the end of every three or four sentences and drum on a board with their knuckles, or resort to any other equally silly subterfuge in order to take breath! The thing looks ridiculous enough now because it is not in the fashion.

The great masters of music, both in America and Europe, despise these interludes. They are as unscientific as they are inconvenient, and hurtful to the spirit of genuine worship; and the most attractive and most efficient church music dispenses with them entirely.

I wish that I could persuade every congregation that has adopted this habit to so much as try the experiment of dispensing with it for three months. I feel well assured that all Methodists who will do so will find the devotional tone of their singing so much improved that they will never revive the interludes again. Like many other bad fashions, when this absurd practice has been fairly abandoned we shall only wonder how we could have endured it so long.

And let congregations just starting off with an instrument remember that it is easier to avoid than to reform an evil habit. No professional pride on the part of the performer should be allowed to chill the warm glow of intelligent and heartfelt devotion.—Pittsburg Advocate.

Caste in New England.

At the New England Conference recently held in Boston there was read and adopted a report from a committee on our Southern missionary work strongly condemning caste, asking the General Conference to take the embargo from Bishop Roberts, and urging the Bishops to discountenance by their Episcopal acts the caste spirit. Bishop Ames, after the adoption of the report, said that he admired the New England brethren. They spoke out fearlessly their convictions. He had seen the forerunner of this report in editorial papers in Zion's Herald, and supposing it might be the pleasure of the New England Conference to move in such a direction he had while in the South consulted several of our colored preachers to ascertain their mind relative to the work in the North. He was now prepared to say to the Conference that he would gratify their best wishes in the case. He was ready to transfer eight or ten colored preachers to their Conference, and station them in their congregations. The announcement was received with applause. But there it ended. None asked that such transfers be made.

The next morning the bishop said to the Conference that he feared they had received his promise of the day before only as a little pleasantry. But he wished them to know that he was in earnest. Their resolutions invited such transfers—invited the Bishops to break down the evil of caste—and the Bishops were in the habit of conforming, as far as practicable, to Conference resolutions. When at this stage it became necessary that something must be done, our quondam friend, the editor of Zion's Herald, offered a resolution expressing their willingness to receive such transfers, when it was thought to be good for the work. What a lapse from the anti-caste resolution of the day before! But even this diluted affair could not pass. A spirited debate sprung up and arrested it. At last the mover and others modified it so as to say they would receive colored preachers when recommended by the Quarterly Conferences of their charges, or when they were petitioned for by the people. The Bishop now said that he was much obliged to them for their action. It indorsed what the Bishops all along been doing, and what he understood their former action to disapprove.

Will not the reader think it strange that the editor of Zion's Herald, who deals such trenchant blows against caste everywhere outside of Boston and New England, absolutely becomes the apologist of this caste action? The whole thing is a milk and water affair, and it takes shape and body from his pen. And he really attaches virtue to the back down condition—"when invited or recommended by our quarterly Conferences." Et tu Brute. Alas, that vaunted self-excellency should have such a humiliating downfall! Zion's Herald owes it to common sense to remain silent on caste hereafter. At least, let it go through a good long probation before it again lifts its voice on a subject on which its words and actions hitherto have been as various and uncertain as the changing winds.—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

Dancing, Gaming, Etc.

We clip the following from an English work:

"I understand you, Mr. Oldpath, said I: 'Thus, if I walk out in the fields to meditate, like Isaac, or if I walk in the city for my health, or for charity, or for duty in any form, I can ask the Lord to bless my steps. But if I sit down to a game of cards, or among the ungodly in the ballroom or the theatre, I cannot ask god to bless the act.' 'A child of God would quake and tremble to insult God by asking a blessing on such occasions,' remarked Abraham. 'But would any considerate person like to have his soul commanded away out of his body, while that poor carcass was dropped to his shame and confusion at the card table, at the theatre, or in the ballroom? Might not the Almighty put the question to the astonished spirit thus: Where didst thou leave thy other self? Art thou then not afraid to stand before me in all the pollution of thy employment of but the last five moments since? And what gamester shall say that he shall live to deal out his pack? What trifler, that he shall survive his next allemande?

"What voluptuary, that he shall watch the next immodest gesture of the frame of woman, distorted in the public exhibition of the ballet on the stage, where all the noble faculties of man, given him in such wise order and wonderful degree, are prostituted to the basest purposes, even to the heaping of every insult upon the Creator and His great name, and the setting forth of the acknowledged energy of that Creator, the Devil, as a plaything, a joke, an amusement? Alas! Alas! But what does the Lord ask concerning this Leviathan, when he says of him: Wilt thou play with him as with a bird, or wilt thou bind him for thy maidens? Shall thy companions make a banquet of him, or shall they part him among the merchants?

"For gain, for money, the merchants of the theatres do indeed play with this Leviathan as with a bird and for amusement; and to gratify the basest passions of man to be so amused. But death is approaching; hell is lighting up; the enemy is sharpening his eyes upon his prey, and only waits the command of God to fly on that prey and bear it from its poor framework, the body; and then it will be seen whether Satan is an object to be laughed at, to jest with, and to produce in effigy or not."

It is customary at concerts in New York now when a singer is to be complimented to make up a dozen or so ordinary bouquets into a basket about the size of an Orange county cheese, and hand it over the orchestra to the artiste, whose absurd appearance as he or she carries it off fully compensates for the outlay. One of the papers suggests as a needed convenience the erection of a derrick, by which one of these consolidated conservatories might be safely swung across the orchestral gulf and behind the scenes. The ladies subject to these floral afflictions are now compelled to make muscular trainings a part of their daily vocations.

Marais Street Church.—At this church the pastor, Brother Scott Chinn, recently received eighteen or twenty persons on probation. Brother Chinn reports his church in good spiritual condition.

Rev. Mr. Brown, of Foundry church, Washington, D. He will officiate there regularly during the absence of Dr. Newman. We hope that he may have a large concourse of hearers.

Rev. Dr. Newman, who left this city on the twenty-seventh ultimo, to attend the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church arrived safely at Chicago. From a synopsis of his sermon which we noticed in one of the daily papers of that city, we learn that he preached by invitation in the First Presbyterian church, on Wabash avenue.

The Market Ordinance Defeated.—The Board of Aldermen Tuesday night refused to pass the proposed ordinance for the sale of the markets by a decisive vote. The indications now point to the measures of relief so often urged by the Republican—funding the floating debt under authority of a legislative enactment, and the prompt collection of taxes long past due. Any measure short of this will necessarily be defective, besides involving heavy sacrifices, which must be paid at last by the people. There is little or no prospect of relief until the Legislature meets.

President Graham argued that the passage of the ordinance would not appreciate the city currency, and maintained that relief for the city finances can only be had through the instrumentality of an act of the next Legislature authorizing the funding of this floating debt. He alluded to the greater degree of prosperity the city would enjoy in consequence of the settlement of political questions in this State, and insisted that to sell the markets from year to year about five million dollars in greenbacks and gold would be realized by the city in ten years instead of two million dollars in city currency for which it is now proposed to sell the markets.

Editorial Correspondence.

Chicago, May 2, 1868.

After a railroad ride of fifty-three hours, we reached Chicago in safety. En route we enjoyed the company of General Hartsuff and lady and Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Diossy, whose fund of fact and fancy relieved the tedium of the journey. On reaching Chicago we received a hearty welcome at the elegant residence and happy home of Mr. J. V. Farwell, whose guests we are. The next day we met several friends, and among those we prized most highly is Stephen Hoyt, Esq., formerly Mayor of New Orleans. He is the same pure and noble man, earnest in every good work. He is delighted over the election of Governor Warmoth.

The next morning at nine o'clock we attended the opening exercises of the General Conference. Excepting Bishop Baker, all our bishops were present, and appeared in excellent health. The Daily Advocate of May 2 contains the following account of the first day's proceedings:

The Fifteenth Delegated General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church assembled in the First Methodist Episcopal church, corner of Clark and Washington streets, in the city of Chicago, at nine o'clock on Friday morning, May 1, 1868.

At precisely the hour of nine the Conference was called to order by Bishop Morris, the venerable senior among his peers of the Episcopal Board. Bishop Scott read the sixty-first chapter of the prophecy of Isaiah. Bishop Simpson read the 293d hymn, commencing:

"The Savior, when to heaven he rose,
In splendid triumph o'er his foes" and the Conference and audience, led by Philip Phillips, joined in singing. The singing was such as is heard only in a Methodist Conference, and as the song of praise poured forth its volume of harmonious sound we could not but think that the spirit of "old-fashioned Methodism" still survives.

At the close of the singing, the venerable and widely known Peter Cartwright, one of the heroic pioneers of Methodism in the Great West, led the Conference in prayer. He prayed—

Almighty and most merciful God, with profound reverence we appear at the feet of Mercy; and thank God that we now are permitted to call thee our Heavenly Father; that we are created reasonable beings, capable of loving and serving God, and that in early life many of us had religious influences thrown around us, and means given us whereby we were enabled to seek and obtain salvation through Jesus Christ; and we remember with deepest gratitude the kind providences of God that have been over us through life, and though our life has been one of toil and effort, yet we thank God that the agencies we have employed in the name of God, for the salvation of sinners, have been successful through the mercy of our Redeemer. Look now in mercy upon us, in the opening of this General Conference, and grant us thy blessing, and baptize us with thy Spirit, and with fire and power, and grant that all our doings may redound to the glory of God. Give us wisdom and understanding to keep us back from presumption, and from all that will not be for the glory of God and the good of the Church.

Bless our families that we have left at home. Bless our country, and grant to our rulers wisdom and grace. Bless the Church and the ministry, and help and bless us in our labors till thronging thousands shall press to Zion; and when our little work shall be done, bring us to our eternal reward in heaven, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

Bishop Ames read the thirteenth chapter of I. Corinthians, after which Bishop Clark read the 297th hymn, commencing:

"I love thy Kingdom, Lord,
The house of thine abode," which the Conference joined in singing, when George Peck led in prayer. He said:

"O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth. Thou art the Father of angels and men, and to thee would we look this morning for guidance, and for thy blessing as we need, as we are assembled together upon this occasion, for the purpose of attending to important and responsible duties, that we may honor thee, enjoy thy Fatherly favor, and our cordial Christian fellowship while we commune together and engage in the important deliberations and duties of this occasion.

"We thank thee, O God, for the enlargement of our borders and the success of our work; we thank thee for the multitudes that have been converted to God, and brought into the Church through the instrumentality of thy ministers and people. We thank thee for the unity of the Church, for her harmony and zeal, and for her spiritual power. We thank thee that through thy providence thou hast brought so many of us together in this place, in peace and prosperity, and with high hopes and prospects with regard to the purposes and work for which we are here.

"We thank thee, O God, for the gospel of thy Son, and for the demonstrations of its power which we have witnessed, and especially for the triumphs of grace in these ends of the earth. We thank thee for the examples set us by our fathers, for the purity of doctrine which has been preserved, and for the exercise of godly discipline in the conferences.

"We pray thee now, oh Lord, to come into our midst; preside over this body; give strength and wisdom to the bishops in the discharge of their duties in presiding over this body and directing its labors. Pour thy blessing upon every member of this conference. May we all duly feel our responsibilities to God, to the Church, to each other, and to the world. May thy fear rest upon us; may thy light shine upon us and through us; may our doings all be guided by thy Spirit; may our understandings be preserved from error, and may our conclusions all be such as shall glorify thee and serve the best interests of the Church.

"Pour thy Holy Sprit upon us, and may we have his enlightening influences and power. Without this we are dark and powerless. Baptize us, then, from on high, and pour upon us now the Holy Ghost and fire sent down from heaven. Let thy blessing rest upon the churches here represented; upon the families of thy servants; upon their flocks left at home, and upon all the interests which they represent.

"Grant that this may be one of the most favored seasons ever enjoyed by us from the beginning of our history. May this be a time of revival in this city. May the ministrations of thy servants be attended with power from on high, and may the Church be built up, sinners converted, and thy name be glorified.

"Grant, oh Lord, to save us from undue anxieties, and from excitement and error. Lead us all one way, fill our hearts with love for the Church and for each other, and may thy name be glorified by our coming together.

"Bless our country; grant wisdom to all in authority. Give wisdom to Congress and bless the President and all clothed with executive authority, and grant us prosperity and blessing as a people. Grant thy blessing upon all nations, and hasten the day when the earth shall be full of thy glory."

Mr. Peck closed by repeating the Lord's prayer, all the Conference joining.

ORGANIZATION.

At the conclusion of the prayer Bishop Morris said the introductory religious services are now concluded, and he would now inquire of the delegates what was their desire as to the manner of opening the business.

Daniel Curry suggested that W. L. Harris, the secretary of the last General Conference, call the roll of the last session. Brother Harris was called by the Bishop and came forward.

Brother Harris desired the assistance of George W. Woodruff, the assistant secretary of last General Conference, to assist him in keeping the tally of the roll, and there being no objection he did so.

W. L. Harris said: "Mr. President, I hold in my hand the official papers of all the conferences except the California Conference."

Daniel Curry suggested that where there was no objection as to the names called from the list held by the Secretary it be considered as the correct one.

The certificate of election of the California Conference was handed in.

W. L. Harris said that all the certificates were signed by the Secretaries of the Conferences.

The roll was called.

During the call Chester F. Burdick, reserve delegate from Troy Conference, was substituted in the place of Samuel Meredith, absent, of same conference.

Joseph B. Dobbins, reserve delegate from New Jersey Conference, was substituted in place of Isaac Winner, absent, from same conference.

William B. Edwards, reserve delegate from Baltimore Conference, was substituted in place of N. J. B. Morgan, absent, from same conference.

Benjamin St. James Fry, reserve delegate of Missouri and Arkansas Conference, was substituted in place of William H. Gillam, absent, from same conference.

Joseph E. King, reserve delegate of Troy Conference, was substituted in place of Erastus Wentworth, absent, from same conference.

Bishop Morris said this was the twelfth session of the General Conference, in regular and consecutive order, at which he had been present, four of them as a delegate and eight as bishop, and he had no recollection of hearing so many respond "Present" at the opening session before.

Bishop Morris then called upon Bishop Janes, who took the chair.

The Bishop desired to know the pleasure of the Conference as to the election of secretary.

Thomas Carlton moved that W. L. Harris be elected by acclamation.

James Cunningham hoped the Conference would not dispense with balloting at this early stage of the proceedings.

Daniel Curry said it would save a great deal of time to elect by acclamation, where there was but one candidate, and to proceed in that way was altogether according to usage.

Several nominations were then made, but subsequently withdrawn.

John Lanahan said the seeming opposition of these nominations was only because of the desire that the secretary should not be elected by acclamation. He personally was in favor of electing the former secretary.

After other nominations and withdrawals, on motion it was resolved to elect viva voce.

On motion, W. L. Harris was elected Secretary.

After discussion it was resolved to ballot for three Assistant Secretaries, and that the three persons having the highest number of votes should be the three Assistant Secretaries.

ADMISSION OF SOUTHERN DELEGATES.

As I had anticipated, so it turned out, there was much discussion on the motion to admit at once the delegates from the South. Dr. Foster, of New York, presented my credentials, and this was the signal for a long and lively debate. Dr. Curry and others will not admit that the Conferences of the South are Conferences in the true letter of the law, and hence his opposition to our admission. But Dr. Ried assumed the position that the General Conference had the power to legalize what had been done. Dr. Foster moved a reference of the whole subject to a committee of SEVEN. Dr. Ried offered the following substitute:

Whereas, There exist at the present time, in the Southern part of our country, several Annual Conferences, created by authority of the last General Conference, and known, or supposed to be known, as Mission Conferences, and

Whereas, These Conferences have had great and unanticipated success, now numbering in the aggregate over 450 preachers and 175,000 members, and

Whereas, It is the judgment of this General Conference that so considerable a portion of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States of America should not be unrepresented in this body, and

Whereas, We shall greatly need the aid and counsel of brethren from that portion of the work in forming plans for greater and more extended usefulness in that portion of the Master's vineyard where the promise is so glorious, and

Whereas, These annual Conferences have sent to the seat of this session chosen brethren, under the title of "Representatives"—in whose choice the modes and ratio of delegates to this body were observed; who, although conceding that they have no right, by virtue of their mere election, to claim a seat in this body, were yet provisionally elected in the manifest hope that their representative Conferences would be fully recognized, and they admitted as delegates; therefore

Resolved, 1st. That this General Conference hereby recognizes as annual conferences, with full powers, the following conferences, viz: Alabama, Delaware, Georgia, Holston, Mississippi, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, North Carolina, and Washington.

Resolved, 2d. That we hereby express our gratitude to the Great Head of the church, and our abounding joy that, in the organization of these conferences, our lost territory is restored, and the Methodist Episcopal Church becomes again national, in fact and scope, as it always has been in name and person.

Resolved, 3. That qualified representatives of these conferences, satisfactorily accredited, are hereby admitted to seats in this body as delegates.

JOHN M. REID.
E. O. HAVEN.

William Young, of the Cincinnati conferences, said:

Mr. President—I do not suppose any member on this floor will deny these brethren from the South seats here, if they are constitutionally entitled to them, and I hope that the motion of the brother across the way will prevail, and not the substitute.

Jesse T. Peck said:

Mr. Chairman—If the General Conference would by unanimous consent invite these men without precise order, it will make the pending discussion on this question as short as possible. These representatives are entitled to take part in this discussion.

R. S. Foster said he did not open the discussion at this hour. He thought we should all come to a harmonious resolution. He hoped it would be referred to a committee who would bring it before the Conference, and they would be prepared to discuss it.

Daniel Curry said: The Conference will consider this: It was not a question of the qualification of these men, but a question of the delegates elect. It is said that two of those conferences named have elected delegates not constitutionally eligible. The whole of it can be got along with by a committee—where we can get every case perfected and ascertain every man who has been elected. He was not for shutting them out. They needed their presence and counsel—their instruction as to facts, and their arguments brought out of their great experience. He was not sure that they would be ready to report to-morrow, for there is a great deal to do.

Mr. Porter, of Newark, said Dr. Curry had made in substance the remarks he thought of making, and he would not repeat them. The question was one of great importance, and should be referred to a judicious committee. He hoped they should have a committee, and the committee should have time to report; and as soon as they are ready to report the General Conference would give it attention.

John M. Reid said he was opposed to a reference to a committee for the reason that if this matter went before a committee it would remain there for ten days. The facts were before them.

Every man had to judge for himself. He thought they might as well judge now as any time, and put these brethren out of anxiety and this question out of agitation this morning. This was the reason he had offered the substitute. Again, he had not determined in the substitute he had offered with respect to the qualifications of these brethren. He had said that these brethren, if they had come here accredited, and with the disciplinary qualifications, should be admitted. They present their qualifications, and each standing upon its own merits. It is said that this will exclude our colored brethren and admit the white brethren. He did not so understand it. If these brethren were qualified he should make no discrimination as to color. It was a single question of qualification whether the discipline authorized these men to be here. He would feel especially chagrined on this question of color if they were not to admit them, inasmuch as the difficulty would press upon the colored brethren. Suppose, for instance, that the colored brethren have admission here: Shall we put out our white brethren for fear of this sentiment of color? Let us be rid of this question of color.

Mr. Young said he just wanted to explain. He wished his worthy brother across the way to understand that he had not the slightest objection under the heavens of the Almighty on the ground of color. He happened to be one of the original anti-slavery men of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He early extended his sympathies toward his colored brethren, and he had been a friend to a colored brother when it cost something to be a friend to him, and this morning, if he is ready and permitted, he (Young) would take one of them into his seat and would sit by his side. He thought that his brother's remarks were calculated to mislead the minds of the brothers in regard to the constitutionality of this question.

Mr. Crary wished to call the attention of the Conference to the authority by which these Conferences in the South have been organized.

Mr. Gilbert Haven wished to say one word in respect to Dr. Curry's question. He thought it would mislead the minds of the Conference, not through inattention, but from want of examination of the point. He thought it would be found that these brethren of the Delaware and Washington Conferences have come within the scope of the Discipline; and more than that, that the authorization of the laws of the General Conference have put these brethren fully within the pale of the membership of this Conference. It does not read four full calendar years at all, but four full conference years from their reception on trial. They were admitted only at the Conference. He thought the brethren were ready to settle the question to-day on the merits of the Discipline of the Church and admit all these delegates. He hoped they would not send it to a committee, for it would defer the matter.

Mr. Lanahan thought this was not and should not be considered a personal question, but should be decided outside of all personal considerations. If he believed these brethren were properly elected and could be admitted here in accordance with the action of the last General Conference, he would lift both hands in favor of it. But there are principles of law underlying these questions, principles of importance, and which will affect the law of the Church in the future as well as in the present. Mr. Lanahan read from the journal of the last General Conference the action upon the subject, and said the action of the bishops, whatever it may be, has little to do with determining these questions, for they may act outside the law, and it was his opinion that in this case they had so acted. He referred further to the action of the last General Conference, which, in his opinion, settles these questions, and asked, has this General Conference authority to set aside the action of the last? If it may in one case, it may in another. He thought we should proceed carefully in these matters. The Church was not made in a day, and in all our action we should look to the future as well as the present. Precedents are being established, and precedents are often appealed to, and often carry the force of law.

I. C. Pershing said it seemed evident to him, and he thought to many others, that unless we adopt the suggestions of Mr. Foster we shall spend the whole session and yet reach no conclusion. There are points here that require time for consideration, and a committee would consider these and present their report, and then we can act intelligently. If these questions are of easy solution they may be prepared to report in the morning, and if not, then they should have time properly to consider them. He presumed that there is no man on this floor who is not prepared to vote for the admission of these brethren if we can do it by the book. He hoped, therefore, a committee would be ordered.

William Reddy, of Oneida, said as the book had been referred to, he wished to read from it and proceeded to read from the Discipline the provisions for the organization of Mission Conferences; also, the boundaries of the Delaware and Washington Conferences; also, the exceptions made to the powers and prerogatives of the Liberia Mission Conference and others. From these facts he was convinced that these conferences which ask representation here to-day are clearly entitled to it, and that it should be granted without debate. They are doing the same work we are doing. They are among us in our own country; their representatives have been elected under the supervision of the bishops, and their interests are such as demand representation, and I see no reason why we should delay to grant it.

W. L. Harris explained that the boundaries of these conferences referred to were not reported from the Committee on Boundaries at the last General Conference, but they were inserted by him by order of the General Conference.

On motion the substitute pending was laid on the table, and the motion to refer to a committee of seven prevailed.

On motion the substitute just tabled was taken up and referred to the same committee.

J. M. Reid moved that the committee be instructed to report to-morrow morning.

The motion was amended by adding the words "if found practicable," and the motion as amended prevailed.

Thus the whole subject went to the committee of seven, and it is understood that three of the committee are for immediate admission; three are against admission, and that the seventh, who is Dr. Foster, is inclined to admission. Thus the matter stands. It is said the committee will report next Tuesday. In the mean time, I am serene. The General Conference, like Congress, is determined that we of the South shall be thoroughly reconstructed before we are admitted.

Tight Lacing—Why Injurious.

It is strange that there should be a necessity for writing on this subject—a habit alike ruinous to health and ruinous to beauty. But there are many ladies who, either from a want of opportunity or a want of inclination to pursue physiological works, know about as little of their physical system and the laws of life and health as the dog who bays the moon knows about the science of astronomy.

Though they may have often heard that tight lacing was injurious, yet not being told the reason why it was so, they have not placed much reliance on the information, and still persist in their course of "dressing to kill."

Never having seen an article published setting forth plainly the reason why tight lacing is injurious, we will now endeavor to show why it is so.

First, as to its being ruinous to health. In creating mankind the Creator placed the vital organs—the lungs, heart, liver, etc.—in the upper part or upper cavity of the body, and the stomach, bowels, etc., in the lower part or lower cavity. And these cavities were made just large enough for all the organs harmoniously to discharge their various functions. But he made no spare room.

It is plainly seen, therefore, that pressure from without tends to crush the organs one upon the other, thus retarding their action and preventing them from properly discharging their various functions. Something like pressing together the works of a watch; though it may not stop entirely from running, yet it will tend to make it run slow and irregular.

This pressure of the vital organs upon each other rapidly brings on derangement. The liver fails to do its office work well, bringing on evils too well known. The heart's action is disturbed and the circulation impeded. The stomach failing, as it must, brings on indigestion and dyspepsia, with a whole train of evils. The lungs, from a lack of pure air, which, of course, they can not receive unless allowed free room to expand, soon become diseased. But not only are the lungs diseased thereby but the blood, the life current, becomes corrupt. But this may seem strange to some, that compressing the lungs, so as to lessen their capacity for inhalation, should disease the blood. Nevertheless, it is so. The food of to-day is a part of the blood of to-morrow. And to change food to healthy blood, and fit it for assimilation, requires something more than the changes which it undergoes in the process of digestion. By absorption it passes into the current of venous blood—a milky looking fluid, called chyle—and on through the right side of the heart to the lungs. By the action of the oxygen of the air it is instantly changed to a bright, rich scarlet, and passing through the left side of the heart enters the arterial circulation and goes to supply the wasting tissues of the body.

Now a certain amount of oxygen is absolutely necessary to neutralize this digested food, or chyle, as it comes to the lungs. The lungs when free to expand supply just the amount needed, if the air is pure. If a less amount were sufficient doubtless the Creator would have made the lungs of less capacity. Now it is plain to see that if portions of this new blood are not properly oxygenized, the crude matter must create trouble, by being deposited in the lungs or elsewhere in the form of tubercles.

But not only the new blood should be thus supplied with oxygen, but all of it as it comes to the lungs should be thus vitalized before passing again into the arterial circulation. It thus may be seen that it is impossible to continue healthy if persisting in tight lacing. It is not possible to built up a pure, sound body out of impure blood.

Again, this practice weakens the muscles of the trunk of the body. For proof of this, how often do ladies complain that they are not able to sit up straight for any length of time without their corsets on, and complain of an "all-gone" sensation when they are removed? Some again feel the need of them during the whole twenty-four hours of the day. This is what might be expected from bandaging any muscle.

Again, those who expect to become wives and mothers, and but few young ladies anticipate a life of single blessedness, may be sure that they are sowing seed for an abundant harvest of ills to be reaped in the future.

But these are only a few of the evils of tight lacing. Their name is legion. And if the young lady who claims that she has not the time to peruse works on physiology would only spend the time each day on such books that she now spends in lacing and adjusting her corsets, we will warrant her to be possessed of information in a month's time that will work in her a speedy reformation in regard to the matter of dress.

But, secondly, we stated that tight lacing is ruinous to beauty of form as well as to health. Is it not natural to suppose that the human form as moulded by the Creator is the best and most beautiful that can be given it? Is it not absurd to imagine that a lady can render her form more elegant by encasing and compressing it so that it may be extremely small in the centre and large above? If there are any who consider such a form more beautiful, their taste is certainly perverted. More perverted even than the Flat-head Indian who binds a board upon the front part of the heads of his children, forcing the growth backward and upward. Or of the Chinese, who encase the feet of their little girls in wooden shoes, thus preventing their growth, so that when grown to womanhood they still have feet the size of children three or four years old, and consequently are unable to walk. The flat head is the highest type of physical beauty with these Indians, and the little, useless feet is perfection with the Chinese. We pity the ignorant notions of the one, and wonder at the silly whims of the other, and at the same time our ladies practice that which brings far greater deformities, ruinous alike to health and beauty.

Suppose that a sculptor should receive an order for the statue of a perfect female form, and should make the waist like that of one of our fashionable ladies? It would bring him and his work into ridicule.

Ladies will look upon the statue of the Greek Slave or Venus de Medicis with delight and say in its praise, "How elegant the proportions!" "A perfect form!" and then turn away to the mirror and look with pride and satisfaction on their own waists a third smaller in proportion than the ones they have just pronounced perfect.

Lacing moreover makes the waist round; whereas the perfect waist is oval, measuring about one-fourth more from side to side than from front to back.

But if the human form is to be increased in beauty by lacing, why not apply it to other forms than human? Why don't you lace your poodle dog? And why not put a corset on your cat? And why don't you ask pa to put corsets on the family carriage horse? You don't think of improving the forms of these animals in this manner?

But the question arises, what are the proportions that give perfection as regards the female waist? The statue of the Venus de Medicis, considered by the best judges to be the most perfect female form either of ancient or modern works, is slightly under five feet in height, with a waist of twenty-four inches, or two-fifths of its height. These proportions being considered perfect, any lady may know whether her waist is under size. Alas! how many will be found deformed in this direction! For the waist that measures less than two-fifths of the height is a deformity, whether it be natural or artificial.

Then if a lady five feet high should have a waist of twenty-four inches, a lady five feet three inches high, should have a waist measuring twenty-five and a quarter inches; and one five feet five inches should have a waist of twenty-six inches. One five feet seven inches about twenty-six and three-quarter inches, and one five feet eight inches a waist of twenty-seven and a quarter inches. We saw a lady of medium height a few days since, whose waist could not have been over eighteen inches. We looked at her in pity, and drew a full breath in sympathy for her, knowing that she could not. At the same time we judged her to be light in the "upper story." Now, what should be the height of a lady with such a waist? Precisely three feet and eleven inches, the height of a small child.

But it may be said that some persons are short and stout, and some tall and slender. In these cases where the persons are stout there must be the right proportion between the breadth of the shoulders and the waist. Compressing the waist destroys this proportion and injures the form, even though the people are stout.

It may be a source of relief to young ladies who are torturing themselves by tight lacing, in order to lessen the size of their waists, to tell them that gentlemen—the more sensible ones, at least—do not admire small waists, though from some remarks at times it might be inferred that they do. But they simply admire the lady, and knowing that it will please her to speak of her waist being small, they make use of such remarks. But should they speak their minds freely, which they do not for fear of offending, they would express a contrary opinion. They would tell them that they were deformed; that they were following a foolish and hurtful practice, etc.

And now, young ladies, remember this; that with the intelligent young man who knows anything about physiology, in the selection of a wife, the lady who is unlaced and undeformed stands ten chances to one of the lady whose practice has been to "dress to kill."

Senator Yates.

This gentleman has issued a circular to the people of Illinois, which we can not give in full, but it summize. He concedes that the criticisms of the press are "in some respects just and deserved," while in others exaggerated, and that they do not proceed from ill-will, but a "justifiable anxiety that our State shall be properly represented in the United States Senate." He claims to have been absent from the Senate only six days during the impeachment trial (an absence unjustifiably long if he might have been present); that he was present on each alternate day, and voted on every question submitted to the Senate; that he has not been a constant drinker, but has yielded only after exhaustive labors; that he never appeared in the Senate except when sober. He declines all technical defense, and says

"I frankly confess to you the weakness which at times has borne me down, and which was calculated to bring discredit upon my State and myself. It is my nature to be frank, and especially do I owe it to you who have showered favors and honors upon me to be so now. I will not attempt justification or excuse, especially when I have so often publicly said that men holding public trusts should be sober men.

"During twenty-seven years of political service—with the exception of ten of those years when I totally abstained—I have often yielded to temptation, and as often have suffered the pangs of unutterable remorse. I can say that in a certain sense my sin has been my punishment. To lose your respect might seem punishment enough; but you can scarce imagine how a proud man feels when he has reason to dread the loss of all that renders his nature noble; and when it would seem that Heaven had withdrawn its favor from him on account of self-inflicted wrongs.

"It has been said with what seems to me unnecessary cruelty, 'It is perfectly useless to exact new pledges from one who has broken so many old ones.' To this allow me to reply that I have reformed, and that I will compel your confidence, not by pledges, but by a course of conduct scrupulously correct. I comprehend the situation perfectly. The happiness of my family, the respect and confidence of my friends, the success of my party, which to me is the triumph of liberty and good government, the honor of my State, the good opinion of mankind, my own life here, and last and most important, the untried future which approaches with startling rapidity; all these have been seriously considered.

* * * * * * *

"But to you, fellow citizens, I do apologize without reserve or defense. I do not ask the divine ruling in one of the oldest recorded trials, viz: 'Let him that is without sin cast the first stone.' I make no comparison between myself and other men in the country who drink more than I can or have done, and with less disturbance of their nervous organization than I have. I do not wish in saying this to seem invidious, or in the attitude of making a special plea on my own behalf."

Some other passages of the circular are so frank and manly in their humility that we reproduce them:

"'To err is human; to forgive divine.' I crave only such an exercise of the divine attribute as the enlightened judgment of my fellow citizens can permit them to vouchsafe to me. I can truthfully aver that no man has a keener appreciation of duty, a livelier pride in the honor of Illinois, or a deeper sense of gratitude toward those who have honored him, than I have. I was in my humble way true to the country during the late rebellious struggle, and throughout a long public life against bitter persecutions, and in fearful minorities, notwithstanding all my faults, I have constantly, unvaryingly, and always been true to the Republican party, and to the principles of human freedom. I am not and never have been the advocate of drinking; for, though alcohol may be useful as a medicine, and in some other respects, yet it kills more than it cures, and is much more productive of misery than of benefit to mankind. And were it in my power I would at one fell sweep blot it from the face of the earth, and obliterate the knowledge of making it from the breasts of mankind."

We performed a painful duty when in a recent editorial we called upon him to resign his seat. The people of the Western States are determined that no drunkard shall represent them in the Senate Chamber. We doubt if politicians are aware of the intensity of the feeling. The nation has been disgraced by maudling babblings and ruffian-like blustering in its chief places, its Senate has been polluted, and it will no longer tolerate the gross wickedness.

We said then and say now that we would go a thousand miles to help Senator Yates up from his fall. Oh, it is sad—pitifully sad to see a man a slave, a cringing bondman, a chained slave for want of will, a slave because he does not go to God for help.

We have no hope that he will reform unless he becomes a true Christian, converted after the old style.

As we demanded in behalf of the people his resignation, we give his answer and refer it the people, only adding that Illinois will be glad, more than glad, if the man she has honored proves worthy of her confidence. She has all the old affection, but her confidence has been weakened:

"I am not so wedded to political life as to desire to remain in office longer than my friends desire, but I have never abandoned any post of duty assigned me, and I shall not leave my present one before the expiration of my term while a single stain rests upon my honor as a Senator. Such an act would be cowardly, disgraceful to you and myself, a reproach to my children who depend upon me for defense of their good name—an act which can only be compared to suicide. Besides, I feel that I have not yet accomplished all I owe to my State, and am determined to cancel part of the debt. Notwithstanding your justifiable distrust, looking to God, my family, my State, and my high duty, I shall not despair, but look forward to an unclouded future."

The River Amazon.

The mouth of the Amazon was discovered by a Spaniard in 1500, but he considered it merely a deep gulf, and had not the remotest suspicion of the mass of fresh water that was rolling to the sea from every part of northern South America, or that the snowy masses of the Cordilleras and the gushing fountains of the watershed of the continent were finding their way to the Atlantic through this waste of waters. Forty years elapsed before it was known what a vast territory is drained by this stream, and then it was discovered not from the mouth, but from the mountains of Peru. Orellana, one of Pizarro's generals, at that time Governor of Quito, crossed the Andes in search of El Dorado. Spanish soldiers and Indian porters were soon starving in the wilderness, and Pizarro commanded Orellana with fifty men and light canoes to descend the newly-found stream in search of provisions; but he found only the primeval wilderness on its banks, while its waters soon acquired such extent that he determined not to return, but to let himself be carried on by the current, which he reasoned must somewhere lead him to the sea, and perhaps to the so ardently-desired El Dorado.

Thus he came into the Tabatinga, and finally into the Amazon itself. His journey lasted eight months, was full of adventures with the Indians, and gave the first information to Europe of this immense water channel.

In the language of the Para Indians, who at that time lived in the delta of the Amazon, this name signifies a destroyer of boats, an appellation which it richly deserves, for the ebb and flow of the tide are felt in violence many miles inland, and the water rises at times fifty feet above the ordinary level, and inundates all the adjoining region, which becomes a vast sea.

The news of this wonderful discovery gave new impetus to explorers, and expeditions large and small followed each other in the hopes of finding treasure. The greatest of these was that of Tereira, who with 45 boats and 900 men, ascended the stream in 1837 a distance of 2800 miles, as far as Quito. The best description of the wonders of land and water in the Amazon territory is that of "Spix and Martin's Journey." The labors of Bates, Liais, and Agassiz have made important additions to these, and together they form the common fund of knowledge in regard to this wonderful valley.

A glance at the map will show us the value of free navigation to all nations throughout this territory; for it is not only the main stream of the Amazon that is open, but also its numerous branches, which are larger than ordinary rivers, such as the Tapajoz and the Rio Negro; these are navigable for a long distance and penetrate the bosom of untold wealth. All travelers who have hitherto treated of this network of mighty rivers declare themselves incapable of describing the magnificence of their appearance, and refrain from any comparison, because none could do them justice.

A stream that has islands in its delta of the size of Sicily, that for hundreds of miles inland bears a resemblance to a great lake, and that yearly makes new channels and forms new connections, is not an easy subject for comparison. Its banks for nearly their whole length are thickly covered with primitive forest, and its rushing flood at times carries off sections of earth and trees miles in length: these are hurled in every direction by the vortex of waters, and thus become very dangerous to navigation. This is especially the case near the mouth, where the ocean with great violence presses back the masses of fresh water, and then again with the ebb tide receives them to its bosom. When to this is added the hurricane which in the delta of the Amazon is extremely violent, the agitation of the contending forces of nature is so great as to surpass the wildest ocean storm.

Until the application of steam-power to the navigation of this river its beauties were to the world a hidden paradise, and former rulers seemed inclined to keep them so. Alexander Von Humboldt, in his early explorations of this country, declared that in a few centuries the valley of the Amazon would be the centre of civilization and the desire of the world. And it would really seem that the government of Brazil had feared that if the eyes of strangers rested on these shores they would so lust after them as to endeavor to obtain them. But of late years better counsels have been steadily gaining ground, and emigration has been encouraged in the province of the Upper Amazon, bordering on Peru.

But all accessions from this quarter have proved in a region of such boundless extent but a drop in the sea. The present Emperor, Don Pedro II., has long cherished the conviction that Brazil must open its great streams to the commerce of the world; but the political complications of the last ten years have operated against such a measure. There were differences with Peru, unsettled questions with France, a conflict with England about some of her naval officers, and lastly a trouble with the United States on account of harboring the rebel privateer Florida in the port of Bahia: all of them questions greatly affected by a free navigation of her waters.

But these questions are all or nearly all settled, and as it would seem at the earliest moment, the Emperor, doubtless somewhat influenced by the very favorable report of Agassiz, has declared the Amazon free to the navigation of the world after September of the present year. And not only here has he shown his wisdom, but in the province of Bahia, where the Francisco river is also open, and gives free access to an extensive and wealthy region.—Hours at Home.

Talmudic Maxims.

Professor Stowe, in his paper on the Talmud, read before the New England Historical Genealogical Society, at its recent meeting, gave some interesting specimens of the maxims and proverbs contained in that wonderful collection. We transfer a few of the pithiest:

If you speak in the night, speak softly; if you speak in the daytime, look around you before you speak.

What business is it of yours to search into the mysteries of God.

If you want a leader, look for a man who has a nose. (The Jews, by the way, had a great repugnance to pug noses.)

In the pot in which you cook, you will yourself be cooked.

The camel aspired after horns, and the Lord took away his ears.

(In defense of early marriage.) If I had married at fourteen, I should have said to the Devil, "There, you have a sharp stick in your eye."

The man is fire, the woman tow,
And the Devil comes the coals to blow.

(The Professor read it, "blow the coals," but a good couplet is made by a slight change in position.)

While the rabbi was fasting, the dogs stole his dinner.

Of the field that we reap prematurely, even the staw is good for nothing.

Great is the value of labor, and it honors those who devote themselves to it.

The speculator puts his money on a stag's horns.

Wo to him who builds a big door and has no house behind it.

While Noah was planting his vineyard, the devil came to him and said: "What are you doing here?" Noah replied: "Planting a vineyard." "What is the use of a vineyard?" inquired the devil; said Noah: "Its fruit, whether fresh or dry (grapes or raisins), is sweet and good; and its wine gladdens the heart." "Let us work it on shares," says the devil." "Agreed," says Noah. Now what does the devil do? He brings a lamb, a lion, a hog, and a monkey, sacrifices them and mingles the blood with the soil. Therefore, if a man eats only of the fruit of the vineyard, he is as innocent and nice as a lamb; if he drinks wine he thinks himself a lion when he is not, and falls into mischief; if he drinks habitually he becomes as selfish and as unmannerly as a hog; if he gets drunk, he jabbers and jumps about, and is silly and nasty like a monkey.

The Life and Death of Mendelssohn and His Sister.

[From Alger's Friendships of Women.]

The union of Felix and Fanny Mendelssohn was something wonderful, like the wonderful genius of sensibility and music which endowed them both. Such pure, tender, and noble souls are made for each other. The more fervid and exacting bonds of marriage and parentage did not interfere with the profound sympathy in which they lived, both when together and when apart. They corresponded in music. Their emotions, too deep and strange to be conveyed in words, like articulate thoughts, they expressed in tones. Seating themselves at their instruments, they would for hours carry on an intercourse perfectly intelligible to each other, and more adequate and delicious than any vocal conversation. When Felix, at Naples, at Rome, or in London, sent to Fanny a letter, composed in notes, she translated it first with her eyes, then with her piano. The most charming transcripts of these affectionate and musical souls were thus made in music. Sweeter or more divinely gifted beings have rarely appeared on this earth. Their relations of spirit were sensitive and organic, far beneath the reach of intellectual consciousness. They seemed able to communicate tidings through the ethereal medium by some subtile telegraphy of feeling which trascends understanding, and belongs to a miraculous region of life. For when Fanny died in her German home, Felix, amidst a happy company in England, suddenly aware of some terrible calamity, from the disturbance of equilibrium and dread sinking of his soul, rushed to the piano, and poured out his anguish in an improvisation of wailing and mysterious strains, which held the assembly spell-bound and in tears. In a few days a letter reached him, announcing that his sister had died at that very hour. On receiving the tidings he uttered a shriek, and the shock was so great as to burst a blood vessel in his brain. Life had no charm potent enough to stanch and heal the cruel laceration left in his already failing frame by this sundering blow. The web of torn fibres bled invisibly. He soon faded away, and followed his sister to a world of finer melody, fitted for natures like theirs.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Water Supply.—Mr. John Lockwood has addressed a communication to Mayor Heath, giving his ideas as to the best method of supplying the city of New Orleans with an abundance of good pure water:

Hon. E. Heath, Mayor of the City of New Orleans:

Sir—As the subject of purchasing the waterworks is now being agitated by the City Council, and having given the matter of supplying the city of New Orleans with an abundance of good, pure water considerable thought, I therefore beg leave to make a few suggestions on the subject.

An abundant supply of good, pure water distributed through the pipes at an elevation sufficient for the extinguishment of fires, as well as for all domestic purposes, enabling the consumer to carry the water into any part of his house, is very desirable, and in fact necessary for the health of the city as well as for the final success and prosperity of the enterprise.

It is well known by every citizen of New Orleans that the present waterworks are entirely deficient in evey respect that would entitle it to rank as a first-class waterworks. A first-class waterworks, in the first place, should be able at all times to furnish an abundant supply of pure, wholesome water; in the next place, it should be distributed through the pipes at an elevation sufficient to carry the water into any part of the highest building in the city, through a system of pipes so arranged as to give an even and abundant supply of water through all parts of the city. In these three particulars consist the elements of a first-class waterworks. That the present works are deficient in all of them no sane man will deny, and in the negotiations between the city and the waterworks company for the purpose of purchasing the same, those defects should be taken into consideration, the whole system being too small and its present location renders it impossible to be enlarged. The reservoir not being of a sufficient capacity to allow the water to subside, the supply for the city particularly during the day time has to be pumped directly into the pipes, delivering the water in such an impure state that it is entirely unfit for domestic use.

For a public water supply therefore the water should be selected having the following characteristics in the highest degree possible, viz: first, purity; next, softness; and next, limpidity: although rain water is used here generally for domestic purposes, more on account of the absence of good pure river water—which should be furnished by well-regulated waterworks—than from its intrinsic value, as it is very objectionable in quality. The atmosphere over a city is always charged with the gaseous products of combustion, (more particularly in these lower latitudes), and those arising from decaying animals and vegetable matter, garbage, etc. The roofs are covered with these substances condensed from the gases, with soot, dust, and decaying matter in the streets, and metallic oxyds on metallic roofs. Rain water absorbs all of these, and stored in close cisterns loses its aeration and becomes insipid unless cooled with ice, and is repugnant to the taste. That such water is very impure is evident by the rapid production of animaculæ in it, which shows the presence of the food necessary to maintain that vast but minute quantity of animal life. It is supposed that filtration will remove the impurities of this water, but those in ordinary use only remove such matter as is suspended in and none of that which is chemically united with the water.

River water becomes highly charged with air, and takes up in suspension alluvial matter which, as in the case of the present works in this city, renders it unfit for domestic uses. When such water is discharged into an artificial reservoir, and allowed to stand quiet, it precipitates all of the heavy portions of suspended matter, and becomes clear and limpid; the lighter particles of vegetable matter are decomposed, and are driven off by a warm atmosphere, producing a self purification, which decidedly improves the water.

Now the question arises, how shall these defects be remedied. I answer that the city should purchase in the upper portion of Jefferson a tract of land, say of not less than fifty acres, and make one grand reservoir or basin that will contain from 150 000,000 to 200,000,000 gallons of water, divided into compartments, then erect an elevated reservoirs, say eighty feet in height, as a distributing reservoir, into which the water shall be pumped alternately from the different compartments in the large reservoir, as the water subsides and becomes pure. A system of such elevated reservoirs might be adopted, placing one on the present reservoir, another in the vicinity of the French market, thus producing an equal pressure and supply to all parts of the city. Chicago being similarly situated as New Orleans, has adopted this plan.

It may be objected by some that these distributing reservoirs would not contain a sufficient quantity of water to supply the city's wants. In answer to these objections, I would state, that in many places in Europe, where the water is pure, no reservoirs at all are used, the water being pumped directly into a stand-pipe of sufficient height for the elevation required, relying on the pumping apparatus for the requisite supply.

With the waterworks thus remodeled, it would reduce the expense of the fire department greatly, and insure the speedy extinguishment of fires. With a hose screwed on any of the fire plugs in the city, water could be thrown to a height of sixty feet, and with the facility of carrying the water into the upper story of any building in the city, enabling the parties to put out a fire, or flood a building before an engine could arrive on the ground. The rates of insurance could be reduced very materially, as well as the expense of building and maintaining those large and expensive cisterns for the storage of rain water. I have thus hastily embodied my idea on this subject, without going into the minor details of a plan for the enlargement and perfecting of the present waterworks.

City Money Must be Received for City Taxes.—In the Third District Court Judge Emerson, yesterday, in the case of the city of New Orleans vs. estate of J. W. McIntosh—Under a judgment for city taxes execution was issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff. Defendant tendered to that officer in satisfaction of the writ the amount of the debt and interest in city currency and the costs with five per cent Attorney's fee in United States treasury notes. The tender was declined by the sheriff because in his opinion that portion of the tax levied to pay the interest on the consolidated debt and railroad bonds was demandable in legal tender notes, and because the fee due to the City Attorney was five per cent per annum instead of five per cent. A similar tender was made to the Mayor, and by him refused.

The defendant now takes a rule on the city and the sheriff to show cause why the funds tendered should not be received in discharge of the judgment.

No objections were raised to the form of proceedings, nor were technicalities insisted on, but a decision is sought on the general question for the purpose of setting the matter at rest whether that portion of the tax relating to the consolidated debt and railroad bonds is payable in city notes, it being conceded in argument by the city counsel that the corporation was bound to receive its own issues for all taxes levied for general and ordinary purposes, on the ground that the latter embraced debts due to the city, while the former was composed of debts due by the city.

When the three municipalities were united in one body the consolidated corporation assumed all the debts of the former, together with those of the General Council. The aggregate liability then became a debt due by the new corporation, but when it levied a tax to pay it that became a debt due to the city, payable to it by the taxpayers, and not payable by them to the holders of the bonds. It is the same with railroad debts. On subscribing to the stock the city issued its bonds in payment thereof, and it imposes an annual tax to discharge the interest, which tax is payable directly to itself, and is levied and collected in its own name. These assessments, therefore, are debts due to the city in the same sense that taxes are which are levied to defray the ordinary expenses of the corporation.

Nor is there any distinction in regard to its liability between those of its creditors, who are bondholders, and any other, whether it be under a bond or a contract to clean or repair the streets, or an obligation incurred for any other purpose; the debt is payable in cash or in legal tender notes. Hence the fact that its debt to the bondholders can be discharged only by payment in cash has no force in the controversy before me, inasmuch as its other debts can be discharged in no other way.

It is contended, however, that an ordinance passed in 1855 required all taxes to be paid in money. This is true, but when the city in 1861 commenced issuing its notes for circulation it declared them to be receivable for all dues and taxes payable under its assessments, and it has made the same declaration on several occasions since that year. Good faith requires that it should not withdraw from its stipulations, and when it issues its notes as currency, or in other words as money, it is estopped from saying it is not money, and must receive it as such.

Whether the Attorney's fee is five per cent or five per cent per annum is a question I do not value. All parties interested are bound by the judgment as it stands, and that gives the Attorney five per cent only.

For these reasons let the rule herein taken be made absolute, and let the sheriff be required to receive the funds tendered to him by the defendant on the second of April, 1868, in satisfaction and discharge of the writ of fieri facias issued in the above entitled suit.

Proceedings Against the Bank of Louisiana.—Attorney General Lynch on Friday last instituted suit in the Sixth District Court against this bank for forfeiture of its charter. It appears that in the month of February last the president and directors of the bank applied to the Sixth District Court for authority to call a meeting of the stockholders to determine on the necessity of surrendering the charter of that institution, the condition of which is hopelessly insolvent. The meeting was held at the office of the bank on the twenty-third ultimo. There were but a few stockholders in attendance, and nothing was done except the passage of a resolution adjourning till the third Monday of June, and a second application to Judge Duplantier to authorize a meeting on the day last named. A plan was put forth by the directors for the reorganization of the bank without the surrender of the charter. The Attorney General was present at the meeting, but did not concur in the action of the directors then present nor in the practicability or legality of the proposed reorganization. Suits have been commenced against the bank, and in some cases judgment obtained, and its property put under seizure, thereby jeoparding the rights of bill holders, depositors, and other privileged creditors. An order has been obtained staying all legal proceedings by individual creditors of the bank, also an injunction prohibiting the president of the institution from paying out any of its funds, or disposing of or assigning any of its assets during the pendency of these proceedings. This bank was chartered in 1824, and was among the soundest, most reliable of the moneyed institutions of this or any other State. Its specie was intrusted to the rebel authorities in 1862, since which time it has been languishing without any prospect of retrieving its former solvent condition. Its forced liquidation is now deemed by the Attorney General a matter of absolute public necessity.

Murder of Franklin Sinclair.—The affidavit against James Payne, arrested in this city on Saturday and committed to prison for the murder of Franklin Sinclair, or St. Clair, in the parish of Morehouse, reads as follows:

Anatole Germaine, of No. — Ursulines street, in the city of New Orleans and district of Louisiana, being duly sworn, says that he is a free man of color and a citizen of the United States; that he knew Franklin St. Clair, of the parish of Ouachita, who was a school teacher in said parish; that on or about the sixteenth day of April, 1868, on the highway, between Linn Grove and Bastrop, in the parish of Morehouse and within the district of Louisiana, the said Franklin St. Clair, who was a free man of color, was brutally and foully murdered and killed by being shot to death by one James Payne, a planter in the said parish of Morehouse; that said murder of said Franklin St. Clair was committed by said Payne without any cause or provocation therefor and from malice aforethought on account of the said St. Clair being a person of color and a Union man, and the said Payne is an intense rebel and hostile to the loyal Union people of that part of the country where the said murder was committed.

Deponent further says that for the said murder so committed as aforesaid justice has been denied by the civil authorities in the said parish and locality on account of the intimidation, fear, and dread on the part of said authorities in consequence of the threats of violence uttered by the rebels and enemies of the government of the United States who live in and control the officers and people in said locality.

Deponent further says that military protection to the loyal Union people within the parish of Morehouse was refused by the commandant of the post of Monroe in the parish of Ouachita, whose name is Captain Webb, of the Fourth United States Cavalry, for which reason it is impossible to obtain justice for the said murder, or any other wrongs and cruelties inflicted by rebels upon colored and Union people in the parish aforesaid.

Wherefore deponent charges the said James Payne with willful and deliberate murder of Franklin St. Clair, a free man of color and citizen of the United States, contrary to the statute in such case made and provided, and he prays that said James Payne may be arrested and dealt with as the law directs.

Young Men's Social Club.—The Young Men's Social Club gave a ball Monday evening at National Hall, Poydras street, and the members of the club, with the graceful and beautiful young ladies and invited guests, enjoyed themselves very sensibly. Among the invited guests were Lieutenant Governor Dunn, Dr. R. I. Cromwell, and Hon. P. B. S. Pinchback. The press was properly represented on the occasion. At about eleven o'clock the interesting and highly artistic ceremony of "Crowning the Queen" was performed, in presence of the whole court. Mounted upon a dias concealed from view by drapery the King (Master Arthur Pynchon) had assembled his household and maids of honor, attendants on the Queen that was to be (Miss Theodosia Thompson.) At a given signal the arras was removed as if by magic; certainly by the aid of High Lord Chamberlain Colburn, who did everything at the proper time and in a proper manner, disclosing to full view an imposing array of juvenile royalty, none the less real for being of a dusky hue. The King and Queen and all the court were tastefully dressed, her majesty appearing in a beautiful white tulle festooned with pink ribbons, and decked with buds and flowers. Holding in his hand the diadem his majesty approached the Queen, and in a clear voice and the true tone of loyalty, addressed her in signification of his intention to bestow upon her the emblem of supremacy he held in his hand. In his speech he related how happy he and his subjects were that the hour so long looked for had arrived, and the hopes they all entertained that this might be the beginning of happiness for all concerned. The Queen thanked his majesty for the preference he had shown, and her subjects for the interest they displayed on the occasion. She accepted the royal diadem with thanks, and concluded by ordering the music to strike up that her loyal subjects might manifest their gladness in the rounds of the mazy dance. When we left the enjoyment was at its height, and bade fair to continue to a late hour.

First National Bank.—Extract from a letter of the Hon. H. R. Hulburd, Controller of the Currency, to Charles Case, Receiver of the First National Bank of New Orleans:

Treasury Department,
Office Controller of the Currency,
Washington, April 27, 1868.

Dear Sir: I am in receipt of your letter of the 22d instant.

The amount of interest accrued upon bonds held for circulation since the failure of the bank is ......................$10,500
On bonds held for deposits (including interest due May 1st proximo)...... 13.500

Making a total (in gold) of ..........$24,000

The Treasurer will make arrangements to convert this gold interest into currency hereafter as it accrues, of which you will be duly advised.

I have recently received a letter from Hon. Isaac F. Redfield, who is looking after our interests in the Bank of Liverpool. He encourages the belief that we shall gain our suit and recover possession of the full amount now in Liverpool, which I trust may be realized.

Very truly yours,
H. R. HULBURD,
Controller.

Poisoned by Corn Bread.—Mrs. Jenks, who keeps a boarding house on St. Charles street, so it was reported yesterday at the office of the Chief of Police, mixed arsenic with corn meal to tempt rats to their destruction, and the mixture carelessly left where the cook supposed it to be intended for corn bread, was cooked and eaten by boarders and servants.

As a consequence those who ate the bread were more or less affected by the poison they had partaken of. The bread was eaten on Sunday morning. Sunday evening all of the boarders were well enough to be at the supper table. The names of the parties poisoned by the bread are Mrs. Todd, Mr. Johns, Mr. Stephenson, Mr. Craig, Mr. Pierce, Mr. True, Mr. Ridley, Mr. and Mrs. Taylor, and Miss Taylor, Miss Hopkins, Mr. Evans, Mrs. Jenks, three colored male waiters, and the cook.

The rebel press represent "that some negroes in the habit of lounging about Mrs. Jenks' kitchen had been driven away a few days before, and they probably did it through malice." But this is all bosh, and the representation is made only to create prejudice against colored servants.

"Found Drowned."—These two words constitute the epitaph of a human found in the river off Jackson saw mill, third district. What's his name, or where his home the strangers among whom he expired have no care to know; and there is the end of a man.

Lots in Lafayette Cemetery.—The sum obtained by sale of lots in this cemetery for the month of April was $1135.

From Washington.

Washington, May 1. Mr. Evarts closed at 3 P. M. After a recess Mr. Stanbery commenced, saying that although feeble in health, an irresistible impulse urged him on; unseen but friendly hands sustained him, and voices inaudible to others he heard whispering of hope and confidence, and saying or seeming to say, "Feeble champion of the right, hold not back. Remember the race is not always to the swift nor the battle to the strong. Remember a single pebble from a brook was enough to overthrow the giant that defied the armies of Israel."

Court adjourned.

The public debt has decreased $8,000,000. Coin on hand $84,000,000. Currency $23,000,000.

Receipts of customs for the week ending the twenty-fifth ultimo, $3,483,000.

Internal revenue receipts to day $814,000.

House—The Alta Vela resolution was resumed. Mr. Brooks divided his hour among the Democrats, and moved the previous question, which was not seconded.

An amendment was then offered, which opened free debate. Mr. Logan opened but was called to order for using the word villanous. He took it back, and was again called to order for saying that Brooks said what Brooks knew to be untrue, but the speaker ruled that the expression was parliamentary.

The date of the letter which had been denied in court a few days ago was admitted in the House, but innocent motives were asserted. The speeches made upon the question were very bitter.

The resolution was tabled—70 to 26.

During the debate, Mr. Eldridge called Mr. Logan a gentleman, and Mr. Logan called Mr. Eldridge a blackguard.

Adjourned.

Washington, May 2.—The Star says that heavy bets were made yesterday, odds being three to one in favor of conviction.

Seventy-four millions of dollars were drawn from the Treasury yesterday to pay interest on five-twenties, reducing the coin on hand to sixty millions. No more coin will be required until July first, when there will be a demand for twenty-seven millions.

The disbursements during the month were: For the civil list $6,000,000; war $7,000,000; navy $2,500,000.

Internal revenue receipts to-day $1,245,000: for the week $4,500,000; for the year $159,000,000.

General Grant has gone to Philadelphia on a visit.

Impeachment Court.—Mr. Stanbery concluded as follows:

"Now listen for a moment to one who understands Andrew Johnson better than most of you, for his opportunities have been greater. When nearly two years ago he called me from the pursuits of my professional life to take a seat in his Cabinet, and I assumed the call under a sense of public duty, I came here almost a stranger to him and to every member of the Cabinet except Mr. Stanton. We had been friends for many years.

"Senators: Need I tell you that all my tendencies are conservative? You, Mr. Chief Justice, who have known me for a third of a century, can bear me witness. Law, not arms, is my profession. From the moment that I was honored with a seat in the Cabinet of Mr. Johnson not a step was taken that did not come under my observation; not a word was said that escaped my attention. I regarded him closely in Cabinet, and still more in private and confidential person. I saw him often tempted with bad advice. I know that evil counselors were more than once around him with the most intense anxiety, but never in word or in deed or in thought or in action did I discover in that man anything but loyalty to the Constitution and the laws. He stood firm as a rock against all temptations to abuse his own powers, or to exercise those which were not conferred upon him. Steadfast and self-reliant in the midst of all difficulty, when danger threatened, when temptations were strong, he looked only to the Constitution of his country and to the people.

"Yes, senators, I have seen that man tried as few have been tried. I have seen his confidence abused. I have seen him endure day after day privations such as few men have been called upon to meet. No man could have met them with more sublime patience. Sooner or later, however, I knew the explosion must come, and when it did come my only wonder was that it had been so long delayed. Yes, Senators, with all his faults the President has been more sinned against than sinning. Fear not then to acquit him. The Constitution of the country is as safe in his hands from violence as it was in the hands of Washington.

"But if, senators, you condemn him—if you strip him of the robes of office—if you degrade him to the utmost extent of your power, mark the prophecy: The strong arm of the people will be about him. They will find a way to raise him from any depth to which you may consign him, and we shall live to see him redeemed, and to hear the majestic voice of the people, 'well done faithful servant—you shall have your reward.' But if, senators, as I can not belive, but has been boldly said with almost official sanction, your votes have been canvassed, and the doom of the President sealed, then let that judgment not be pronounced in this senate chamber, just here where our Camillus in the hour of our greatest peril, single-handed met and baffled the enemies of the Republic.

"Not here, where he stood faithfully among the faithless; not here, where he fought the good fight for the Union and Constitution; not in this chamber whose walls echo with that clarion voice that in the days of our greatest danger carried hope and comfort to many a desponding heart, strong as an army with banners. No, not here. Seek out rather the darkest and gloomiest chamber in the subterranean recesses of the Capitol, where the cheerful light of day never enters; there erect the altar, and immolate the victim."

House.—After return Mr. Donnelly, of Minnesota, made a personal explanation. Mr. Washburne, of Illinois, wrote a letter to Mr. Donnelly. Said letter contained twenty-four false statements.

Mr. Donnelly proceeded an hour and a half, using the most bitter invectives.

The speaker called him to order half a dozen times, but Mr. Washburne said let the party go on, and the House not objecting he went on.

Mr. Donnelly had letters read going to show that Mr. Washburne had outrageously slandered him.

Mr. Washburne replied reiterating the truth of his letter, and saying he could make no answer to a man who had been false to his friends, his party, his country, his religion, and his God.

Pending a motion to censure Mr. Washburne the House adjourned.

Washington, May 4.—House.—A committee of seven, with power to send for persons and papers, was appointed in the Donnelly and Washburne case.

A motion to expunge Saturday's proceedings from the record caused much excitement, but was withdrawn after Messrs. Donnelly and Washburne had withdrawn their offensive remarks.

Pending a motion to adjourn, Mr. Donnelly asked leave that Mr. Washburne and he might imitate General Thomas and Secretary Stanton, and take a drink.

Mr. Washburne proclaimed himself a temperance man. Adjourned.

Impeachment Court—Mr. Bingham disavowed partisan prejudices—he was there as a representative of the people. He applied the term hired frequently to the President's counsel, and said that Mr. Evart's speech had in it more Latin than law, more rhetoric than logic, and more intellectual pyrotechnics than either. He argued that the President had no right to construe laws, and that the Supreme Court had no possible jurisdiction in the case. He narrated Mr. Lincoln's assassination, and incidents from the fugitive slave law, and its operations. He said the gentleman who opened this case claimed that the President may judicially construe the Constitution for himself, and may determine whether your laws are passed under the Constitution, and whether he shall execute them.

Mr. Bingham repeated this that it might be buried into the hearts of the Senators. The laws were only to be executed it it pleased his highness Andrew Johnson, first king of the United States. If the President can do this, as insisted on by his advocates, Mr. Bingham insisted that the Constitution, which we had been taught to revere as the bulwark of our liberties, is a constitution which invites violation of the law, not obedience to it. And he insisted farther, that if Senators by their judgment should countenance this plea they would be the architects of their country's ruin. They would give over this land to endless chaos and anarchy.

No matter what demagogues may say about it out of this chamber the issue is anarchy in this land, and the recording angel of history is ready to trace it. That is all of it. It is the head and front of Andrew Johnson's offending that he has assumed to himself the prerogative of interpreting the Constitution and deciding upon the laws for himself. In spite of all the lawyers' tricks, in spite of all the technicalities, this was it. With all respect to Senators and to the able counsel after the weeks and weeks of discussion on this case, if there is one man who does not understand this simple proposition, then God in his infinite wisdom has denied him reason.

Internal revenue receipts to-day, $1,645 000.

The White House was crowded all day with visitors.

It is positively asserted that the following conversation is substantially correct, and that it foreshadows Mr. Wade's policy. A few evenings since Mr. Wade was approached by a prominent Radical Congressman, who said:

"I regret to see the imminent danger which exists of a conflict between the whites and blacks of South Carolina, and hope some measure will be adopted to prevent it."

Mr. Wade—"That can easily be done. We must keep sufficient troops there, sir. Troops will prevent it."

Congressman—"But our Northern friends are becoming impatient under the fearful expenses of a standing army. They may refuse to be taxed for such a purpose much longer."

Mr. Wade—"You are quite right in supposing the North restless and impatient under taxation, but this we will avoid by requiring each State to support the army kept within her own territory, and this will leave our friends entirely free of the burden. If these Southern rebels won't behave themselves they must be made to pay the expenses of keeping peace within their borders. Such, sir, will be our policy."

With this positive ennunciation the Radical expressed himself satisfied, but intimated a doubt as to its practical workings, as the South was already impoverished by war. But Mr. Wade suggested that the Southern lands would yield ample revenue for the purpose.

Washington, May 5.—House—The Speaker named Banks, Thomas, Poland, Griswold, Blair, Woodward, and Beck as a committee to investigate Washburne's charges against Donelly.

Mr. Carey moved the withdrawal of the tenth article as untenable under the House proceedings of Saturday.

The Speaker decided it a privileged motion and pending a vote on its reception the House adjourned.

In the Impeachment Court, Mr. Bingham argued that evil intent was not necessary to conviction. He said that the counsels' argument on this subject was puerile, and not fit for the ears of the Senate.

He maintained the unity of the appointing and removal power; said that undue weight had been given to the debates of '96, and maintained that maladministration was impeachable. He held that Mr. Sherman's remarks regarding Cabinet officers were not applicable, because when the bill passed the malignity and dangerous character of the President had not been developed. He defended Mr. Stanton as a calumniated and slandered officer who had proved faithful among the faithless, and as one who in all the qualities which adorn and ennoble human nature was unexcelled in any age or country.

He characterized the quo warranto arguments as mere babble in the ears of the Senate. He regarded the constitutionality of the tenure of office act as a closed question, and said that after voting on it three times, Senators who questioned its constitutionality were themselves impeachable. Mr. Bingham concludes to-morrow.

The Reconstruction Committee met, but did nothing.

The debt statement shows that the debt bearing coin interest has increased $19,000,000; that bearing currency interest decreased $21,250 000. Total debt decreased $2,100,000. Debt less cash in the treasury has decreased $18,500,000.

Nothing has transpired regarding the routine to-morrow after Bingham closes. He will close about 2 o'clock.

It is stated that a majority of the reconstruction committee favor the admission of the Arkansas delegation on the completion of the impeachment trial.

The President transmitted the South Carolina and Arkansas Constitutions to the House. Referred to the reconstruction committee.

Judge Paschal, Indian agent, with delegations from the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Creek nations, visited General Grant to-day. General Grant asked them to state their plans in writing. The plans appear to include their admission to the Union as a State and proffer to protect the Northern Texas frontier.

Washington, May 6.—Senate—The court was densely crowded. Mr. Bingham concluded in an effort as follows:

He might be pardoned for quoting the words of England's great historian—that had the case against James the Second failed the tree of liberty would have crumbled. And shall it be said in history hereafter that through the defection of the American Senate the fair fabric of American liberty crumbled into dust, and the name of our republic faded away before the nations. It is the spirit of justice, of liberty, of equality that makes your Constitution respected everywhere. It gives the people the right to make their own law, and it is this right which is challenged by your recreant President. He claims the power to make the laws—to be their dictator.

If he is allowed to do so it will be by the voice of the Senate, not by the free will of the American people or through any neglect of their representatives. Will the Senate set him above the Constitution which he has violated, and which he swore to obey? Perhaps he was saying too much, but he asked Senators to remember that he was speaking to-day in behalf of a violated Constitution and laws—of the rights of a free people—that he was speaking in the name of half a million of braves who slept in death to day, and who had died that the nation might live. It only remained for him to thank the Senate for their attention, and to demand in the name of the House of Representatives and of a free people the conviction of this accused President who stands guilty before God and man of the high crimes and misdemeanors of which he stands impeached. Applause followed, and Chief Justice Chase ordered the galleries to be cleared.

House.—Mr. Stevens was called to order by the Speaker in his Alta Vela explanation, and withdrew it all. The part read was very caustic on Mr. Nelson.

Mr. Cary's resolution, withdrawing the tenth article of impeachment, was not entertained—by a strict party vote.

The House went into Committee of the Whole, with the understanding that the speakers should avoid discussing impeachment.

A motion to adjourn to Saturday was lost by 20 to 39.

The doors were then closed.

A resolution to admit official reporters was lost.

Mr. Sumner's resolutions were discussed to adjournment.

Mr. Donnelly says he was misunderstood in the House; that he neither desired, nor does he desire, reconciliation with Washburne. His proposition to take a drink meant nothing of that kind.

General Grant sent a message to Congress covering communications from General Canby, detailing the evil effects of compelling State officers of North and South Carolina to take the test oath. Many good men acting with the Union party can not take it. Other good men who could, decline taking it, feeling that unworthy motives would be attributed to them. General Grant expresses no opinion on the subject; he merely transmits General Canby's letter.

The protest of the white people of South Carolina against the Constitution was referred to the reconstruction committee.

Julius Cesar, when he was in love with the mother of Marcus Brutus, gave her a pearl worth nearly a quarter of a million of money. Mark Anthony drank one, dissolved in vinegar, which cost nearly $400,000. Clodius, the glutton, swallowed one worth $40,000.

U. S. MARSHAL'S SALES.

Margaret R. Dean, Widow, etc., vs Mrs. C. D. Moncure and als, Children and Heirs of Henry Doyal, Deceased.

IN THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, for the Fifth Circuit and District of Louisiana, No. 3788.—By virtue of a writ of fieri facias, issued and to me directed by the above named court in the above entitled and numbered suit, and received by me on the sixth March, 1868, I have seized and taken into my possession, and will expose for sale at public auction to the highest bidder, on FRIDAY, the twenty second day of May, 1868, at the hour of twelve o'clock noon, at the door of the courthouse of the parish of Ascension, in Donaldsonville, Louisiana, the following described property, viz:

A CERTAIN PLANTATION, situated on the left bank of and fronting on the Mississippi river in the parish of Ascension in this state, formerly known as the "Hard Times," but now known as the "Southwood" plantation, and bounded on the upper line by the line of the parish of Iberville, and on the lower line by lands now or formerly belonging to S. R. Tillotson, and measures about twenty-eight and a half arpents front on the Mississippi river by eighty arpents in depth between diverging lines, with the opening thereto belonging; together with all the buildings and improvements thereon, as well as all the cattle, live stock, implements of husbandry, etc., of whatsoever kind or nature thereon or thereunto belonging; twenty-three Mules, four Carts, thirty-five Cows, twenty thousand new Bricks and a lot of Corn in barrels.

Seized to satisfy, as far as may be, the plaintiff's claim herein, viz: Five thousand four hundred dollars, together with interest and all costs, as per judgment.

Terms of Sale—This being the second adjudication, the above property will be sold at twelve months' credit, the purchaser being required to furnish good and sufficient joint and several security, with preference and special mortgage privilege on the property sold, bearing interest at the rate of eight per cent per annum, and to pay in cash an amount to cover all the costs of suit amount to five hundred dollars ($500 more or less.

Costs of deed, bond, recording internal revenue stamps, etc., at expense of purchaser.

RINK'S ORGAN SCHOOL,

Carefully Revised; with the German Directions and Terms translated into English, and the Pedal Part printed on Separate Staff. The whole edited by W. T. BEST.

"This is a good edition of a standard work, perhaps we should say the best of all works for the formation of a correct style of organ playing and the mastery of the instrument in all its varied resources. Rink's teacher was Kittel, of Erfurt, a distinguished pupil of John Sebastian Bach, and in this collection of preludes and exercises we have an excellent reflection of the thorough method of which the great German master is the acknowledged representative."—*N. OF LEARNING LANGUAGES.

I. Hand-Book to the Mastery Series, 12mo ... 50c.
II. The Mastery Series. French 12mo........50c.
III. The Mastery Series German. 12mo......50c.

From the American Preface, by Prof. E. M. Gallaudet.

"Most opportunely making the acquaintance of Mr. Prendergast and of his theory before leaving England for the Continent, the writer determined to put the Mastery System to the test in Germany.

"The results which crowned the labor of the first week were so astonishing that he fears to detail them fully, lest doubts should be raised as to his credibility. But this much he does not hesitate to claim, that, after a study of less than two weeks he was able to sustain conversation in the newly acquired language on a great variety of subjects."

IN FAVOR OF

JONAS WHITCOMB'S REMEDY FOR ASTHMA.

MONROVIA, Ind., April 29, 1856.

MR JOSEPH BURNETT—Dear Sir: I am now nearly out of WHITCOMB'S REMEDY FOR ASTHMA. I let a friend of mine have half of the last dozen I sent for. I would not be without the medicine for any consideration. Before I commenced taking the medicine I was totally unfit for business two-thirds of my time. But now I can attend to business all the time. When I have symptoms of Asthma, or even an attack, a few doses subdues it at once.

Please send me one dozen more as low as you can afford it. Send to Belville on Terre Haute and B. Railroad by express. I can remit by letter if you prefer it.

Very respectfully,
JOHN McLELLAND.

Prepared by Joseph Burnett & Co., Boston. For sale by all druggists at $1 per bottle.

GREAT FAMILY NEWSPAPER.

It is Cheap, because its Circulation is Larger than that of any other Newspaper.

NOW IS THE TIME TO FORM CLUBS.

The New York Weekly Tribune

is printed on a large double-medium sheet, making eight pages of six broad columns each. It contains all the important Editorials published in THE DAILY TRIBUNE, except those of merely local interest; also Literary and Scientific Intelligence; Reviews of the most interesting and important New Books; the Letters from our large corps of Correspondents; the latest news received by Telegraph from Washington and all other parts of the country; a summary of all important intelligence in this city and elsewhere; a Synopsis of the proceedings of Congress and the State Legislature when in session; the Foreign News received by every steamer; Exclusive Reports of the Proceedings of the Farmers' Club of the American Institute; Talks about Fruit, and other Horticultural and Agricultural information essential to country residents; Stock, Financial, Cattle, Dry Goods, and General Market Reports; making it, both for variety and completeness, altogether the most valuable, interesting, and instructive WEEKLY NEWSPAPER published in the world.

The full Reports of the American Institute Farmers' Club, and the various agricultural reports, in each number, are richly worth a year's subscription.

Ever since its commencement, THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE has been authority upon the farm. We make features of the Farmers' Club, and permit no question of interest to the agriculturist to pass without comment and advice. When it is remembered that this advice is given by one of the most conscientious farmers in the country, the reader may estimate its value. It has been well observed that a careful reading and study of the Farmers' Club Reports in THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE alone will save a farmer hundreds of dollars in his crop. In addition to these reports, we have arranged to print the best things written on the subject of agricultural by American and foreign writers. We intend to increase these features in the coming year very largely. As it is, no prudent farmer can do without it. As a lesson to his workmen alone, every farmer should place THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE upon his table every Saturday evening.

THE TRIBUNE is the best and cheapest paper in the country. This is not said in a spirit of boastfulness. We do not claim any essential superiority over our neighbors, except the superiority of place and opportunity. It has fallen to New York to create the greatest newspapers of the country. Here concentrate the commerce, the manufactures, the mineral resources, the agricultural wealth of the Republic. Here all the news gathers, and the patronage is so large that the journalists can afford to print it. A newspaper can be made in New York for half the money, and yet with twice the value of newspapers elsewhere This is the strength of THE TRIBUNE. We print the largest, and cheapest, and best-edited weekly newspaper in the country. There is little special merit in this. We have all the advantages around us. We have great Daily and Semi-Weekly editions. Their machinery and resources are only a part of the Weekly. This paper has long had the largest circulation in America, and we have tried to justify the confidence. The result is that we have so systematized and expanded our resources that every copy of THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE contains as much matter as a duodecimo volume. Think of it! For two dollars the farmer in the course of one year buys as much matter as though he filled a shelf of his library with fifty volumes, and those volumes containing the greatest works of the language. The force of cheapness can no further go.

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE is the paper of the people. Here the eager student may know the last lesson of science. Here the scholar may read reviews of the best books. Here may be found correspondence from all parts of the world, the observations of sincere and gifted men who serve the TRIBUNE in almost every country. All the elaborate and intricate machinery of our establishment—perhaps the most complete in America—is devoted to the purpose of making the best and cheapest weekly newspaper in the world. We think we have reached that point in giving for two dollars fifty-two duodecimo volumes a year.

THE TRIBUNE is strong by reason of its enormous circulation and great cheapness. It has long been considered that THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE has the largest circulation in the country. For years we have printed twice as many papers, perhaps, as all of the other weekly editions of the city dailies combined. This is why we are enabled to do our work so thoroughly and cheaply. The larger our circulation, the better paper we can make.

What are the practical suggestions? Many. Let every subscriber renew his subscription, and urge his neighbor to do the same. If a man can not afford to pay two dollars, let him raise a club by inducing his neighbors to subscribe, and we shall send him a copy gratis for his trouble. No Newspaper so large and complete as THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE was ever before offered at so low a price. Even when our currency was at par with gold no such paper but the TRIBUNE was offered at that price, and the TRIBUNE then cost us far less than it now does. We have solved the problem of making the best and cheapest newspaper in America—perhaps in the world. Let us see if we can not give it a million weekly circulation.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDING.

All night the Bethlehem stars had shone
Above the holy hills, and when the moon
Came softly on its silvery wings it shed
Its brightness on a new-born Savior's head.

The sweet fresh dews lay bright upon the hills,
And bathed with joyous tears from heaven distilled,
The fatherland of him, the holy one, the lamb,
And beautified the green wild hills of Bethlehem.

And there were shepherds keeping flocks by night,
When from the gray low east appeared a star so bright.
It burned upon its shining God-instructed way
Until it paused above the manger where the new born lay.

The humble shepherds, first to know their Lord,
Proclaimed the wonders of the star abroad
Till wise men, robed in purple, sought their king.
The shining sentinel upon its glittering wing
Flew o'er to guide them, till at length it stood
Above the lowly birth-place of the Lord.

The star was shining, steadily and true
It glowed upon its holy vigil new,
And glorified the lowly manger-bed
Where the peerless heir of Heaven was laid.

The young lambs bleating on the hillsides green,
And the wandering shepherds, brown from mid-day beam:
With glances undefiled those pure true eyes
Were first the star looked into from the skies.

And the star was shining. On the dew-wet hills
The warm glad sun, the one great vital heart,
Embraced the royal infant, born for such a part,
(When hasty morning brushed aside the star).
And burst in one wild welcome near and far.

And thus the lamb was given, our Savior born.
From the lowly places of the earth the purest gems oft come.
He who with bloody foot-prints has marked the way to heaven,
As modestly as dew and starlight comes was given.

MAIDEN RESOLUTIONS.

Oh! I'll tell you of a fellow—
Of a fellow I have seen—
Who is neither white nor yellow,
But is altogether Green!
Then his name—it isn't charming,
For it's only common Bill!
And he wishes me to wed him,
But I hardly think I will.

He has told me of a cottage—
Of a cottage amid the trees—
And don't you think the gawky
Tumbled down upon his knees?
While the tears the creature wasted
Were enough to turn a mill;
And he begged me to accept him,
But I hardly think I will.

Oh! he whispered of devotion—
Of devotion pure and deep—
But it seemed so very silly
That I almost fell asleep!
And he thinks it would be pleasant
As we journeyed down the hill,
To go hand and hand together,
But I hardly think I will.

He was here last night to see me,
And he made so long a stay
I began to think the blockhead
Would never go away!
At first I learnt to hate him,
And now I hate him still;
Yet he urges me to have him,
But I hardly think I will.

I am sure I wouldn't choose him,
But the very mischief's in it;
For he says if I refuse him,
That he couldn't live a minute;
And you know the blessed Bible
Plainly says we musn't kill—
So I've thought the matter over,
And I rather guess I will.

THE EPISCOPAL ADDRESS.

Delivered May 5, 1868.

To the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church:

REVEREND AND DEAR BRETHREN—Grace be unto you from God the Father and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

Assembled in General Conference as the chosen Representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church, we extend to you our fraternal and most cordial salutations. We also invoke for you and upon you the blessing of the great Head of the Church, humbly beseeching him that in his fatherly goodness your lives and your health may be mercifully preserved during the period of your deliberations, and that your families and pastoral charges may, in your absence, be watchfully guarded by his gracious Providence. Intrusted with the highest interests of the Church, invested with powers involving vast responsibilities and exercising an influence which must affect even the most distant fields of labor, we earnestly pray that the Divine presence may constantly be in your midst, and that you may be endued with that wisdom which alone can preserve from error, and direct to conclusions which God will approve.

Never in the history of the Church has a general conference convened under circumstances more favorable than those which attend this fifteenth quadrennial session of your venerable body. The place of its assembling, farther West than at any previous period, this city, so recent in date, of such wonderful growth, located on the shore of a beautiful inland lake, yet reaching its arms of commerce to distant parts of the globe, seems in harmony with our branch of the Church to which God has given such rapidly extending boundaries. Already its annual conferences reach from the Atlantic to the Pacific, spreading alike over the immense prairies and the towering mountains. It has not only kept pace with the advancing columns of population on this continent, but, claiming the world for its parish, it has organized its conferences in Africa, Europe, and Asia.

The time has peculiar interest as making an era in our history. The first century of American Methodism has just closed. Before us pass in review its small beginnings, severe oppositions, hard contested fields, its moral heroes, its fearless utterances, songs of joy and shouts of triumph. As in the presence of such "a cloud of witnesses," we meet in the first general conference of our second centenary. What may lie in the future no human eye can see, but we look forward in hopefulness and faith. The same grand and glorious doctrines of a free and full salvation which our fathers proclaimed still resound from all our pulpits. To fallen and sinful humanity is offered a Divine Redeemer, whom, despite of all cavilings of infidelity and "the oppositions of science falsely so called," we rejoice to hail as "very God" and "very man:" the Lord of Hosts, the King of Glory. We have the same usages and the same instrumentalities. The class meeting and the love feast, the itinerant system and the general superintendency are elements of power with us as with our fathers.

In our national condition a vast change has occurred since our last assembling. Then a fearful war was devastating a large portion of our land. More than a million of men were under arms and in frequent conflict. Peaceful avocations were interrupted, many a home was vacant, and many a heart was sad. Dark clouds threw their shadows over the future, and the nation's life seemed in peril. Now we meet rejoicing in the salvation which God has wrought. The voice of war has been hushed and its tumult has passed away. The unity of our nation has been secured. Human slavery, that great crime against humanity and God, has perished in the struggle which itself commenced, and freedom, peace, and prosperity are beginning their triumphant reign in every part of our land. Doors long closed against our ministers and our services are now thrown open, and the down-trodden and oppressed are joyfully welcoming the missionary and the teacher.

The world is feeling the impulse of great ideas. Not only are the thoughts of freedom wafted from our shores stirring the hearts of the masses in Europe, but slumbering Asia with the weight of stagnant centuries upon her seems partly aroused, and the old Celestial Empire, which scorned to learn from Europe, is to-day bowing to receive lessons from America. Not our thoughts of government alone move the world. China knows America chiefly through her missionaries. It is the spirit of our free voluntary churches that gives inspiration to our citizens who represent us abroad. The same spirit is to-day shaking the established Church in Ireland and in England; and when the connection of Church and State shall be severed in every land, when boasting ritualism, and arrogant exclusiveness shall perish, the historian will turn to our shores to note the commencement of the movement, and will find that not least among the causes has been the wonderful progress which Methodism has made.

Since the adjournment of the last General Conference, Rev. L. L. Hamline, D. D., formerly an honored member of our board, has departed this life. Bishop Hamline was a man of genius, of culture, of varied learning, and of eminent piety. He possessed both a logical mind and a vivid imagination. He was a beautiful and forcible writer, and a natural and effective orator. During his ministry he spent seven years in the pastoral work, was for four years editor of the Ladies' Repository, and for eight years a general superintendent or Bishop. At the close of his second quadrennial term of service he found his health wholly inadequate for the arduous duties of that office, and he presented to the General Conference his resignation. From that time until the period of his death he was a superannuated member of the Ohio Conference. In death he was more than conquerer.

We are also reminded that some beloved brethren who took part in our deliberations in the last session of the General Conference have been called from labor to reward. Charles B. Tippet, Isaac Own, Samuel Y. Monroe, and Henry M. Blake will be remembered as among our most devout and honored laborers, men who endured toil, who stood in the van of our advancing hosts, and whose memory will be "as ointment poured forth."

As members of the Episcopal Board we desire in this public manner to return thanks to Almighty God that, notwithstanding our labors have been abundant, and our travels have led part of our number almost around the globe, yet our lives have been spared, and no severe accident has happened to any of us. We have been permitted to attend all the sessions of the annual conferences, with but three exceptions, when there were providential hindrances, and to perform all the duties devolving upon us in the order of the Church. We regret to say that the health of our colleague Bishop Baker has been materially impaired. While on his way to the Colorado and Pacific Conferences in 1866 he was attacked with a disease which seriously affected his vocal organs and which was followed by general debility. Though somewhat improved in health he has been but partially able to resume his labors.

Having been appointed by the last General Conference as a delegate to the Wesleyan Conference of Great Britain, Bishop Janes, in 1865, attended the sessions of the British and Irish Conferences, and conveyed to them your salutations. He was most cordially received by those churches which he visited in your name. He will make his official report when desired by the General Conference. Rev. Dr. Bowman, who had been appointed to accompany him, was, we are sorry to say, detained by domestic affliction.

Bishop Janes also presided in the Mission Conferences of Germany and Switzerland, and visited generally the missions in Germany, Switzerland, and Scandinavia.

In 1864 and 1865 Bishop Thompson made an extended tour to India and China, visiting and superintending our missions in those distant lands. Under the authority given by the General Conference he organized the missions in India into an Annual Conference, December 8, 1864. His visit, we believe, was made a blessing to the missionary work, and an increased impetus has been given to our labors in those lands. On his return Bishop Thompson also visited our Bulgarian mission in Constantinople.

In 1867 Bishop Kingsley visited our mission stations in Germany, Switzerland, and Scandinavia, and also held the Mission Conference of Germany and Switzerland.

Arrangements were being made for one of the bishops to visit South America, but learning from the superintendent of the mission that it would would be premature, the contemplated visit was deferred.

In accordance with the action of the last General Conference, a number of annual conferences have been organized. Among these are four German Conferences, the Central, Northwestern, Southwestern, and Eastern. These are in successful operation, much to the satisfaction of our German brethren.

In that part of our Southern territory heretofore not included in annual conferences, the following conferences were organized under the specific authority given to the bishops, viz: Holston, June 5, 1865; Mississippi, December 25, 1865; Tennessee, October 3, 1866; South Carolina, April 2, 1866; Texas, January 3, 1867; Virginia and North Carolina, January 3, 1867; Georgia, October 10, 1867; and Alabama, October 17, 1867.

In these conferences 373 traveling preachers were appointed at the recent sessions, besides a large number of local preachers who travel under the presiding elders, and the membership was reported at 90,071. From information recently received, we have no doubt large accessions have since been made. In addition to the above, our work has been greatly enlarged in the States of Kentucky, Missouri, and Arkansas, there having been during the four years an increase of 27,225 members and 177 traveling preachers. If we add these returns to the Conferences above named there is exhibited a total gain of 550 traveling preachers and 117,326 members. These Conferences earnestly desiring to make known to your body their condition and necessities elected representatives under the form and directions for electing delegates. They will be present, and will ask admission as members of your body. This question rests wholly with you, and yet we deem it proper to say that if in your wisdom any mode for their legal admission can be found, such action would greatly advance the interests of the churches in the localities represented.

Near the close of the last General Conference authority was given to the Bishops "to organize among our colored ministers for the benefit of our colored members and population" one or more Mission Conferences and to define their boundaries. Subsequently on the same day the General Conference defined the Delaware and Washington Conferences by names and boundaries. The rule of discipline requiring a probation of ten years was so far suspended as to allow the Bishops to organize into annual Conferences such colored local elders as had traveled two or more years under Presiding Elders, and were properly recommended. Under this authority, the Delaware Conference was organized July 28, 1864, and the Washington Conference, October 27, 1864. They now contain 101 ministers, and 26.487 members and probationers. This action of these Conferences was hailed, by our colored ministers and membership, with great joy, and has, we believe, been productive of much good. The ministers are becoming familiar with the mode of conducting business, and many of them are rapidly improving. At their recent sessions, they elected representatives to this body, according to the forms of the Discipline for electing delegates. Whether these representatives should be admitted, you alone have authority to decide. In our judgment, the success of this work demands all the encouragement which the General Conference can properly give.

Not only has the Church been greatly extended by the organization of Annual Conferences, but with devout thankfulness we record that the Divine blessing has been given in large measure to our pastoral work. The number of members and probationers has increased from 923,394 in 1863 to 1,146,081 in 1867, being an addition of 222,687, or the largest increase which has occurred, with a single exception, in any quadrennium in the history of the Church. Part of this has arisen, as before stated, from the progress of the work Southward, where a large number of those who had not been able to secure our services previously gladly welcomed our arrival among them; yet by far the largest part of the increase has been by conversions.

The material interests show an addition equally remarkable. The number of church edifices has increased from 9430 to 11,121—being an addition of 1691, or an increase of about eighteen per cent in four years. The value of churches in 1863 was $20,830,554, and in 1867 it had swelled to $35,885,439—showing an increase of $15,054,885, or more than seventy per cent in four years.

In the same period the increase in the number of parsonages was 717, and the increase in value was $2,571,145—making a total increase in the estimated value of Church property in four years of $17,626,000. By turning to the minutes of 1857 it will be seen that the total value of Church property was then $17,908,184—thus showing that in the last four years the addition to our Church property was nearly equal to its value for the first ninety years of our history.

Part of this increase may have been caused by the general rise in estimated prices, and part by the erection of new churches; but the greatest proportion probably by substituting for primitive edifices those of more commodious size and of costlier structure.

The last General Conference were pleased to direct the bishops to appoint a committee of preachers and laymen who should designate "to what objects and in what proportion the money raised as Centenary Connectional Funds should be appropriated." This committee met at Cleveland, Ohio, February 22, 1865, and its action has already been placed before the General Conference. It was found practically, however, that our people generally preferred local objects to connectional ones. Hence, while some noble donations were made to the Mission House, to the general educational fund, and to the Irish and German funds, the larger part of the contributions were given to colleges and seminaries, and for the erection and improvement of church edifices and parsonages. The religious services were attended with more than ordinary interest, and in many places there were signal manifestations of Divine mercy. The aggregate amount of the contributions for general and local objects is reported by the Central Centenary Committee at $8,397,662. That portion which is for the general educational fund and for the children's fund is under the direction of the General Conference, and will require appropriate action.

We are happy to say that the educational interests of the Church have been greatly prospered during the last four years. Many of our institutions, which were deeply embarrassed, have been relieved from debt. The endowment of others has been increased, and the general interest in the cause of education has been strengthened and extended throughout the Church.

Our theological schools are reported to be in a prosperous condition. The oldest of them, removed from Concord, is now known as the Boston Theological Seminary. It has been but partially organized in its new abode, but liberal friends are rallying around it, and it promises to take a high rank among similar institutions. The Garrett Biblical Institute has erected a beautiful memorial hall known as the Heck Hall, thus honoring the name of the Christian lady who was first to urge the establishment of Methodistic public worship on our shores. The chair made vacant by the death of Dr. Dempster has been filled by the trustees, on the nominations of the bishops by the election of Miner Raymond, D. D. In all its arrangements this institution is in a state of great prosperity. To these has been added by the munificent liberality of Daniel Drew, Esq., of New York, a third institution known as the Drew Theological Seminary, and located on a beautiful tract of land at Madison, New Jersey. A liberal charter has just been obtained from the Legislature of that State, placing the Seminary fully under the control of the General Conference. We invite your attention to a careful consideration of the question whether the guardianship of these institutions, having, as they do, for their object the education of the ministry, is sufficiently assured to the Church.

There is, we think, less tendency to the multiplication of collegiate institutions than during the former periods of our Church history, and there is a growing disposition to more thoroughly endow and sustain those which have been founded. Several new seminaries have been established in different parts of our work, and generally, we think, under favorable auspices. We trust, however, that they will not be multiplied beyond the absolute necessities of the localities; or beyond the means and disposition of the Church to sustain them. In the liberal patronage of our colleges and seminaries we recognize the strong purpose of the Church to provide for the education of its youth. It is our imperative duty to watch over and to train those committed to our care, that they may grow up attached to the doctrines and to the usages of Methodism.

The publishing interests of the Church, we are glad to say, are in a prosperous condition. The reports of the book agents, both at New York and Cincinnati, show a very large increase in the amount of sales during the last four years. For specific details we refer you to the reports of the agents, which have already been presented. With improved facilities and with an increasing demand for our publications, we anticipate that the future will show a much greater enlargement.

The periodical press continues to be an element of great power. Its issues are prized, and the information diffused tends to foster an enlightened piety. We hope the day is not far distant when in every family our Church papers will be found.

Our Sunday schools show an increase in the number of children, amounting to 241,819, being some 18,000 more than the addition to our membership. The conversions reported also exhibit a large advance. New publications have been issued from the press, local libraries have been enlarged, and an increased interest has been awakened in the modes of instruction. The formation of Sunday school teachers' institutes has added to this interest, and has been of great service to the cause. How far additional encouragement should be given to this department of labor is worthy of your careful consideration.

The tract report shows an increase both in collections and disbursements. A number of new tracts have also been added to the list. While much has been done, we think it worthy of your consideration whether there is sent a systematic agency for the distribution of tracts as the interests of this department require.

The receipts of the treasurer of the Missionary Society show an unparalleled increase during the past quadrennium. Notwithstanding the centenary contributions called forth in another direction the liberality of our people, notwithstanding heavy drafts were made in the earlier part of it for the Christian and Sanitary commissions, and in the latter part for the Church Extension and Freedman's Aid Society, yet so deep and abiding is the interest in the cause of missions that the contributions have more than doubled. The largest receipts of any previous quadrennium was from 1860 to 1864, amounting to $1,153,041. Those from 1864 to 1868 are $2,457,548, an increase of $1,304,507. Yet so many fields have been opened, and so urgent have been the calls that the treasury is now in debt.

Our foreign missions are generally in a satisfactory condition. In the oldest of these, the mission in Liberia, the progress has been slow, yet it is thought there has been more of an aggressive spirit manifested than during any previous period. The future also seems more hopeful. As the condition of the colored population in this country is improved, the emigration to Africa will be of more intelligent and enterprising men. The demands of commerce, the call for skillful mechanics and artisans to develop the resources of that country, and for teachers to educate the youth must bear to their shores those who will impart a spirit of increased enterprise.

In conformity with the provision made by the last General Conference, the Liberia Annual Conference, with the concurrence and approbation of the missionary secretaries, and the bishop having charge of the work, elected Rev. J. W. Roberts as missionary bishop for Liberia. He visited this country and was ordained and set apart for that work by Bishops Janes and Scott, at New York, in June, 1866.

Our mission in China is progressing steadily. Not content with occupying the province of Tookien, our missionaries have entered that of Kiangsio, and have planted a mission in its capital, Kinkiang, heretofore unoccupied by any Christian missionary.

The extent of the empire the advance of European civilization along its coast and up its highways, the revolution of ideas and institutions which is constantly and rapidly going forward, and the protection secured both to missionaries and their converts by treaty stipulations] mark China as the grandest field for Christian missions which the earth affords. We may add that the increasing commerce and facilities of communication between our Pacific coast and the opposite shore increases our responsibility. We suggest that provision be made for this organization of an annual conference in our China field during the next quadrennium.

Our India mission field, we have every reason to believe, has been cultivated by faithful laborers, with fruits worthy of their diligence and devotion. In the protection afforded by the government, the patronage of the English population, and the accessibility of the native mind, our expectations have been realized. The value of our foundations, the number of our stations, the vast population which we have undertaken to evangelize, together with the certainty of steady and the hope of rapid progress, though matters of congratulation, should impress us with a sense of our responsibility and the necessity of an enlarged beneficence. While the difficulties to be overcome in winning the natives to Christ should inspire us with patience in waiting for results.

In Bulgaria, though but little fruit has yet been apparent, much faithful labor has been expended. Rev. Mr. Flockem has worked admirably in his field upon the Danube, while more recently Dr. Long, the superintendent of the mission, who had been engaged in co-operation with others in the translation and publication of the Holy Scriptures in the Bulgarian language, has entered upon our mission work at Constantinople. We hope a foundation is being laid for an extensive work in the future.

In Germany our missions organized some ten years since into an annual Conference have steadily been gaining in every element of strength. The Tract House in Bremen has issued tracts and papers both in explanation and defense of our plans, but chiefly to promote experimental piety. The Theological Institute, formerly at Bremen, and over which Rev. J. F. Hurst, D. D., presided, has been removed to Frankfort-on-the-Main, a generous donation of $25,000 having been made by J. T. Martin, Esq., of Brooklyn, for the erection of an edifice in that city.

Our missions in Scandinavia, like those in Germany and Switzerland, have resulted from the desire of persons converted in America to proclaim the Gospel in their fatherland. The work is more promising at present than at any former period in its history, and new fields of labor are already white unto the harvest.

In our South American missions there has been considerable enlargement. New doors have been opened, and calls for missionary labor are abundant. We have already stated the reasons why an Episcopal visit has not been made to that mission. A visit, however, is contemplated whenever arrangements can be made for the ordination of such licentiates in the employ of the mission as may be found by virtue of their talents and services entitled to orders, and when the other interests of the mission shall make it desirable.

In 1866 the Bishops recommended the establishment of a mission for the benefit of the Spanish-speaking population in our Southwestern territories and in Mexico. The General Mission Committee made an appropriation for its commencement, and a missionary was selected and was prepared to enter upon his work. But owing to the financial embarrassments of the missionary treasury, resulting from the failure of the receipts to equal the appropriations, the Missionary Board considered it unwise to commence it at present.

Provisions were made at the last General Conference for the organization of the Church Extension Society, and in the following winter a charter was obtained from the Pennsylvania Legislature. Rev. Samuel Y. Monroe, D. D., was appointed by the Bishop as the corresponding secretary. He entered upon his work feeling its importance, especially in view of the enlargement of our Church territory, and liberal plans and arrangements were devised. The work was laid out, possibly, upon too large a scale, and in attempting to carry out these plans his health became impaired, and his sudden and mournful death interrupted and greatly embarrassed the operations of the society. More recently Rev. A. J. Kynett, D. D., of the Upper Iowa Conference, was appointed to succeed him, and he entered vigorously upon his allotted work. The society, although not accomplishing all that its friends hoped for or desired, has been the instrument of great good. It is now upon a safe foundation, with the prospect that its means of usefulness will be greatly enlarged. Some changes may be needed in its constitution to fit it more fully for the work contemplated.

The overthrow of slavery has made accessible for purposes of education and Christian nurture the colored population of the South. Commissions having this end in view were speedily organized, and our Church heartily cooperated in the work. But when the leading denominations withdrawing from the undenominational commissions established societies of their own, and especially when the establishment of schools in connection with our missions became necessary, a Freedmen's Aid Society was organized in connection with our own Church. It has now been in operation about a year and a half. During the first year fifty-two teachers were employed, and about 5000 scholars were gathered into the schools. At the present time the society has seventy-two teachers with about 7000 scholars. The education of the freedmen is a question so important to themselves, and so vital to the future of the Church as well as of the country, that it demands as it no doubt will receive your earnest consideration.

On the twenty-seventh of May, 1864, the General Conference adopted the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the Board of Bishops be requested to consider and report to the General Conference of 1868 what changes should in their judgment be made in the boundaries of the annual Conferences to promote the highest welfare of the Church.

The Bishops are deeply impressed with the importance of the subject thus referred to them, and have given to it that careful consideration which it demands. Heretofore, in fixing the boundaries of Annual Conferences, too little regard has been paid to the civil divisions of the country. Nor is this surprising, since in those instances in which the ecclesiastical organization preceded the civil it necessarily defined its limits by mountains, streams, or other topographical landmarks. This primitive mode of designation was naturally retained after its necessity ceased. In the formation of new Conferences from old ones the usual practice has been to divide by an arbitrary line without much regard to State or county lines. Hence it has happened that in the formation of Conferences, towns and cities have been divided, and yet one of the largest States in the Union has no Conference wholly within its boundaries, while, on the other hand, some Conferences embrace parts of two, three, and even four States within their limits.

In view of the influence of local legislation upon the corporate wealth of the Church, the benefit of ascertaining from year to year our ecclesiastical statistics within the several States, and the advantages of city, country, and State organizations in carrying on the various benevolent operations and other collateral interests of the Church, such as the distribution of the Word of God, the promotion of the cause of temperance, and the erection of institutions for higher education, it is our deliberate judgment the General Conference might promote "the highest welfare of the Church" by readjusting Conference lines.

We know that there are serious, though we think not insurmountable, obstacles in the way. One of these is legal, growing out of corporate interests secured to certain Conferences by name. It is presumable, however, that in nearly all such cases, if not quite, in the readjustment, all pecuniary damage might be avoided through that love of equity and spirit of kindness which characterize all truly Christian bodies, and that enlightened legislation, which would never refuse its aid, when necessary, to a just and satisfactory settlement.

Another difficulty which has been regarded as formidable by some is even less serious. We refer to those strong personal attachments which years and decades of common toil and suffering, and pleasant business relations, and delightful social and religious communion have contributed to mature. Probably in most cases the separation of chief friends could be avoided, and even should this be found impracticable, it can not be doubted that men of God would cheerfully sacrifice personal feeling upon the altar of religious duty. Nor would such sacrifice be without compensations, not the least of which would be the acquisition of new fields of labor without the disadvantages of transfer.

There may be more serious difficulties in certain cases, nor would we urge a conformity to State lines where it is found impracticable without the loss of important interests, though we think such cases will rarely be found.

Should the General Conference be in harmony with us on this subject, we shall be prepared to give suggestions and furnish data to aid in the proposed readjustment.

In arranging for our centenary services the General Conference was pleased to express a desire that all branches of Methodism might unite in those services. In this spirit of fraternal union the bishops heartily sympathized, and in 1865 some resolutions were adopted expressive of our views and of our desire to see Methodistic families more intimately associated. As the General Conference had extended to the Methodist Episcopal Church in Canada, and to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, with some conditions, the rule previously existing as to the British Wesleyans, we deemed it proper to say to the annual conferences that on the question of receiving ministers from other branches of the Methodist family we should not object to

SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1868

Republican National Ticket.

FOR PRESIDENT,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

We copy the following telegram from the New Orleans Republican of the twelfth instant:

CHICAGO, May 11, 1868.

Delegates from the South, white and colored, have just been admitted to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church now in session here by a vote of 199 to 15. There was great enthusiasm manifested when the result was known.
J. P. NEWMAN.

This is as it should be. Though by the action of the last General Conference they could not claim admittance as a right, yet we never doubted that they would be admitted. Their experience in and knowledge of the Southern work was absolutely needed by the Conference to legislate successfully for our great work in the Southern States.

Moreover, they should be admitted from courtesy, for having left pleasant fields of labor in the North for this important but unpleasant work of re-establishing our Church in the South.

Fair.

A fair for the benefit of the Sixth Street Methodist Episcopal church will be held in the hall at the corner of St. Charles and Polymnia streets, commencing Monday, the 25th instant, and lasting four days. The public are earnestly requested to attend.

Rev. Mr. Brown, of Washington, D. C., will preach in the Ames Methodist Episcopal church, corner of St. Charles and Calliope streets, Sunday morning, at eleven o'clock, and in the evening at half-past seven.

DENTISTRY.—We take great pleasure in recommending all who wish an excellent job of dentistry done to Dr. B. F. Wright, 153 Customhouse street, between Dauphine and Burgundy streets. Dr. Wright expects to start North soon to spend the summer, and up to the time of his departure will attend to the work of all who call on him at ONE-HALF of his heretofore moderate rates, if paid in greenbacks. As he is a workman of the best order, we do not see why his rooms should not be crowded during the time he remains in the city, even though it is hard times.

Cleaning the Canals.

At the meeting of the Board of Aldermen last evening a communication was received from the Mayor urging upon that body the necessity of immediate action on that important subject. A resolution was subsequently introduced by Alderman Dewees providing for the employment by the City Surveyor of two hundred men to perform this work. Only two members voted for this resolution—Aldermen Dewees and Tucker. Aldermen Burbank and Kellogg voted against the resolution, and President Graham gave his vote against it also, thus defeating the proposition. One of the gentlemen who voted against the resolution did so because he regarded it to be unsafe to disturb the contents of the canals at this season of the year; another because he did not know where the city could obtain the money to pay the men employed in cleaning the canals; and another because he has no faith in the efficacy of canals, and does not concur in the theory that epidemics can be averted by clean streets, clean gutters, or clean canals.

An intelligent farmer from Northern Indiana passed through Nashville, Tennessee, a few days ago, on his way to look at the lands in Cumberland county. He says that a number of his neighbors have their attention turned to Tennessee immigration. The very sort of men wanted, and Tennessee would like to see them coming in by the thousand.

The Cost of Impeachment.

The Democratic papers have been figuring up the cost of impeachment, and estimate it to be $400,000. They do not, however, attempt to show how much the neglect to impeach the President a year ago has cost the country. The people will no doubt think the trial cheap at any price if it results in the removal of Andrew Johnson.

Official Vote of Louisiana.

We have received at last the official vote of Louisiana by telegraph from Washington. General Grant reports to the Speaker of the House of Representatives that the vote is as follows: For the constitution, 66,152; against, 49,759; majority, 16,413. The vote for H. C. Warmoth for Governor will be about the same as that for the constitution. Our last published table, compiled from the best unofficial sources at hand, gave 17,800 majority for the constitution.

JOHNSON'S CLEMENCY.—The President has lately pardoned John H. Sims, one of the most notorious counterfeiters in the country. Government detectives were on his track for over a year, and were engaged a longer time in hunting down the gang of which he was the head. He was sentenced for ten years, of which he has served but one. It cost the Government about twenty thousand dollars to arrest and convict this man.

Editorial Correspondence.

CHICAGO, May 9, 1868.

ARRIVALS.

It will be gratifying to their members to learn that Rev. Messrs. A. Ross, H. Green, J. Gould, and E. Green arrived in Chicago in safety and have comfortable lodgings. They had a pleasant journey, and arrived on the evening of the sixth instant. Our Bishops and the members of the General Conference who know them received them with great kindness, and it is proposed to hold a public meeting at which Brother Ross will preach, and Father Green and the other brethren will relate their experience, and especially tell what the Old Church under God has done for them. This will be an interesting occasion, a full account of which I will send to the ADVOCATE.

Also the Rev. Brother Honey and lady have arrived. He is delegate elect to the Republican National Convention.

BISHOP JANES' REPORT.

In accordance with usage and a resolution of the General Conference, Bishop Janes made a luminous, comprehensive, and deeply interesting report on his visit as fraternal delegate to the British Wesleyan Conference. The report was apparently extempore, but concise in terms and replete in information. He freely criticised the economy of Wesleyan Methodism, and yet awarded it much praise. But I must not attempt even a synopsis of his admirable report, but will send it complete, as it appears in the Daily Advocate.

DELEGATES FROM THE SOUTH.

As I intimated in a former letter, the admission of delegates from the South has excited a profound interest, and has been discussed with great ability on both sides. This is now the eighth day since my credentials were offered by Dr. Foster to the Conference, yet the question is still under discussion, and the popular excitement it has caused is unabated. Indeed, such is the interest here felt in whatever pertains to the South that it is no marvel that the hesitancy to admit us at once has awakened so much public feeling. And my readers may ask, What is the difficulty? Some, as Messrs. Foster and Curry, think they see a great constitutional barrier in the way. On yesterday Dr. Curry made a lengthy speech, strong and admirable (in style and spirit), against our admission. The famous old debater mounted the platform where the bishops sit, and for an hour and a half instructed and delighted the auditory, but did not convince the Conference. He assumed that the General Conference has the power to create bodies of ministers other than annual conferences, but exercising the functions of such conferences, and yet not allowed the right of representation. In his opinion such are the conferences in the South, and therefore he should not vote for the admission of their delegates.

The next morning he was answered by the venerable Dr. George Peck in an hour's speech, which was much applauded, coming from a man who had been an actor in the great events which Dr. Curry had quoted as precedents. Dr. Peck was well qualified to speak advisedly as he did, and with convincing force. His pertinent point was that Bishop Asbury created the Genessee Conference without the authority of the General Conference, and that the delegates of that Conference were admitted by the next ensuing General Conference.

But the most logical, commanding, and exhaustive speech for our admission was made by Dr. Haven, President of the Michigan University. He assumed that there could be none other than full and regular annual conferences in this country, entitled to all the rights of the same, and appealed to the history of the Church for the correctness of the assertion. With an incisive logic he examined the law by which the Conferences of the South were organized, and showed that the restriction was designed to be only temporary, and should now be removed.

Could the vote have been taken then, we would have been admitted by an overwhelming majority, but the tendency to speech-making is beyond all precedent. The subject is fruitful of debate. There is on the one hand, that positiveness of restriction on the General Conference, not to deny an annual conference of "one delegate," and on the other hand, that indefiniteness in the terms of the law creating the Southern Conferences, as to cause even wise men to differ, and provoke the most earnest debate. There are also precedents which may be quoted, both for and against our admission. The debate has thus far absorbed the attention of the General Conference, and it is understood that Messrs. Slicer, Peck, Foster, and McClintock are to speak on Monday next, when the debate will be closed, the vote taken, and we admitted by a handsome majority.

LAY DELEGATION.

On the 15th instant the friends of lay delegation hold a convention in Chicago, the object of which is to present to the General Conference and the Church such facts as will justify the admission of laymen into the legislative branch of our Church. It will be a gathering of the most influential laymen of our Church, whose loyalty to the Church and munificent donations to her enterprises are their crown of glory. In the Conference there is a powerful influence in favor of the movement, and it can not be doubted that an advanced step will be taken; but we may hope for even more than this.

EPISCOPAL DISTRICTS.

There is quite a disposition in the Conference to district the Church into episcopal districts, that is, to assign one or more States to a Bishop for a term of four years. This plan has many advantages, and it can be constitutionally adopted. I have no doubt that it will meet with much favor. Under the present system of episcopal visitations, our bishops have but little time to visit other than the seats of annual conferences. At present, four of our nine Bishops reside within a day's ride from New York to Baltimore, and the homes of four others can be reached in a journey from Chicago to Cincinnati. The far West demands and has a right to the presence and labors of a bishop, and if the plan is adopted, we may hope for the residence of one of our Bishops in New Orleans, which would be of immense advantage to the Church in the Southwest.

REV. GEORGE W. WOODRUFF.

I heard this able preacher of Christ in the Centenary church last evening. The announcement of his name filled the house to overflowing, and for fifty minutes the vast audience sat entranced by the power and directness of a sermon well prepared and admirably delivered. The subject was how Christ puts strength into weak souls; and in unfolding this thought the preacher mortified us by exhibitions of our weakness, and then cheered us by assurances of Divine strength. The people wept over the former, and rejoiced over the latter.

Twenty-four years ago I heard Mr. Woodruff preach his first sermon in New York, in the Second Street German Methodist church, from the text "He that being often reproved and hardeneth his neck shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy." Since then he has grown to the full measure of a man, and is one of the most effective preachers in the Church, and is now assistant secretary of the General Conference.

Impeachment.

The country is surprised to witness the disposition manifested on the part of certain Senators to delay the rendering of their judgment upon the bold bad man who fills the Presidential chair. These gentlemen overestimate their importance in the public eye. They imagine because of the present importance which attaches to their votes in the great and exciting issue now before them that it is to themselves personally that the importance belongs. They forget that the people of the United States regard them only as their agents, and that they are anxious simply to see if they will perform their duty; that the verdict of the people is already made up; and that if they, as Senators, fail in their duty and disappoint the just expectations of their constituents, the people will surely include them also in the final verdict of condemnation which they will pass upon the President and his coadjutors in his work of infamy and treason. Their votes upon impeachment are not of nearly as much importance to the people as they are to themselves.

It is a mere question of fact as to violation of a particular law by the President. It is not a bit more solemn or grave than if it concerned the transgression of any other functionary. Andrew Johnson is no more in the eye of the law than any private man. If he has violated the law it is not the President but the man who is the criminal. If he is pronounced guilty, Andrew Johnson simply steps out of the chair which he has disgraced; the President remains seated there, and the country is no more endangered by excitement resulting therefrom than it would by the removal of any other official.

If Senators could witness the deep anxiety, the suspense which clouds the hearts of their friends here in the South, if they could know and feel what we do, if every slight turn of the screw given by that bad man at Washington to his end of the screw had driven the other end through unfathomable depth of misery among them, as among us, destroying rights, liberties, and lives, they would learn the meaning of that maxim enunciated we think, by Macaulay, that what may be an excusable and even harmless, though erroneous exercise of judgment in a private citizen can be a gigantic and terrible crime in a great ruler; and learning this they would deal with Andrew Johnson accordingly.

A chat with several of our rural friends this week places us in possession of the glad tidings that the crops are doing well.—Bayou Sara Ledger.

Child Murder in Christian Countries.

Do not start in surprise as if this were news to you. All have seen it, and some who will read this are guilty of this offense. We do not say that they put an end to their children's existence by sudden acts of violence. On the contrary, they generally kill them gradually, by exposure. Go out upon the streets in cold winter weather and notice the people as they pass. Here are strong, robust men; see how they are dressed. The cold searching wind seeks in vain to penetrate their thick warm clothing. And here are mothers also clad in garments nearly as warm. But look at the delicate little girls that accompany them. See how they are shivering with cold. Their shoulders may be well protected, but their lower limbs are scarcely covered from sight. A pair of thin linen or cotton drawers, and thin cotton stockings, with light shoes constitutes the protection of their lower limbs from the cold. Often, too, there is no covering for an inch or two between the drawers and stockings. Sometimes very small boys are treated in a similar manner. We saw such a scene a few months since in crossing the ferry to Algiers. The mother was well loaded with clothing. The father had on a heavy overcoat, and thick, heavy woolen pants. No doubt underneath these he wore woolen drawers and warm woolen socks, and his feet and legs protected further by good substantial boots. Yet he, a large, vigorous man, talked of its being so cold and uncomfortable. They were accompanied by a child four or five years old, finely dressed, save the lower part of its body. Its legs could scarcely be called dressed. There was the bare flesh exposed for two or three inches between the stockings and the other garments. The little creature seemed to be suffering much with cold. What great offense had so small a child committed that it should be thus tortured by its parents? Before practicing such severity why do not the parents try their method of punishment upon themselves? Why does not the father, who is full of strength and vitality, go out on the streets for a few hours in the piercing cold, with nothing but linen or cotton drawers to shield his lower limbs from the cold? Why, the very thought makes him shiver. He would consider himself a sure subject for rheumatism, neuralgia, pneumonia, or other ills. How, then, can he consent to allow his delicate little child to be thus treated? Why will he kill the child that God has given him. But we are told that the child is thus dressed by its mother, and not with the special desire to kill it, but simply to follow the fashion. Indeed! What a reasonable answer! But will God justify the mother in killing her child to follow a fashion? She must be able to see that if the little one lives through such treatment its constitution will be broken down, and it be a sufferer for life. But often during such barbarous treatment the child is suddenly taken away by disease. The poor mother then talks of the afflictions of Providence and of being reconciled thereto. Providence had nothing to do with the death of her child. She killed it. And now she goes through the farce of weeping and mourning over it. Not perhaps a farce to her. We would not be so hard-hearted as to make this assertion. For her sin, to a great extent, has been one of ignorance. But to the one acquainted with the case and with the laws of life and health, it almost appears that the drops of grief are but "alligator tears," and the mourning all a farce.

When will "that good time coming" arrive, that mothers will esteem the life and health and comfort of themselves and children of more importance than the following of the senseless caprices of fashion? That time is coming.

Want of Candor.

NEW ORLEANS, May 9, 1868.

MR. EDITOR:

In conning over a subject upon which to write, we have thought it wise to call attention to the almost universal want of candor among our citizens. What we think we do not speak, even if our opinion is asked. It seems as if we always endeavor to suit everybody by coinciding with their views, when, if we gave utterance to what our sense of right and justice prompted, we would in very many cases give the lie to our expressed opinion about things.

Now, what are the consequences of this want of candor? First, it creates distrust in your fellows, as they too often know from sad experience that the opinion you give is not the right one, but only a sham to curry favor. Second, it makes us afraid to speak when we ought for fear some one may take umbrage, and in some way injure us pecuniarily. We say pecuniarily, for truth compels us to admit that this is in too many instances the real cause of this want of candidness. And finally, it virtually makes us hypocrites in the fullest sense of the word. We pretend to be giving friendly advice or caution, when at the same time we may have, on account of jealousy, been waiting for an opportunity to crush the very one who has appealed to us. This is establishing as true the motto, "Truth must not be spoken at all times," a motto which is injurious as well as dangerous in a community like ours—composed for the most part of people who look only at results, without looking after the causes which produce results.

To outward appearances we are friends, in each other's company, visiting, uniting in social circles, but for all that wary lest perchance some expression may fall from our lips which may place us under the ban of Dame Rumor. Is this friendship? If so, New Orleans is an exception to other cities of the world which define friendship to be something actually different. If this state of things exists here much longer, we, though "neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet," can safely predict that we will soon have every man's hand against us, and ours against every one else. We have heard certain sermons heartily commended in the hearing of the preacher, and within five minutes after as heartily condemned. Why need the commendation to have been given if it was not considered due?

Many a young person might have been checked in embarking into certain measures had candor and naked truth been spoken by the one to whom they went for advice; but no, their ability to succeed has been flattered, and too late they have found out that everything "that glitters is not gold."

Let us change this practice, and if friends or friendly be so indeed and in truth, giving our opinions only when asked for, and not pretending to do so while we are really telling what is neither more nor less than a falsehood.

For our own part we would rather have the plain unvarnished truth told us by one we may ask it of, be it for or against us, than get it from another on a subject we have never named to him. In our own mind it creates distrust and rankles in our bosom, and thus we judge of others.

"How I admire the man who speaks his mind,
And panders to no party, scheme, or sect;
Who unto all is generous and kind,
Yet fraud and error ever doth reject.
Who holds no false, deceptive view of life,
Nor teaches what in practice he forgets;
Who would not wage a war of petty strife,
Nor yet express unmeaning, vain regrets;
Who is too proud to act a servile part,
Or lend himself a tool in others hands;
Who fears no foe nor deep designing art,
But by himself alone undaunted stands;
Who shuns deceit as he would pestilence,
And thrives and triumphs by his own good sense."

Respectfully,
FREDERICK K. HYDE.

New Publications.

THE METHODIST.

The Methodist of May 2 is a very valuable paper. It gives a full statement of the different branches of Methodism, with numbers, etc. Also, a brief history of all the sessions of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a synopsis of the business transacted.

It publishes, too, the history of the movement on lay delegation from 1828 to 1868, with latest resolutions of Annual Conferences. Besides the above it contains a full list of the delegates to the General Conference now in session. This will be a valuable paper for reference.

The Methodist is published at No. 114 Fulton street, New York. Subscription price $2 50 per year in advance.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR.

This is a monthly illustrated magazine, and by the many recommendations it has received from lecturers, clergymen, bishops, and others we feel safe in pronouncing it one of the best magazines published for children.

It is published by T. S. Arthur & Son, Nos. 809 and 811 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

The price of the same is only $1 25 per year, or five copies for $5. A specimen copy can be obtained for ten cents.

The new volume commences with July.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

There will be commenced in the Herald of Health for June, 1868, a series of valuable articles entitled "The Care, Education, and Rearing of Children," written by Mrs. Horace Mann, Miss Elizabeth P. Peabody, Mrs. Dio Lewis, Mrs. Isabella B. Hooker, Frances Dana Gage, Grace Greenwood, Elizabeth Oakes Smith, Sarah Jane Hale, Mrs. C. M. Severance, etc., and they will be continued through the volume. The first paper will be by Mrs. Horace Mann, on "The Care of Young Children." The second paper will be by Grace Greenwood, entitled "The Physical Education of Girls." Miss Peabody, who has devoted so much of her life to the education of very young children, has prepared a paper on the "Kindergarten Schools of Germany." Other papers will follow in succession, and the series will be exceedingly valuable to all who are interested in the improvement of the race. To secure the full series, subscriptions should be sent in at once. Price, $2 a year: sample numbers, 20 cents. Address Miller, Wood & Co., 15 Laight street, New York.

THE CRETAN.

We have just received the first copy of this monthly paper, published by the Greek Relief Committee. The men at the head of this worthy enterprise are worthy the confidence of all. Besides helping the Cretans directly, they wish also to influence Congress to recognize the Provisional Government of Crete. Perhaps we can not help the cause better than by publishing their circular letter, which has been sent to many persons:

GREEK RELIEF COMMITTEE,
Office 20 Bromfield street.
Boston, February 17, 1868.

DEAR SIR: The Cretan Relief Committee of Boston makes its second appeal to you and others.

The dreadful struggle between Christians and Mohammedans is still going on in Crete. Turkey, conscious that the issue will settle the question of her ability to maintain her foothold in Europe, has gathered fresh hordes of barbarians from all parts of her empire, and let them loose upon the island. They have overrun and ravaged all the open country; burned the villages; desecrated the churches; destroyed the gardens; cut down the olives, the oranges, and lemons; pulled up the vines; and as far as possible trampled out all plants and green things fit for human food.

The Christians after gallant resistance (which has cost the Turks several armies), being without cavalry or artillery, have retreated to the mountain fortresses with their women and children and their flocks. There, in the language of Job, "they are wet with the showers of the mountains, and embrace the rocks for shelter."

European war vessels have taken off more than forty thousand women, children, and old men in a famishing condition, and landed them upon the neighboring islands or shores of Continental Greece. There they are dependent upon the charities of the world, for the Greeks are too poor to feed such a multitude.

Meantime the Cretan men, with a few heroic women, refusing to leave the island or submit to any terms short of independence, uphold the flag of the Cross upon the mountain ranges, and defend with desperate courage the interior of the island. They say that with God's grace to give them the martyr's spirit, and with man's help for their exiled wives and little ones, they will fight out this last battle between Christianity and Mohammedanism until either the Cross or the Crescent shall utterly disappear from the island.

Shall we not continue to give them our sympathy, our prayers, and our help?

Our chairman has visited Greece and Crete since our last appeal to you, and seen with his own eyes that all we had heard of the sufferings of the people is true.

Food and clothing were distributed not only among the exiles but even in the mountains of Crete, and at this moment thousands of mothers and children are kept from cold and nakedness by garments made by the hands of American women.

The material effects of this distribution have been great, the moral effects marvelous. Your sympathy has not only sustained the fainting hearts of women, but invigorated the arms of fighting men.

The committee urge you to express upon every occasion your sympathy for the Cretans, so as to swell that rising voice of public opinion which calls for intervention on the part of Christian governments. If the sentiments of the American people were manifested in the foreign policy of the government it might hasten materially the day of intervention. Not only would American sailors be allowed to join those of Russia, France, and Italy in saving women and children, but American public opinion would have its just weight in the balancing of power, and in sustaining right against might. If you can only express your sympathy by words, you will help. If you can do more the committee will be happy to receive your contribution, and will guarantee its safe application. A contribution in churches would give both moral and material aid.

A Sponge, and What It Is.

"What is sponge made of?" said George, gasping, snuffing, and winking under his Croton bath. No one near could tell him; and the maid suggested that he "needn't be askin' such foolish questions, but just be still and get washt," and so the matter ended.

Now listen, little Georgie, and I will tell you what a sponge is.

The very sponge which washes your face was brought up from the bottom of the ocean, and was a part of a living animal. For a long time sponges were supposed to be plants. Messrs. Agassiz and Gould, in 1848, called them so; but later observations have decided them to be animals; and they are placed in the class protozoa, the class most resembling plants.

When first found in the water their appearance is very different from this which you now see. This is the skeleton only, the part corresponding to our bones. When this was a complete living thing, deep down under the ocean, it was covered all over the outside and filled in every one of these holes with a soft substance something like the white of an egg, and this was like our flesh. It was fastened tightly to a rock, and its color was a dull bluish black on the upper side, and a dirty white below. It was formerly supposed to be a plant, because it was always fast in one place, but for other reasons it is decidedly an animal. All through this mass is a regular circulation like our blood and food. It has been seen to absorb nutritious matter, that is to eat or rather to drink. You see all over its surface orifices or holes; these communicate with each other throughout. Into the largest of these, called pores, the sea water is constantly entering, and out of the small ones, called vents, it is regularly spouted out, and it doubtless finds in this sea water minute animals which serve it for food, and increase its bulk.

And this strange animal produces others like itself; I will tell you how.

From the soft part a little globule is seen to float off—and after moving about a while very briskly here and there, as if looking for a place, begins to be seen the more solid skeleton (what we have here); the soft part increases, and so it grows; not very slowly either, for the divers find it at the end of three years large enough to bring away.

To get these sponges from the bottom of the ocean furnishes occupation for a great number of people. One thousand men are busy in the Grecian Archipelago alone; and thousands besides, with many hundred boats, are engaged in the Gulf of Machri, on the Barbary coast and elsewhere; so that in many villages there from May to September, the best diving time, only old men, women, and children can be found.

The finest kind is brought from the Ægean sea. At daylight there in the summer time, when the weather is pleasant—for it requires smooth water—the boats, each with six or eight men and one pair of oars, all leave the shore and proceed to where the water is eight or ten, or even thirty fathoms deep; for those found in shallow water are very inferior.

Here they stop, and the divers prepare to descend. Each one puts a hoop around his neck, and to this fastens a bag in which the sponges are put as they are gathered. In very deep water the diver uses a rope with a heavy stone to it. He sinks the stone to the spot he intends to reach, and thus holds the rope steady, which he uses to assist himself in coming up again to the surface.

After being busy thus till noon they return to some of those pleasant little nooks which abound on the shores of the Archipelago, to prepare what they have gathered fit for sale.

The first thing is to press out the soft part of the animal, and then to bleach the remainder in the sun; so they beat them and stamp on them, and trample them till there is no more life left. The skeleton part is then washed and spread in the sun until it is quite clean, and grows to be this dull yellowish color, then it is packed in bags and sent to market for sale—sent to all parts of Asia, Europe, and America, and used mostly for washing purposes.

Little Georgie's mother seeing a very nice piece, bought it for his use; and I think he will value his gift and look on it with more pleasure since he knows now what it is and where it came from.

We change the political character of the Senators elected for the district of Calcasieu, Lafayette, and St. Landry, on the authority of a prominent Republican who knows them personally, and assures us that they are Radicals. The rebel press of this city claim that a recount of the votes indicates the election of Anthony Sambola, Democrat, in the Second Senatorial District, instead of Colonel Campbell, Republican. There is no reason to presume that Mr. Sambola will take his seat in the Senate of Louisiana.

It is understood that the gentlemen who have been elected to the State Senate will all be invited to subscribe to the test oath before participating in the deliberations of that body.

The new license law of Massachusetts contains some peculiar provisions. Though framed by the opponents of prohibitory legislation, it recognizes the principle of prohibition in a section enabling a majority of the voters in any town or city to prevent the granting of licenses to sell liquor to be drunk on the premises, the only exception being in the case of inkeepers who may, notwithstanding such vote, be licensed to sell to their guests. A license may be forfeited by the sale of liquor to "an intoxicated person," to a minor, or to any one who by excessive indulgence "injures his health, exposes his family to want or violence, or the town or city of his settlement to expense." Provisions are made for entrance upon the premises of the licensee at any time, for the purpose of analyzing his liquors, the license to be forfeited in case they prove "impure or of bad quality." He is not to sell between midnight and five o'clock in the morning or on Sunday. A license is to cost from fifty to one hundred dollars, and the licensee must pay in addition a percentage upon the gross amount of his sales. Governor Bullock kept the act in his possession until it became a law without his signature, and then returned it with a message to the effect that he would not resist the will of the people, but that he deemed the measure unwise.

Some two weeks ago a vigilant policeman of Cincinnati detected a set of treasury thieves smuggling three hundred barrels of whisky into a house on the canal. The fraud was so plain that government officials seized the whisky, which has been confiscated and advertised for sale. But has the house in which the whisky was stored, and which contained secret cisterns, been seized? Has anybody been arrested? Has any effort been made to find the parties guilty of the fraud? There was a canal boat loaded with whisky and having several men on board. It would not be difficult to find where that whisky came from and who were the principals to the fraud; yet this has not been done, nor, so far as we know, has it been attempted. We are informed the whisky was removed to the building on the canal in order to save a distillery above, which is valued at $75,000, from confiscation. Where are the treasury detectives? Where is Mr. J. T. Worthington, the head of the "secret force" in these parts.—Cincinnati Gazette.

e Conference acting, if they desired, to do on the same rule. We submit this action to your body, and ask that if it be approved such change shall be made in the Discipline as shall remove all ambiguity.

The subject of Lay Representation will come before your body both by resolution of Annual Conferences and by petitions and remonstrances from the membership. It will doubtless receive your careful consideration.

We respectfully ask your attention to the inequalities connected with the supernumerary relation. In some cases ministers who desire to engage in secular employments or agencies, or to travel abroad, seek for and receive a supernumerary relation without an appointment. In a few instances the relation has been sought for the purpose of serving churches connected with other denominations, thus retaining a claim for an appointment and possibly for support should there be failure elsewhere. What legislation is necessary to guard againt these evils and to define more clearly the amenability of those who reside beyond the limits of their Conferences is for your decision.

Confiding fully in your wisdom and in your devotion to all the interests of the Church, we submit to your careful review our administration during the last four years.

We have received and are prepared to lay before your body an address to the General Conference from the British and the Irish Wesleyan Conference. You will also be favored during the progress of your deliberations, with the presence of honored brethren who will come as delegates from the British Wesleyan Conference, and from our sister Conferences in Canada. They will be cordially welcomed as brethren beloved, and we hope to be profited by their presence and ministrations as on other occasions we have been by their colleagues who have borne to us the salutations of their churches.

"Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory in the Church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen."

The Tongue of Fire.

The Queen of England, in her recently published diary, occasionally refers to some particular sermon which has pleased her fancy or touched her heart. We quote her Majesty's gracious allusions to a couple of distinguished Scotch clergymen whom not only queens and princes, but scholars and critics, might well afford to praise.

OCTOBER 29, 1854.

"We went to the kirk as usual at twelve o'clock. The service was performed by the Rev. Norman McLeod, and anything finer I never heard. The sermon, entirely extempore, was quite admirable; so simple and yet so eloquent, and so beautifully argued and put. The text was from the account of the coming of Nicodemus to Christ by night—St. John, chapter viii. Mr. McLeod showed in the sermon how we all tried to please self, and live for that, and in so doing found no rest. Christ had come not only to die for us, but to show us how we were to live. The second prayer was very touching. His allusions to us were very simple, saying, after his mention of us, 'bless their children.' It gave me a lump in my throat; as also when he prayed for 'the dying, the wounded, the widow, and the orphans.' Every one came back delighted; and how satisfactory it is to come back from church with such feelings! The servants and the Highlanders all were equally delighted."

OCTOBER 14, 1855.

"To kirk at twelve o'clock. The Rev. J. Caird, one of the most celebrated preachers in Scotland, performed the service, and electrified all present by a most admirable and beautiful sermon, which lasted nearly an hour, but which kept one's attention riveted. The text was from the twelfth chapter of Romans and the eleventh verse: 'Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord.' He explained in the most beautiful and simple manner what real religion is; how it ought to pervade every action of our lives; not a thing only for Sundays or for our closet; not a thing to drive us from the world; not 'a perpetual moping over good books;' but 'being and doing good,' letting every thing be done in a Christian spirit.' It was as fine as Dr. McLeod's sermon last year, and sent us home much edified."

Not to speak of the Queen's genuine motherliness of feeling evinced by that "lump in her throat" at hearing blessings invoked on her children, it is pleasant to know the good lady's English admiration of her Scotch divines. Those temporary "court preachers" preached to a better purpose than the obsequious flattery which once characterized "court preaching." They chained the attention, stirred the heart, and "sent home much edified" the chief lady of Europe. Perhaps these sermons, so working on the Queen's heart may, through her, have worked a little (though we fear a very little) on the harder heart of that great government of hers, which knows how to be just to England and unjust to the rest of the world. The Queen's journal proves her to have grown so thoroughly in love with the Scotch preachers whom she heard and the Scotch people whom she met that we wish she would now, in like manner, make a trip to Ireland, listen to the Irish clergy, and open her heart to the Irish people; from both of whom, we venture to say, she would hear such a tale of oppression and misery as more than ever, would bring a "lump in her throat."

But we quote the Queen's journal for the sake of its royal testimony to extempore preaching. This is the only royal preaching. All sinners from sovereigns to beggars are more moved by it than by the best of Sunday morning essay reading. One sermon preached from a brief is worth three sermons read from a manuscript. We hope Congress will lay as high a tax on sermon paper as on whisky—in conformity with Napoleon's rule that the vices should be taxed high. Forty pages of sermon paper are a grave cloth which a fastidious pulpiteer wraps round the Gospel to bury it alive.

Dr. Chalmers, and a few great men like him, have proved themselves able to make even a manuscript burn and glow in the pulpit. But as a general thing the life which dwells in a minister's manuscript is like the voice which dwelt in Balaam's ass—it requires a miracle to make it speak.

The habit of reading from the pulpit tends not only to make the delivery dull, but to make the preaching metaphysical. If a sermon is full of hair-splitting it is certain to have been written word for word beforehand. If it is to contain a whole body of divinity accurately stated, it must of course be nicely fashioned at the pen's point. But if it is to be (as it generally ought to be) on some plain, homely, and vital truth of the gospel why should it be written? The pen oftenest preaches to the head, the tongue to the heart. A lady lately said to us in speaking of a distinguished clergyman who had made himself a bond slave to a manuscript, "He has a great faculty for preaching religion out of people." The same minister is one of the most expert of theologians. But if he had been less addicted to discussing theological distinctions and more addicted to emphasizing practical religious duties, he might have made himself an excellent extemporaneous preacher. If Paul himself had tried to put into his sermons all the theology which he reserved for his Epistles, he, too—though the chief of the apostles—would have been reduced to a manuscript, suffered a second thorn in the flesh, and become in "his speech" still more "contemptible." Imagine Christ delivering the sermon on the Mount from a bundle of papyrus!

Many of our theological seminaries seem to forget that their students are to become not merely theologians but orators. The chill of the seminary has quenched the natural fire out of the tongue of many a young man who might have been a speaker, but who becomes only a reader. A minister said to us, mournfully, "I charge upon the seminary where I was trained the entire crushing out of all my early tendencies to extemporaneous speech." Now and then a strong man, in spite of such early training, achieves a signal success in revolting against his manuscript—as for instance, the Rev. Dr. Storrs, of Brooklyn, whose recent practice of extemporaneous preaching is the delight of his congregation. But most ministers are never able to leave their seminary. It follows them, clings to them, and governs them through life. They throw off the yoke but the stiff neck remains. It is as happy a day when a minister gets rid of his manuscript, as when a church gets rid of its debt.

A lawyer does not read, but speaks. Why then should not a minister speak, not read? Is a sermon a piece of closer reasoning than a law argument? On the contrary, the majority of sermons considered as efforts of reasoning are not equal to the majority of law arguments. If a lawyer can get along without writing, certainly a minister ought to do the same. Where is the fault? It is not in the minister's avocation: it is not in his constitution; it is simply in his training. The oratorical gift may be fairly presumed to belong in a respectable degree to every man who feels within himself a strong predisposition toward either the pulpit or the bar. The difference between a young lawyer and a young clergyman is this: the one fans his native spark by speaking; the other smothers it by reading. Let a young minister whose temptation is toward manuscripts tumble an armful of them into his study-fire. They will brighten his eyes with a sparkle that will flash new lustre upon all his subsequent preaching. The devil is fond of written sermons, but trembles at the living voice.

The Queen's delight in hearing the Rev. Norman McLeod (who had not then won his spurs in divinity) reminds us of the equal delight with which the same preacher was heard by a friend of ours who lately returned from Europe. "I would give a hundred dollars," said our friend—"yes, two hundred—if I could hear another sermon which would do me as much good as the only one I ever heard from Dr. McLeod. I shall never forget it. He did not look at a scrap of paper from beginning to end. But he took hold of me with a grip which he has never let go to this day." That is the right kind of praise which the right kind of a sermon elicits from the right kind of a hearer.

The true ideal of a minister is one whose sermon is in him, and not in front of him; who preaches, not reads; who allows no "middle wall of partition" in the shape of a pulpit barricade to arise between him and his congregation; who has less desire to utter rounded sentences than to utter glowing truths; who is willing to put on the gauntlet of rough English for the sake of striking terrible blows.

An occasional Sunday spent in New England makes us feel that the Yankee pulpit is altogether too reserved in its speech. But the Christian ministry everywhere needs the "tongue of fire."—The Independent.

Mr. David Maynard, of Clinton, Massachusetts, has had a stiff finger which has been troublesome for some time past, and he at length concluded to have it amputated at the second joint. Two of the most distinguished surgeons of Clinton were summoned, who, after administering ether to the patient, proceeded with the operation, but when they had finished their job it was ascertained that the wrong finger had been cut off, the doctors amputating the second instead of the third. Mr. Maynard is a young man, and the blunder is a serious one for him, as he is now left with only two good fingers on that hand.

That is not so bad as the mistake of amputating the wrong leg, which was done on several occasions during the war.

Chapin says, "I should not like to preach to a congregation who all believe as I believe. I would as soon preach to a basket of eggs in their smooth compactness and oval formality."

CUPID AND CAMPASPE.

BY JOHN LYLY, †1600.

"Cupid and my Campaspe played
At cards for kisses; Cupid paid;
He stakes his quiver, bow, and arrows,
His mother's dove, and team of sparrows;
Loses them, too; then down he throws
The coral of his lip, the rose
Growing on's cheek (but none knows how);
With these, the crystal of his brow,
And then the dimple on his chin;
And these did my Campaspe win;
At last he set her both his eyes—
She won, and Cupid blind did rise.
O Love! has she done this to thee?
What shall, alas! become of me?"

EX-UNITED STATES SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Pursuant to notice a large concourse of ex-officers, soldiers, and sailors assembled in the Mechanics' Institute last evening. Captain C. H. Merritt called the meeting to order, nominating Captain William George as President, who, on motion, was unanimously elected.

He explained the object of the meeting to be to choose delegates to the Chicago Soldiers' Convention, and other business.

On motion, Quartermaster Sergeant Wm. H. Green was unanimously elected secretary.

Colonel Badger moved that a committee of five be appointed by the Chair to draft resolutions, which was adopted. The following were appointed:

Colonel A. S. Badger, chairman; Captain E. C. Morphy, Captain H. Von Werthern, Sergeant I. Hall, and Lieutenant I. Haughton.

On motion a committee of seven was appointed to select delegates, to be submitted to the meeting for ratification.

Committee—Captain C. H. Merritt, Chairman; Sergt. E. Lussey, Corp. H. C. Dibble, Capt. S. B. Packard, Private H. Heidenhain, Sergeant J. G. Seldon, Lieutenant T. A. Martin.

The Committee on Resolutions then submitted the following:

WHEREAS, A call has been made upon the Union ex-soldiers and sailors by the National Union Executive Committee to send delegates to the Union Ex-Soldiers' and Sailors' Convention, to be held at Chicago on the eigthteenth and nineteenth instant, and

Whereas, The ex-officers, soldiers, and sailors of Louisiana, viewing with extreme interest the political affairs of our country, and believing that those who periled their lives for the preservation of the Union should exert an influence in the Government thereof, be it therefore

Resolved, That we consider Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, the great impediment to reconstruction and supporter of rebellion, and we indorse the House of Representatives in impeaching him.

Resolved, That we look forward with hope to a conviction and speedy removal of Andrew Johnson by the Senate, and the inauguration of Benjamin F. Wade, the champion of American freedom, for the unexpired Presidential term.

Resolved, That we hold that the conviction of Andrew Johnson is essential to save the republic from anarchy and despotism.

Resolved, That we ex-officers, soldiers, and sailors of Louisiana in mass meeting assembled declare our choice for President to be a soldier who has led the armies of the United States to victory.

Resolved, That we heartily indorse General U. S. Grant for our next President, in whom we put our trust to put down all rebellion and restore the country to peace and prosperity.

Resolved, That our delegates to the Chicago National Soldiers' and Sailors' Convention are hereby instructed to sustain and use all their influence and power to secure the nomination of General U. S. Grant at the approaching Presidential election.

Which were unanimously adopted as expressing the sense of the meeting.

The committee also presented the following series of resolutions:

WHEREAS, A few members of the so-styled Union Army and Navy Officers' Association did name delegates to the Chicago National Soldiers' and Sailors' Convention, far more numerous than the members present at their meeting, to represent the Union ex-soldiers and sailors of Louisiana in said convention; and

Whereas, A number of these delegates so named are prominent Copperheads and adherents to "my policy," and do not represent the sentiments of the great mass of ex-Union soldiers and sailors now residing in Louisiana; therefore be it

Resolved, That we the ex-Union officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines of Louisiana, in mass meeting assembled, do repudiate the action of said few and protest against the admission of any delegates to the Chicago Convention upon the credentials from said association.

Resolved, That the delegates chosen by this mass meeting are the true representatives of the principles of the great mass of Union ex-officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines in Louisiana.

Resolved, That we denounce all affiliation with Copperheads and rebels as suicidal, and inconsistent with the great principles for which we fought during the late rebellion, and that such ex-officers, soldiers, or sailors who are adherents to "my policy" have disregarded the principles of freedom, right, and justice.

The Committee on Delegates submitted the following names:

| Lieut C Glover, | Gen W L McMullen. |
| Sergt T Spaulding, | |

It was moved and carried that the portion of the resolutions referring to the impeachment of Andrew Johnson be telegraphed to Senator Henry Wilson in the United States Senate as the unanimous sentiment of the ex-soldiers and sailors of Louisiana in mass meeting assembled.

Messrs. Fox, Dibble, and Boyd addressed the meeting, speaking closely to the subjects before the meeting.

Colonel H. J. Campbell then presented a series of resolutions referring to the murder of Captains Twitchell and Meadows in the interior of the State by rebels. The resolutions are as follows:

Resolved, That this meeting has heard to-night with the profoundest emotion the tidings of the recent assassination by rebel bands of Captain M. H. Twitchell, late United States army, and of W. R. Meadows, an ex-soldier, both late members of the Constitutional Convention.

Resolved, That this is but one of millions of illustrations of the anarchy, misrule, and brutal outrage which have characterized the Johnson government in the rebel States, and that the blood of these martyred brethren cries aloud to Heaven for the punishment of the arch-defender of assassination and rebellion, Andrew Johnson, who apologized for the murderers of the thirtieth July.

Resolved, That we tender to the bereaved relatives and friends of the murdered patriots our sincere and deepest sympathy with them in their sad affliction.

Resolved, That those who sympathize with the families of deceased, wear a piece of crape, as tribute of respect and mourning to the martyred patriots.

Adjourned.

THE CONVENTION TAX.

TO COLLECTORS AND SHERIFFS.

Further Extension of Time for Settling with the Auditor.

BOARD OF REGISTRATION,
State of Louisiana,
New Orleans, April 29, 1868.

At a regular meeting of the Board, held on Wednesday, April 29, 1868, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the time for the final settlement of the Convention taxes by the Tax Collectors and Sheriffs throughout the State with the Auditor of Public Accounts be and is hereby extended to the first day of June, 1868.

By virtue of the foregoing resolution, I hereby notify all Tax Collectors and Sheriffs throughout the State to continue to collect the Convention tax up to the first day of June, 1868.

The Tax Collectors and Sheriffs are further instructed that they will be held responsible for a rigid enforcement of the ordinance adopted by the Convention January 4, 1868 (which is hereinafter published for the information of all concerned), exacting a penalty for non-payment of said tax.

The Convention remitted all penalties up to the twentieth day of March, 1868, and from that time the penalty will be exacted in all the parishes where the tax rolls were ready at that date, and thirty days after the tax rolls were completed in the other parishes the penalty will be exacted.

S. B. PACKARD, Chairman.
R. C. RICHARDSON, Secretary. ap30 15t

ORDINANCE.

SECTION 1. Be it ordained by the Constitutional Convention of the State of Louisiana, That the sheriffs and tax collectors of the State, except of the city of New Orleans, Orleans Right Bank, and parish of Jefferson, shall give notice to the taxpayers of their respective parishes to pay the tax of one mill per cent, levied by ordinance of the twenty-fourth December, 1867, by this Convention; and thirty days after service of said notice, those who shall not have paid the tax due by them shall be considered in default, and the sheriffs and tax collectors shall exact an additional tax from such persons of twenty-five per cent upon the sum due by them for the first default, and an additional tax of ten per cent to be computed on the original tax for every subsequent thirty days said persons shall continue to be in default, up to the date of the final settlement.

SEC. 2. Be it further ordained, That the sheriffs and tax collectors of the city of New Orleans, Orleans right bank, and parish of Jefferson, shall by public notice in one newspaper published in their parish call upon all taxpayers to pay the tax levied by the ordinance of December 24 above mentioned, and all persons who shall not have paid the amounts due by them on account of said tax ten days after the publication of the above required notice shall pay an additional tax of twenty-five per cent on the original tax, and an additional tax of two and a half per cent on the original tax of one mill per cent for every subsequent ten days said persons shall continue to be in default.

SEC. 3. Be it further ordained, etc., That immediately after the taxpayers shall have been put in default by the expiration of the thirty or ten days, as the case may be, given in the notice required by the first and second sections of this ordinance, the sheriffs and tax collectors throughout the State shall proceed to seize and sell after ten days notice property of the delinquent taxpayers, movable or immovable, sufficient to pay the original tax, all additional taxes herein levied, and costs.

Adopted in Convention at the city of New Orleans this fourth day of January, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty-eight.

HONORS TO THE DEAD.

HEADQUARTERS GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
Adjutant General's Office,
446 Fourteenth street.
WASHINGTON, D. C., May 5, 1868.

General Orders No. 11.

I. The thirtieth day of May, 1868, is designated for the purpose of strewing with flowers, or otherwise decorating the graves of comrades who died in defense of their country during the late rebellion, and whose bodies now lie in almost every city, village, and hamlet churchyard in the land. In this observance no form of ceremony is prescribed, but posts and comrades will in their own way arrange such fitting services and testimonials of respect as circumstances may permit.

We are organized comrades, as our regulations tell us, for the purpose among other things, "of preserving and strengthening those kind and fraternal feelings which have bound together the soldiers, sailors, and marines who united to suppress the late rebellion." What can aid more to assure this result than by cherishing tenderly the memory of our heroic dead, who made their breasts a barricade between our country and its foes. Their soldier lives were the reveille of freedom to a race in chains, and their deaths the tattoo of rebellious tyranny in arms. We should guard their graves with sacred vigilance. All that the consecrated wealth and taste of the nation can add to their adornment and security is but a fitting tribute to the memory of her slain defenders. Let no wanton foot tread rudely on such hallowed grounds. Let pleasant paths invite the coming and going of reverent visitors and fond mourners. Let no vandalism of avarice or neglect, no ravages of time testify to the present or to the coming generations that we have forgotten as a people the cost of a free and undivided Republic.

If other eyes grow dull, and other hands slack, and other hearts cold in the solemn trust, ours shall keep it well as long as the light and warmth of life remain to us.

Let us then at the time appointed, gather around their sacred remains, and garland the passionless mounds above them with the choicest flowers of spring-time; let us raise above them the dear old flag they saved from dishonor; let us in this solemn presence renew our pledges to aid and assist those whom they have left among us a sacred charge upon a nation's gratitude, the soldier's and sailor's widow and orphan.

II. It is the purpose of the Commander-in-Chief to inaugurate this observance, with the hope that it will be kept up from year to year while a survivor of the war remains to honor the memory of his departed comrades. He earnestly desires the public press to call attention to this order, and lend its friendly aid in bringing it to the notice of comrades in all parts of the country in time for simultaneous compliance therewith.

III. Department commanders will use every effort to make this order effective.

By order of JOHN A. LOGAN,
Commander-in-Chief.
N. P. CHIPMAN,
Adjutant General.

OFFICIAL ELECTION RETURNS.

We publish below special orders No. 104, from headquarters Fifth Military District, announcing the result of the election on the adoption of the Constitution and for members of Congress. It will be seen that the number of votes cast against the Constitution was 48,739, instead of 49,739, as reported by telegraph. The majority is, therefore, 17,413, which is only about four hundred less than the figures shown by our tables:

1. The returns of the election held in the State of Louisiana on the seventeenth and eighteenth days of April, 1868, in pursuance of special orders No. 55 and 63, current series, from these headquarters, having been made to the Commanding General, in accordance with law, the result of the said election upon the question of ratification or rejection of the Constitution framed by the late Convention, and for members of the House of Representatives of the United States, is hereby announced for the information and guidance of all concerned:

Votes cast—For the Constitution, 66,152; against the Constitution, 48,739; majority for the Constitution, 17,413.

For members of Congress the returns of votes cast exhibit the following:

First Congressional District—J. Hale Sypher, 9630; A. W. Walker, 6885; H. N. Frisbie, 26; James Mann, 7; scattering, 28.

Second Congressional District — James Mann, 6784; Simon Jones, 5634; S. Straight, 202; A. P. Field, 133; Joseph P. Newsham, 10; J. Q. A. Fellows, 4.

Third Congressional District—Joseph P. Newsham, 18,257; J. Q. A. Fellows, 9084; James Mushaway, 1088; R. C. Wickliffe, 1077; James Mann, 85; Simon Jones, 26; A. W. Walker, 8; S. Straight, 2; A. P. Field, 2; Scattering, 4.

Fourth Congressional District—Michel Vidal, 14,166; John E. King, 9482; C. L. Ferguson, 3303; R. B. Stille, 1687; A. Duperiere, 2.

Fifth Congressional District—W. Jasper Blackburn, 9391; Ross Wilkinson, 7138; P. J. Kennedy, 6286; R. H. Snyder, 2; Eugene Tisdale, 2; Scattering, 1.

The following named persons having received the greatest number of votes cast in their respective districts, are hereby declared duly elected members of the House of Representatives of the United States, viz:

J. Hale Sypher, first district; James Mann, second district; Joseph P. Newsham, third district; Michel Vidal, fourth district, and W. Jasper Blarkburn, fifth district.

Certificates of election will be issued upon application at these headquarters.

By command of Brevet Major General R. C. Buchanan.

THOMAS H. NEILL,
Major Twentieth Infantry, Brevet Brigadier General U. S. A., Acting Assistant Adjutant General.

Anecdotes of General Grant—His Habits.

"A Woman" writes to the Philadelphia Press, from Ashland, Pa., the following stories about General Grant:

During the first three years of the war I was actively identified with the Western branch of the Sanitary Commission, and had abundant opportunity of judging for myself in regard to the character and ability of many of our generals. During the entire campaign of the opening of the Mississippi it was my privilege to aid in caring for our noble patriots, both in hospitals and camps, and I have been for weeks together where I saw General Grant frequently, heard his name constantly, and never did I hear intemperance mentioned in connection with it. Facts are stubborn things. I will relate a few of the many that came directly to my knowledge: In the winter of 1862-3, when the army arrived at Memphis, after long, weary marching and trials that sicken the heart to think of, two-thirds of the officers and soldiers were in hospitals. General Grant was lying sick at the Gayoso House. One morning Mrs. Grant came into the ladies' parlor very much depressed, and said the medical director had just been to see Mr. Grant, and thought he would not be able to go any further if he did not stimulate. Said she: "And I cannot persuade him to do so; he says he will not die, and he will not touch a drop upon any consideration." In less than a week he was on board the advance boat on his way to Vicksburg.

Again, a few months after, I was on board the headquarters boat at Milliken's Bend, where quite a lively gathering of officers and ladies had assembled. Cards and music were the order of the evening. General Grant sat in the ladies' cabin, leaning upon a table covered with innumerable maps and routes to Vicksburg, wholly absorbed in contemplation of the great matter before him. He paid no attention whatever to what was going on around, neither did any one dare to interrupt him. For hours he sat thus, until the loved and lamented McPherson stepped up to him with a glass of liquor in his hand, and said: "General, this won't do; you are injuring yourself: join with us in a few toasts, and throw this burden off your mind." Looking up and smiling, he replied: "Mac, you know your whisky won't help me to think; give me a dozen of the best cigars you can find, and, if the ladies will excuse me for smoking, I think by the time I have finished them I shall have this job pretty nearly planned." Thus he sat: and when the company retired, we left him there, still smoking and thinking, not having touched one drop of liquor.

When the army lay around Vicksburg during that long siege, the time that tried men's souls, I watched every movement it was possible for me to do, feeling almost certain that he would eventually succumb to the custom, alas! too universal among the officers. I was in company with a gentleman from Chicago, who, while calling upon the general, remarked, "I have some very fine brandy on the boat, and if you will send an orderly with me to the river I will send you a case or two." "I am greatly obliged," replied the general, "but I do not use the article. I have a big job on hand, and though I know I shall win, I know I must do it with a cool head. Send all the liquor you intend for me to my hospital in the rear; I don't think a little will hurt the poor fellows down there."

At a celebration on the twenty-second of February, before the surrender of Vicksburg, while all around were drinking toasts in sparkling champagne, I saw General Grant push aside a glass of wine, and taking up a glass of Mississippi water, with the remark, "This suits the matter in hand," drink to the toast, "God give us Lincoln and liberty; let us fight for both."

Yellow Fever in South America.

Advices from Peru state that yellow fever is raging with a terrible fatality in that republic. A correspondent from Lima says that "one month more of fever in Callao, and that city will be depopulated." There are from 60 to 100 deaths daily in that city, of not more than 10,000 inhabitants. Ninety per cent of the cases are fatal. The same authority makes the following statements of the condition of things in that afflicted locality:

The only steps that have been taken by the authorities toward disinfecting the place has been the burning of some gunpowder and tar barrels, but with no result whatever. The thermometer stands at eighty-seven degrees during the day in the shade, and eighty-five degrees during the night. There is a continuous dull heavy gray leaden appearance in the atmosphere, which, when penetrated by the sun's rays, gives to all things a lugubrious aspect, which does not fail to have its effect upon those who up to the present have escaped the disease. There is no panic among the people; perhaps it would be better if there was. They would then leave the place and seek safety from the fever in the lower range of the Andes, where the temperature of zero can be obtained in three days travel from Lima. But, on the contrary, there appears to be a settled, sullen indifference on their part, caused no doubt by the extreme lassitude that the present suffocating heat has produced upon the system, and that in a great measure predisposes a person to infection. In Lima the fever is reaping a full harvest, but not to the extent of Callao. The daily papers pretend to publish statements of its progress, but with a very commendable idea that it would not do to publish the whole truth, they keep the daily mortality at from thirty to forty, just about one-third of the actual number. Scarcely a night passes that I do not hear, three or four times, the tinkling of the bell that always announces in Catholic countries that the last sacraments are being conveyed to some dying person, and I reside in a part of the city that is considered the most healthy. As if to add to the horrors of our present situation, the ice contractor, Mr. Thorne, has not been able to keep up the supply, and we are without that indispensable article. Hundreds of lives could have been saved if there had been ice on hand.

THE MAILS.—The twenty-two thousand people of Galveston, and the two hundred thousand people of the cities and plains of Western Texas have two mails per week. No people of equal number, and occupying so direct means of communication with the outside world, are so isolated from the rest of mankind. Even the telegraph refuses to work more than half the time on account of atmospheric interruptions, and from other causes not explained.—Galveston Republican.

A STATE WITHOUT STATE TAXES.—Under this head the Chicago Tribune asserts that if ordinary prudence prevails in expenditure, the Illinois Central railroad, in consideration of the transfer of the land grant to that corporation, will now defray all the ordinary expenses of the State government, and in six or seven years' time, when the State debt shall have been wiped out, principal and interest. During 1867 the amount of earnings paid by the road was $444,000.

LATEST BY TELEGRAPH.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, May 8—House.—A number of private bills were considered, after which Mr. Stevens reported his bill admitting Arkansas. He considered the Constitution unexceptionable, and did not desire to debate the bill.

Several members complained that they had never seen the Constitution.

Mr. Baker, though favoring the provision, doubted the power of Congress to enforce the stipulation regarding suffrage. He said business of this kind should not be done hurriedly, nor should the bill pass until the Constitution was examined.

Mr. Stevens said there was not a clause in the Constitution objectionable to a man who favored freedom. Mr. Stevens demanded the previous question, which was seconded, and the main question was ordered. Mr. Stevens having the floor yielded it for fifteen minutes to Mr. Woodward, who, never having seen the Constitution, declined speaking.

Mr. Beck stated that if time was allowed him he would demonstrate that the Constitution never received the votes of the majority of the people of Arkansas. A few days would show this, therefore they rushed the bill through. Mr. Beck said the franchise and educational clauses were particularly obnoxious.

The bill finally passed, 110 to 32, Messrs. Baker, Loan, Spalding, and Williams of Pennsylvania voting nay.

Mr. Schenck introduced a resolution declaring the officers recently elected in South Carolina to be the provisional government of that State. Referred to the Reconsuction committee.

Mr. Paine reported a bill admitting South Carolina, which was ordered to be printed.

A full Cabinet meeting held to-day.

The Radicals have nominated Sayles J. Bowen, city postmaster, for mayor.

The Republican Congressional committee has advices from Florida that the Constitution is adopted and the Legislature Radical.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—General Meade telegraphs Grant that both branches of the Georgia Legislature are Radical; also, that the Florida election had passed off quietly, resulting in the adoption of the Constitution, and that both branches of the Legislature are Radical.

$50,000 of fractional currency was shipped to New Orleans during the past week.

Securities held for the National Bank circulation and deposits $380,250,000. National Bank circulation $299,750,000.

Neither house in session to-day.

General Rousseau and several members of Congress visited the President to-day.

Ex-President Buchanan is dangerously sick.

The Star says: "The bears in impeachment stock made a tremendous rally last evening, and for a time had it all their own way at the leading hotels and other points where transactions in the market are carried on. The friends of the President, who were supposed to know a thing or two, were betting wild on acquittal—two to one, ten to one, one hundred to one. Later at night the bulls rallied and swept everything, and professed to be particularly anxious to find any party willing to bet on acquittal. To-day it has been a see-saw operation, the bears being uppermost one hour and the bulls the next. Should the excitement increase in the ratio it has for the last forty-eight hours, by Tuesday it will be up to fever heat and something over. Undoubtedly Tuesday will be the most exciting day in Washington since the surrender of Lee's army."

The Express says: "There is a good deal of talk about town to-day upon the probable result of the impeachment trial. The public pulse is somewhat excited, but the preponderance of opinion seems to be upon the side of acquital. A gentleman, usually well informed upon current topics, and who has opportunities of knowing whereof he speaks, stated this afternoon that Senators had disposed of the question of Stanton's removal, and will make question about the President's right to make the removal."

"The point about which they are now concerned is in relation to the ad interim appointment and the letter of authority to General Thomas. The Senators who are satisfied that there is no cause for conviction by reason of Mr. Stanton's removal are also well satisfied that the Executive had the right to make the ad interim appointment. It is not believed, however, that this point will be considered a high crime or misdemeanor."

The above paragraphs are telegraphed to illustrate the utter uncertainty regarding the result.

In a well authenticated conversation, the President is represented to have said in answer to a question regarding Bingham's suggestion that he would not obey the Senate's mandate: "Why should I not obey if the forms of the Constitution are complied with? If Senators do not act justly they are responsible not to me but to the people. The people who hold the sovereign power have placed me over one department, with all its duties and responsibilities, and have placed monitors, also, with grave responsibilities, and with a constitutional power to try impeachment and render judgment thereon. If they misuse or abuse this, or any other power, the people alone can hold them to account. The people having empowered them to try im peachment, it is not for the party tried to set aside their judgment. The people alone can settle with their agents for any abuse of their great trust."

WASHINGTON, May 11—Impeachment Court. The following is the form proposed by Judge Chase and adopted by the Senate:

"Mr. Senator—How say you; is the President, Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, guilty of a high misdemeanor or crime as charged in this article?"

The Senator shall respond "guilty" or "not guilty" only.

At ten o'clock the Senate will proceed to consider the articles. Each Senator having fifteen minutes will continue the session to a late hour.

The following is gathered from several sources, and may be regarded as reliable:

Messrs. Grimes and Fessenden went through the list of charges, arguing against conviction.

Messrs. Trumbull and Henderson were partly through when the expiration of their fifteen minutes stopped them. They argued in favor of acquittal.

Messrs. Howe and Sherman argued acquittal on the first, but conviction on the second.

The Radicals acknowledge that it will be very close, but they insist definitely that they have thirty-eight votes.

Only the six mentioned above of the fourteen doubtful Senators have yet spoken.

House—A joint resolution of the Ohio Legislature protesting against the reconstruction acts and instructing Senators and requesting Representatives to vote against such laws, was referred to the reconstruction committee.

A resolution directing the committee on the treatment of Union soldiers to inquire into the propositions of the Confederates for their relief was tabled—75 to 41.

A resolution to adjourn from the sixteenth to the twenty-first passed—68 to 67. This recess is for the Chicago convention.

The bill extending the charter of the city of Washington passed.

Mr. Stevens introduced the following:

WHEREAS, The people of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama have, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled an act for the more efficient government of the rebel States, passed March 2, 1867, and the acts supplementary thereto, framed Constitutions of State Governments, and which are Republican in form, and have adopted said Constitutions by large majorities of the votes cast at the elections held for the ratification or rejection of the same; therefore

Be it enacted, 1. That the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, and Alabama shall be entitled and admitted to representation in Congress as States of the Union when the Legislatures of said States respectively shall have duly ratified the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed by the thirty-ninth Congress, and known as article fourteen, upon the following fundamental conditions:

That the Constitutions of said States shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote who are now entitled to vote by said Constitutions respectively, except for such crimes as are now felonies at common law whereof they shall have been duly convicted; and no person shall ever be held to service or labor as a punishment for crime in said States, except by public officers charged with the custody of convicts by the laws thereof.

SEC. 2. That if the day fixed for the meeting of the Legislatures of said States by the Constitution thereof shall have passed before the passage of this act, such Legislatures may be convened within thirty days after the passage of this act by the President of the Convention which framed the Constitution of such State.

SEC. 3. That the first section of this act shall take effect when the President of the United States shall officially proclaim the due ratification by the Legislatures of said States respectively of article fourteen of the Constitution of the United States proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

This bill was made the special order for Wednesday, and to be continued from day to day until disposed of.

A bill was reported by the Reconstruction Committee removing political disabilities from some 200 citizens of North Carolina: passed—89 to 23—being over the two-thirds required for such legislation.

Mr. Stevens, with some disgust, in reply to remarks from the Speaker that they would probably be called to the bar of the Senate to-morrow, moved to adjourn to Wednesday, under remonstrances from those near him. Mr. Stevens withdrew the motion, and the House adjourned to twelve to-morrow.

The Western Union Telegraph Company has arranged to transmit direct from its office in the Senate gallery to all points in the United States and Canadas, and through the Atlantic and Cuban cables reached through its lines to Europe and the West Indies, the verdict of the Senate on the articles of impeachment simultaneously with its announcement in the Senate chamber. These dispatches are to be bulletined and furnished to the papers free of charge.

The Ways and Means Committee will report the general tax bill to-morrow. It continues the two dollar tax on whisky.

Presidential circles are very confident.

Senator Fessenden's speech is stated to have been remarkably fine. The Senate extended his time afterward.

To-night committed Senators spoke. No further doubtful Senators committed themselves.

11 P. M.—The speaking is still confined to committed Senators.

Mr. Morton, whom some considered doubtful, favors conviction.

Senate adjourned.

Messrs. Wilson, Conness, and Harlan spoke for conviction.

The vote will be very close, with the chances in favor of the President.

It is reported that General Howard has the brain fever.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—House—The Speaker laid before the House a communication from the General of the army submitting a statement of the votes cast for or against the State Constitutions as follows: North Carolina—for Constitution 92,590, against 71,820; South Carolina—for 70,758, against 27,288; Georgia—for 89,007, against 71,309; Louisiana—for 66,152, against 49,739; Alabama—for 69,807, against 1005. Referred to Committee on Reconstruction.

Mr. Schenck reported an internal tax bill. Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Schenck announced that he would bring up the bill soon after recess and push it to vote.

Pacific Railroad matters were discussed, and the House went into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Munger, referring to the resolution regarding Southern prisoners, tabled yesterday, said that he was prepared to prove that the Confederates had offered three times the value of medicines, to be carried by federal surgeons to the Union prisoners at Andersonville and other points. Adjourned.

Senate—After adjournment of the court, the Senate passed the bill extending the city charter.

On the motion to adjourn, Mr. Drake said he moved to adjourn over because he believed the Senators were not in a condition to attend to business.

Mr. Conkling asked what was the matter?

Mr. Drake said if the Senators could not see what was the matter it was useless for him to tell them. The whole country now was trembling in an agony of suspense. If, in view of the throes in which the country was now suffering, there were Senators here who were possessed of such composure as to be insensible to it, he envied them.

After further unimportant business the Senate adjourned to the usual hour.

The postoffice department to-day issued orders to restore the mails between New York and Philadelphia and Mobile and New Orleans to the route via Knoxville. They have been going for some months via Louisville.

The Court of Claims adjourned to the first Monday in June. Meantime Judge Charles C. Nott, of the court, is empowered to proceed to Charleston and Savannah to verify depositions in the cotton cases. The court announced the determination in these cases to take every precaution to secure the government against fraud.

The tax bill presented to the House to-day abolishes the offices of Revenue Agents, and Inspectors of the Revenue Department, and provides for the appointment of a supervisor for each judicial district of the country. The sole power of appointment and removal of assessors, collectors, and all officers of the Revenue Department, is given to the Commissioner, independent of the President or Senate. Whisky is taxed two dollars, the same as now. Tobacco tax is unchanged. Cigars are taxed ten dollars per thousand. Special taxes are considerably increased. Legacy taxes and the distribution of shares remain unchanged. Oils distilled from petroleum remain unchanged. At ports of entry the Commissioner designates a collector who has the whole charge of export warehouses. The tax on distilleries is very slightly increased.

The managers this morning claimed a majority of one, but Mr. Howard's delirium continued, and a Radical caucus was held at 11 o'clock, when it was determined to postpone. Should Mr. Howard recover, the managers express themselves still confident of conviction by Mr. Wade's vote. No doubtful Senator has given any public indication since yesterday.

Mr. Forney has resigned the secretaryship of the Senate.

A full cabinet meeting was held to-day, including General Thomas.

The White House was crowded with visitors to-day.

Senator Grimes concluded as follows: "Whatever may be my opinion of the incumbent, I can not consent to trifle with the high office he holds. I can do nothing which, by implication, may be construed into an approval of impeachment as a part of future political machinery. However widely, therefore, I may differ from the President respecting his political views and measures, and however deeply I have regretted and do regret the differences between himself and the Congress of the United States, I am not able to record my vote that he is guilty of 'high crimes and misdemeanors' by reason of these differences.

"I am acting in a judicial capacity under conditions whose binding obligations can hardly be exceeded, and I must act according to the best of my ability and judgment, and as they require. If according to their dictates the President is guilty, I must say so, if according to their dictates the President is not guilty, I must say so. In my opinion the President has not been guilty of an impeachable offense by reason of anything alleged in either of the articles preferred against him at the bar of the Senate by the House of Representatives."

Mr. Edmunds' speech decreases the chances of conviction on the eleventh article, which has been regarded as the Gibraltar of impeachment. Regarding the tenth and eleventh articles he expressed the opinion that they did not come within the Constitutional meaning of high crimes and misdemeanors.

From Europe.

LONDON, May 13.—Mail and telegraph accounts give promise of an unusually fine crop of wheat in the Black sea country.

VIENNA, May 13.—A bill guaranteeing trial by jury passed the lower house.

From Alabama.

SELMA, May 13.—Two men named Baker and Waller were brought here to-day in irons by the military authorities from Sumter county, charged with lynching the murderers of Binnes, who was killed in Marengo county some weeks ago.

The ladies held a large meeting here to-day, and appointed a committee to visit General Meade in behalf of the Eutaw prisoners.

Margaret R. Deas, Widow, etc., vs Mrs. C. D. Moncure and als, Children and Heirs of Henry Doyal, Deceased.

IN THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, for the Fifth Circuit and District of Louisiana, No. 3798.—By virtue of a writ of fieri facias, issued and to me directed by the above named court in the above entitled and numbered suit, and received by me on the sixth March, 1868, I have seized and taken into my possession, and will expose for sale at public auction to the highest bidder, on FRIDAY, the twenty-second day of May, 1868, at the hour of twelve o'clock noon, at the door of the courthouse of the parish of Ascension, in Donaldsonville, Louisiana, the following described property, viz:

A CERTAIN PLANTATION, situated on the left bank of and fronting on the Mississippi river, in the parish of Ascension in this state, formerly known as the "Hard Times," but now known as the "Southwood" plantation, and bounded on the upper line by the line of the parish of Iberville, and on the lower line by lands now or formerly belonging to S. R. Tillotson, and measures about twenty-eight and a half arpents front on the Mississippi river by eighty arpents in depth between diverging lines, with the opening thereto belonging; together with all the buildings and improvements thereon, as well as all the cattle, live stock, implements of husbandry, etc., of whatsoever kind or nature thereon or thereunto belonging; twenty-three Mules, four Carts, thirty-five Plows, twenty thousand new Bricks and a lot of Corn in barrels.

Seized to satisfy, as far as may be, the plaintiff's claim herein, viz: Five thousand four hundred dollars, together with interest and all costs, as per judgment.

Terms of Sale—This being the second adjudication, the above property will be sold at twelve months' credit, the purchaser being required to furnish good and sufficient joint and several security, with preference and special mortgage privilege on the property sold, bearing interest at the rate of eight per cent per annum, and to pay in cash an amount to cover all the costs of suit amount to five hundred dollars ($500) more or less.

Costs of deed, bond, recording, internal revenue stamps, etc., at expense of purchaser.

Carefully Revised; with the German Directions and Terms translated into English, and the Pedal Part printed on Separate Staff. The whole edited by W. T. BEST.

"This is a good edition of a standard work, perhaps we should say the best of all works for the formation of a correct style of organ playing and the mastery of the instrument in all its varied resources. Rink's teacher was Kittel, of Erfurt, a distinguished pupil of John Sebastian Bach, and in this collection of preludes and exercises we have an excellent reflection of the thorough method of which the great German master is the acknowledged representative."—*N. I. Hand-Book to the Mastery Series, 12mo ...50c.
II. The Mastery Series. French. 12mo.......50c.
III. The Mastery Series. German. 12mo.......50c.

From the American Preface, by Prof. E. M. Galliaudet.

"Most opportunely making the acquaintance of Mr. Prendergast and of his theory before leaving England for the Continent, the writer determined to put the Mastery System to the test in Germany.

"The results which crowned the labor of the first week were so astonishing that he fears to detail them fully, lest doubts should be raised as to his credibility. But this much he does not hesitate to claim, that, after a study of less than two weeks he was able to sustain conversation in the newly acquired language on a great variety of subjects."

IN FAVOR OF

JONAS WHITCOMB'S REMEDY FOR ASTHMA.

MONROVIA, Ind., April 29, 1856.

MR JOSEPH BURNETT—Dear Sir: I am now nearly out of WHITCOMB'S REMEDY FOR ASTHMA. I let a friend of mine have half of the last dozen I sent for. I would not be without the medicine for any consideration. Before I commenced taking the medicine I was totally unfit for business two-thirds of my time. But now I can attend to business all the time. When I have symptoms of Asthma, or even an attack, a few doses subdues it at once.

Please send me one dozen more as low as you can afford it. Send to Belville on Terre Haute and B. Railroad by express. I can remit by letter if you prefer it.

Very respectfully,
JOHN McLELLAND.

THE PAPER OF THE PEOPLE.

Now is the time to Subscribe for the

GREAT FAMILY NEWSPAPER.

It is Cheap, because its Circulation is Larger than that of any other Newspaper.

NOW IS THE TIME TO FORM CLUBS.

The New York Weekly Tribune

is printed on a large double-medium sheet, making eight pages of six broad columns each. It contains all the important Editorials published in THE DAILY TRIBUNE, except those of merely local interest; also Literary and Scientific Intelligence; Reviews of the most interesting and important New Books; the Letters from our large corps of Correspondents; the latest news received by Telegraph from Washington and all other parts of the country; a summary of all important intelligence in this city and elsewhere; a Synopsis of the proceedings of Congress and the State Legislature when in session; the Foreign News received by every steamer; Exclusive Reports of the Proceedings of the Farmers' Club of the American Institute; Talks about Fruit, and other Horticultural and Agricultural information essential to country residents; Stock, Financial, Cattle, Dry Goods, and General Market Reports; making it, both for variety and completeness, altogether the most valuable, interesting, and instructive WEEKLY NEWSPAPER published in the world.

The full Reports of the American Institute Farmers' Club, and the various agricultural reports, in each number, are richly worth a year's subscription.

Ever since its commencement, THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE has been authority upon the farm. We make features of the Farmers' Club, and permit no question of interest to the agriculturist to pass without comment and advice. When it is remembered that this advice is given by one of the most conscientious farmers in the country, the reader may estimate its value. It has been well observed that a careful reading and study of the Farmers' Club Reports in THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE alone will save a farmer hundreds of dollars in his crop. In addition to these reports, we have arranged to print the best things written on the subject of agricultural by American and foreign writers. We intend to increase these features in the coming year very largely. As it is, no prudent farmer can do without it. As a lesson to his workmen alone, every farmer should place THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE upon his table every Saturday evening.

THE TRIBUNE is the best and cheapest paper in the country. This is not said in a spirit of boastfulness. We do not claim any essential superiority over our neighbors, except the superiority of place and opportunity. It has fallen to New York to create the greatest newspapers of the country. Here concentrate the commerce, the manufactures, the mineral resources, the agricultural wealth of the Republic. Here all the news gathers, and the patronage is so large that the journalists can afford to print it. A newspaper can be made in New York for half the money, and yet with twice the value of newspapers elsewhere. This is the strength of THE TRIBUNE. We print the largest, and cheapest, and best-edited weekly newspaper in the country. There is little special merit in this. We have all the advantages around us. We have great Daily and Semi-Weekly editions. Their machinery and resources are only a part of the Weekly. This paper has long had the largest circulation in America, and we have tried to justify the confidence. The result is that we have so systematized and expanded our resources that every copy of THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE contains as much matter as a duodecimo volume. Think of it! For two dollars the farmer in the course of one year buys as much matter as though he filled a shelf of his library with fifty volumes, and those volumes containing the greatest works of the language. The force of cheapness can no further go.

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE is the paper of the people. Here the eager student may know the last lessons of science. Here the scholar may read reviews of the best books. Here may be found correspondence from all parts of the world, the observations of sincere and gifted men who serve the TRIBUNE in almost every country. All the elaborate and intricate machinery of our establishment—perhaps the most complete in America—is devoted to the purpose of making the best and cheapest weekly newspaper in the world. We think we have reached that point in giving for two dollars fifty-two duodecimo volumes a year.

THE TRIBUNE is strong by reason of its enormous circulation and great cheapness. It has long been considered that THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE has the largest circulation in the country. For years we have printed twice as many papers, perhaps, as all of the other weekly editions of the city dailies combined. This is why we are enabled to do our work so thoroughly and cheaply. The larger our circulation, the better paper we can make.

What are the practical suggestions? Many. Let every subscriber renew his subscription, and urge his neighbor to do the same. If a man can not afford to pay two dollars, let him raise a club by inducing his neighbors to subscribe, and we shall send him a copy gratis for his trouble. No Newspaper so large and complete as THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE was ever before offered at so low a price. Even when our currency was at par with gold, no such paper but the TRIBUNE was offered at that price, and the TRIBUNE then cost us far less than it now does. We have solved the problem of making the best and cheapest newspaper in America—perhaps in the world. Let us see if we can not give it a million weekly circulation.

FROGS.

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDING.

When the reeds and rushes are tall and rank,
And the flags grow heavy upon the bank
Where the weavers frolic upon the tide,
And the skies lie mirrored afar and wide;
Where the pond lily opens its pure white stars,
And the rushes are trailing their emerald bars;
Up from the gloom of the low, dank bogs,
Sleepily trembles the wail of the frogs.

Where the cowslip is blossoming wild and sweet,
And ditfully whistles the brown "chuweet,"
Where the blackbird cries 'mong the alders gray,
And the moss lies green on the sodden clay;
Where the blue mist drifts o'er the still, dead tile,
And the dandelion flashes its saffron pride,
Where the fen-fowl shrieks on the slimy logs,
Drowsily mingles the weird-voiced frogs.

When the fire-flies gleam in the summer night,
And the wild bats flit in the white moonlight;
When the whippoorwill calls on the pasture wall,
And the night fogs settle their gloomy pall;
When the katydids chant 'mong the slumbering brakes,
And the moonlight streams o'er the shadowy lakes,
Out from the dusk of the moonlit fogs
Drowsily wafted the song of the frogs.

Up from the mist of the moonlit plane
Oft have I listened that weird refrain,
Trembling ever in fitful gushes,
Sleepily wafted from out the rushes,
Or, in the glow of the sweet spring day,
When the waters are still and the weavers play,
And the sun shines clear in the old flag pond,
And the dragon fly flashes its glistening wand,
They come in their sleepiest, drowsiest strain,
Like the lulling of nature's most soothing refrain;
They tell of the dawning of sunnier hours,
Of dews that shall glow in the sweet spring flowers,
When the vine shall mantle the sodden logs
That rot in the pool 'mong the murmuring frogs.

And well I love on a summer day,
When the snail crawls forth and the weavers play,
To lay me down by the tranquil lake
And watch the lazy bubbles break,
And list that wild Eolian strain
That falls like an anodyne on my brain;
But better I love its lulling tone
When at night I sit on the old door stone,
And the moon glows out in the silvery west,
And fitful nature is soothed to rest:
When it comes to my ear in the dim starlight,
As I lay me down to rest at night,
They tell me that down in the glooming brake,
God's little sentinels watch and wake.

Soft voices talk in the frogs, low wail,
Under the drifting mold and swale.
They touch strange chords in our being's harp,
By their pleading wail, their wild repartee.
They are one of Nature's organ notes.
God puts their parts in their little throats,
And nature's melody would cease
Without the aid of such as these.

Letter from Franklin.

The following letter is from Brother Lea, who was one of our students last year in the Thomson Biblical Institute:

FRANKLIN, May 12, 1868.

DEAR DOCTOR:

I promised to report at the close of the revival of Franklin. I will inform you that God has heard and answered our prayers, and abundantly blessed us by giving us souls for our hire. Our little stock has increased greatly. At the close of the revival we found that many souls had been changed from nature to grace; and at the day of baptism it seemed to us like the day of Pentecost. On that day I baptized forty-six by immersion. All of these were converted during the revival. On the same day I baptized five at the altar. On the next baptizing day I baptized eleven by immersion, one by sprinkling, making in all sixty-three souls. Forty-three probationers and thirty-three members joined us from other connections. So I can safely say that in a short time our Church here has increased to 139, of which number fifty were two months ago reprobate sinners; but now they are clothed, and in their right minds, and sitting at the feet of Jesus. And God is still adding to the Church daily such as shall be saved. I will do my utmost to report one hundred converts at the close of the year in Franklin, and many also at Centreville, where I am at this time, busy building a church, after which I shall open for a camp meeting, about the time of laying by crops. I have united in marriage eight couples, namely: Samuel Rogers and Amelia Kelly; Eugene Harrison and Ellen Winder; Willis Turner and Pheba Shephard; Anthony Mitchell and Nancy Johnson; Valse Johnson and Mary Booker; David Vaughn and Rose Mitchel; Eugene Gustry and Delphy Brooks; William Martin and Maria Minor.

I have also buried four persons, two of whom were white men, one black man, one black child.

The people are very healthy here.

The prospects for a good crop are very encouraging. And I think if you can make out to hold up our paper this year we can support it next year very easily, for I believe God will reward your labors. And I also think that every colored person in the Methodist faith should go about making amends for your actual losses on the New Orleans ADVOCATE.

Your humble servant.

JOHN LEA.

Les Pensees.

M. ANNESLEY.

Purity of heart is an unceasing consciousness of dependence upon God in constant union with Christ.

It is base ingratitude to let our blessings depart or come to an end before we appreciate them: in this way people keep themselves moping backward over the good things they did not enjoy while they were passing through them, because there was a little mixture in the cup, and the bitter will always be mixed with the sweet in our human lot, and the wisest way is to be thankful for the ingredient which makes us feel that this is not our abiding place, cheerfully receiving the present, ever looking forward to the undimmed future where there is no alloy.

When you have made some little mistake in the etiquette of society instead of being dreadfully mortified about it, be thankful that it was not a criminal act, or something that would defile the conscience or make a breach on the law of God or man.

Believing in God all the way brings us out of every difficulty safely, and while the enemy sees us in the sure hiding places he flees to new refuges; but the more our faith foils him the more successful is our deliverance.

There are pin-point trials which we feel, but a look of faith to the cross scatters them like motes in the sunbeams.

God knows how little will make some of his dear children happy, and he does not burden them with the care of great things.

No matter how chafed our minds or perplexed our thoughts or grieved our feelings, if we come to the word of God we find it a peaceful stream, a green spot; its holy dignity soothes, calms, and comforts us. We turn again to the duties and sorrows of life with new courage and a clearer vision of the unseen hand that is moving all things for our good. "Elijah was a man of like passions." How oft that divine sentence has cheered the drooping spirits of those who have washed their robes and are no longer encompassed with like passions. And let it also encourage and comfort us that we may prevail with God.

Dr. Franklin on Infidelity.

When Paine had finished his "Age of Reason," he sent the manuscript to Franklin, hoping to obtain his recommendation of the work. After carefully reading it, Franklin sent it back with the following letter, which is worthy of being written in letters of gold, and sent to every family in the land:

DEAR SIR—I have read your manuscript with some attention. By the argument it contains against a particular Providence, though you allow a general Providence, you strike at the foundation of all religion. For without the belief of a Providence that takes cognizance of, guards and guides, and may favor particular persons, there is no motive to worship a Deity, to fear its displeasure, or to pray for its protection. I will not enter into any discussion of your principles, though you seem to desire it. At present I shall only give you my opinion; and though your reasonings are subtle, and may prevail with some readers, you will not succeed so as to change the general sentiments of mankind on the subject; and the consequence of printing this piece will be a great deal of odium drawn upon yourself, mischief to you, and no benefit to others. He that spits against the wind spits in his own face. But were you to succeed, do you imagine that any good will be done by it? You yourself may find it easy to lead a virtuous life without the assistance afforded by religion; you, having a clear perception of the advantages of virtue and the disadvantages of vice, possessing a strength of resolution sufficient to enable you to resist common temptation. But think how great a portion consists of ignorant men and women, and of inexperienced, inconsiderate young of both sexes, who have need of the motive of religion to restrain them from vice, support their virtue, and retain them in the practice of it till it becomes habitual, which is the great point of its security, and perhaps you are indebted to her originally, that is your religious education, for the habit of virtue upon which you now may justly value yourself. You might easily display your excellent talents of reasoning upon a less hazarding subject, and thereby obtain a rank with our most distinguished authors. For among us it is not necessary as among the Hottentots that a youth, to be raised into the company of men, should prove his manhood by beating his mother. I would advise you, therefore, not to attempt unchaining the tiger, but to burn this piece before it is seen by any other person, whereby you will save yourself a great deal of mortification from the enemies that it may raise against you, and perhaps a good deal of regret and repentance.

If men are so wicked with religion, what would they be without it? I intend this letter itself as a proof of my friendship, and therefore add no profession to it, but subscribe simply,

Yours, B. FRANKLIN.

An Effective Temperance Speech.

"A speech, a speech from Wilton," cried the thoughtless fellows.

"He can't make a speech on cold water: I defy him," said one of their number.

"My friends," began Wilton.

"Hear, hear! he's really in for it now," cried a young man whose flushed cheeks gave pitiful signs of his devotion to the bottle. "Wilton is on his feet."

The comrade they called Wilton was a young man some twenty-three years of age. Upon his face, within his eyes, a settled melancholy rested; his manners were as grave as those of an old man. He was often called "Wilton the Steady" on account of his quiet adherence to principle.

The head partner of the firm in whose employ Wilton was gave a great party once a year, and it was to this gathering Wilton had been persuaded to come.

In vain his companions tempted him with the wine that flowed freely. The "firm" considered themselves good Christians, as, indeed, did the world generally. They gave largely to charities and to their Church, where their seats were seldom empty. They did a great deal of good with their money, yet in placing this fiery temptation before young men, some of whom were as yet without fixed principles, they committed a gross and fatal error. Looking about him, Wilton saw already many faces flushed almost to inebriation; many eyes there, spite of their flash and sparkle, moved with difficulty and that dire unsteadiness that marks the incipient stage of drunkenness.

"My friends," he said, and then paused, as if to give greater emphasis to what might follow. "I am going to make a confession."

Some of the company smiled at this, but by far the greater number were awed by the sad yet earnest tones of his voice.

"Five years ago I had a brother, a bright lad, in whom the hopes of a large family circle centered. He was called a genius, and he was one. Sensitive, gentle-hearted, and generous to a fault, he also gave promise of extraordinary vigor of mind. One night several in the village where I was born resolved to have a frolic. The party was to be a secret one, and we were each to carry from our homes, if we could, provisions and wine. It came off with success. There was good cheer, there were bright and flowing liquors, we were all young and buoyant. My brother had never tasted wine. Whether it was a disinclination caused by natural dislike, or whether it was intuition that led him to avoid it as dangerous to him, I do not know. I only know—and the recollection at this moment is burning in my brain—that we all thought that if we could get Herbert drunk it would be fine fun. Fiends could not have set themselves more ingeniously to work to compass this object than we did. I will not excuse myself, nor in aught palliate my conduct. I knew he had a manuscript poem at home, that had been pronounced remarkable by competent critics; I knew he could improvise almost without mental effort, and expected under the stimulus of the fiery serpent—whose sting I dread more than I dread death—his brain would be quickened, and we should be charmed, perhaps amazed, at the exhibition of his rare gift.

"At last we prevailed, but instead of quickening, the wine stupefied his faculties. A few glasses reduced him to a state of utter inebriety.

"The party broke up. We were all wild with drink and excitement; he alone was immovable and quite insensible. There was no arousing him from the state of deathly sleep into which he had fallen. I dared not take him home that night, fearing our frolic might be found out in consequence of the trouble we should have in getting him to his room. So we left him there lying as comfortably as we could place him—his handsome face flushed and almost purple, his active brain for once completely stupefied.

"In the morning I was awakened by the sound of sobs. A white scared face stood over me; a trembling, weak voice cried out—

'Oh, Philip, your poor brother!'

"I sprung from my bed. My friends, I knew the truth soon enough. Herbert had recovered consciousness in the night sufficient to mislead him. He had fallen from the window a height of twenty feet. He was still living. In vain my prayers and tears and anguish." His voice faltered.

"Young men, he is living yet, but an incurable idiot. Now will you ask me to take the accursed stuff? Yes, the curse of the living God rests upon it. It has burdened my life—it has ruined as noble an intellect as ever was ready to do battle with the faults and follies of this world. Do you still jeer and laugh because I will not laugh and be jovial? I tell you if it were a living thing I would strangle it—and there is nothing upon earth which I hate with such a deadly hatred."

There was a deep silence. Not one in all the company seemed inclined to drink again.—Watchman and Reflector.

Dying Words of Pious Women.

Dying testimonies of rare beauty have fallen from the lips of pious women, and if less familiar than those of eminent reformers and divines, they are not less worthy as witness of the power of religion to impart spiritual comfort and triumph at the hour of dissolution. Pious women as well as worthy men have, near the heavenly portals, been filled with exultations and triumph—have seen transporting prospects from the Delectable Mountains, and have heard the music of celestial harps and the ringing of celestial bells. They have walked in Beulah leaning on the arm of their Beloved, and their souls amid the wrecks of mortality have been refreshed and exhilarated by the fragrance and glory of a heavenly atmosphere. "O those rays of glory!" said Mrs. Clarkson when dying. "My God, I come flying to Thee," said Lady Alice Lucy. Lady Hastings said, "O the greatness of the glory that is revealed to me!"

Beautiful is the dying expression of the dying poetess, Mrs. Hemans: "I feel as if I were sitting with Mary at the feet of my Redeemer, hearing the music of his voice, and learning of him to be meek and lowly." No poetry, she said, could express nor imagination conceive the visions of blessedness that flitted across her fancy, and made waiting hours more delightful than those even that were given to temporary repose. Similar was the experience of Mrs. Rowe. She said, with tears of joy, that she knew not that she had ever felt such happiness in all her life. Hannah More's last words were, "Welcome, joy!"

"O sweet dying!" said Mrs. Talbot, of Reading. "If this be dying," said Lady Glenorchy, "it is the pleasantest thing imaginable." "Victory, victory through the blood of the Lamb!" said Grace Bennett, one of the early Methodists. "I shall go to my Father this night," said Lady Huntingdon. The dying injunction of the mother of Wesley was, "Children, when I am gone sing a song of praise to God!"

Looks as well as words often express dying triumph. Says one, after quoting the last prayer of the Countess of Seafield,: "With these words she closed her eyes, and seemed to all present to be yielding up her last breath. But in a little time she opened her eyes again, and with an air as it seemed of joy and wonder, she continued looking upwards with a fixed gaze for near half an hour. By degrees she let her eyes fall, shut them, and yielded up her last breath. Those who were present were not a little affected, both with her last words and her last look."

Said Lady Margareth Steward, forewarned of her speedy dissolution, "Sirs, I tell you that this night when your sun goes down my sun will arise, and never go down!" She testified: "I have many times besought the Lord that death might be no surprise to me; and neither is it. And I have sought that I might not be terrible to others in dying." The sun sank low in the west, and as its last rays lit up the hill-tops she sank to rest amid holy ejaculations and in great elevation of soul.

How to Keep Out the Moths.

A good old lady gave the best receipt to her niece, whom she found one day examining her wardrobe. It had been copied from an old fashioned book, and was this: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." The application of this ancient receipt is very simple. Look over the wardrobe and bring out all that can be spared—blankets and shawls, coats and cloaks, and send them to the poor in time; let the widow and the destitute have them before the moths have begun their inroads. "He that hath two coats let him impart to him that hath none." This will do more to keep out moths than all cedar closets or snuff and camphor in the world, and will be likely, if done in a Christian, generous spirit, to secure the blessings of him that maketh rich, and doubly sweeten what is left.

Baby Letter.

The following letter, purporting to be from a very promising sprig of the rising generation just three weeks old, has been handed to the editor of the Le Roy Gazette with the assurance that it is genuine as well as good, which we do not presume to doubt. If any one has a smarter baby let it be exhibited:

Dear old uncle,
I dot oor letter.
My old mammy
She ditten better;
She every day
Little bit stronger,
Don't mean to be sick
Very much longer.
Daddy's so fat
Can't hardly stagger!
Mammy says he jinks
Too much lager!
Dear little baby
Had a bad colic,
Had to take tree drops
Nassy palagolic.
Toot a dose of tatnip,
Felt worse as ever;
Shan't take no more
Tatnip never!
Wind on stomit,
Felt pooty bad,
Worse fit of sickness
Ever I had!
Ever had belly-ate
Ole Uncle Bill?
Taint no fun now,
Say what oo will.
I used to sleep all day,
And cry all night;
Don't do it now,
Cause taint yite.

But I'm growing;
Getting poety fat:
Gain most two pounds.
Only tink o' yat!
Little femnin blankets
Was too big befcre,
Nurse can't pin me
In 'em no more.
Skirts so small,
Baby so stout,
Had to let the plaits
In 'em all out.
Got a head o' hair
Jess as black as night,
And big boo eyes
Yat look mighty bright.
My mammy say
Never did see
Any ozzer baby
Half as sweet as me.
Gandma comes often,
Aunt Sarah too;
Baby loves zem,
Baby loves oo.
Baby sends a pooty kiss
To his uncles all,
Aunties and cousins,
Big folks and small.
Can't yite no more,
So good-by,
Bully old uncle.
Wiz a glass eye!

Cheap Benevolence.

A witty English writer says: "There are people enough in the world to play the good Samaritan, without the oil and two pence." And looking about us, we see the truth of the remark. We find a numerous class very willing to cross the street—unlike the priest and the Levite—to look compassionately on a sufferer and even to make a fine speech to him, graced with the flowers of sympathy. But suggest to these philanthropists of sentiment that a little oil would mollify his wounds, and a little gold purchase a shelter, and you will see them slyly crowd the cork more tightly into their flask, and make sure that the button is all right over the money pocket.

Talking is the cheapest sacrifice in the world. Indeed, many men would cheerfully pay for the privilege of making it, if thereby they could secure patient listeners. But offer to take gold in place of words, and their eloquence dies; they are "good Samaritans without the oil and two pence."

Some men are deeply interested in the duty of, and the awful responsibility resting on other people. These are posted up on all charities, public and private. Their own names, however, are often wanting, and you doubt the sincerity of the philanthropy which is more anxious to clear your skirts than its own; you suspect the aim to be the praise of men, earned by acting a lie rather than the benefit of needy fellow creatures.

A cheap benevolence, which is all for ornament without any cost, is far meaner than the brave, independent avarice of the miser. He is honest. He adores gold, and owns it boldly as his god. But the other class loving it as well pretend to scorn it, while they hug it with a death grasp that nothing can unloose, thus adding hypocrisy to parsimony, and making themselves more vile and sinful than he who professes to worship no other deity. They are worse than the treacherous Jew who offered the blind and lame on God's altar, for they offer nothing at all. They are all "good Samaritans without the wine and the two pence."

A Simple Christian Act.

A young lady once presented me with a bookmark, having the inscription, "God bless you," and exacted the promise that it should be placed in my Bible, but never to remain a day opposite the same chapter. Faithful to my promise, I took it home, and rubbing from the lids of my Bible the dust of a week, I placed it in the first chapter, and changed its place. I had not read long before I became interested as I had never been before in this good book; and I saw in its truths that I was a sinner, and must repent if I would be saved. I then promised to seek God's face at the earliest opportunity. That opportunity came, and I received the smiles of his love; and now I have hope within me "big with immortality;" and I attribute all to that bookmark and the grace of God. Oh, my readers, "despise not the day of small things!"

Purity of Character.

Henry Ward Beecher draws the following beautiful parallel:

"Over the beauty of the plum and apricot there grows a bloom and beauty more exquisite than the fruit itself; a soft, delicate flush that overspreads its blushing cheek. Now if you strike your hand over that and it is once gone, it is gone forever, for it never grows but once. The flower that hangs in the morning, unpearled with dew—arrayed with jewels—once shake it, so that the beads roll off, and you may sprinkle water over it as you please, yet it can never be made again what it was when the dews fell lightly upon it from heaven. On a frosty morning you may see the panes of glass covered with landscapes, mountains, lakes, and trees, blended into a beautiful fantastic picture. Now lay your hand upon the glass, and by the scratch of your finger or by the warmth of the palm all the delicate tracery will be obliterated. So there is in youth a beauty and purity of character which when once touched and defiled can never be restored; a fringe more delicate than frostwork, and which when torn and broken will never be re-embroidered. A man who has spotted and soiled his garments in youth, though he may seek to make them white again, can never wholly do it, even were he to wash them with his tears. When a young man leaves his father's house with the blessing of mother's tears still wet upon his forehead, if he once loses that early purity of character it is a loss that he can never make whole again. Such is the consequence of crime. Its effect can not be eradicated, it can only be forgiven."

Extempore Preaching.

As the subject of extempore preaching is at present receiving considerable attention in newspapers and ministerial circles, the following account from the Evangelist of how the Rev. Newman Hall acquired the art will be read with interest:

When I went to college it seemed to me that I should never be able to say a word in public without writing. But I soon determined that I was going to be a preacher, and particularly if I wanted to be anything like a successful preacher I must form the habit of extemporaneous address. So I went into my room, locked the door, placed the Bible before me on a mantle, opened it at random, and then on whatever passage my eye chanced to rest, proceeded to deliver a discourse of ten minutes. This practice was kept up for an entire twelve months. Every day, for a whole year, ten minutes were given for that kind of speaking in my own room by myself. At first I found it very difficult to speak so long right to the point. But then if I couldn't talk on the subject, I would talk about it—making good remarks and moral reflections—being careful to keep up the flow and say someting to the end of the term allotted for exercise. At the end of the twelve months, however, I found I could not only speak with a good degree of fluency, but that I could hold myself strictly to the subject in hand. You take this course. Don't do your practicing on an audience. That is outrageous.

The Unchangeable Land.

Things do not change in the East. As Abraham pitched his tent in Bethel, so does an Arab sheik now set up his camp; as David built his palace on Mount Zion, so would a Turkish pasha now arrange his house; in every street may be seen the hairy children of Esau, squatting on the ground, devouring a mess of lentils like that for which the rough hunter sold his birthday; along every road plod the sons of Rechab, whose fathers, one thousand years ago, bound themselves and theirs to drink no wine, plant no tree, enter within no door; and their children have kept the oath; at every khan young men around the pan of parched corn dip their morsel into the dish; Job's plow is still used, and the seed is still trodden into the ground by asses and kine; olives are shaken from the boughs, as directed by Isaiah; and the grafting of trees is unchanged since the days of Saul. The Syrian house is still, as formerly, only a stone tent as a temple was but a marble tent. What is seen now in Bethany may be taken as the exact house of Lazarus, where Mary listened and Martha toiled, or as the house of Simon, the leper, where the precious box of ointment was broken, and whence Judas set out to betray his master.—Dickens' All the Year Round.

Worship without Hearing.

"I have in my congregation," said a venerable minister of the gospel, "a worthy aged woman, who has for many years been so deaf as not to distinguish the loudest sound, and yet she is always one of the first in the meeting." On asking the reason of her constant attendance, as it was impossible for her to hear my voice, she answered, "Though I can not hear you I come to God's house because I love it, and would be found in his ways, and he gives me many a sweet thought upon the text when it is pointed out to me; another reason is, because I am in the best company, in the most immediate presence of God, and among his saints, the honorable of the earth. I am not satisfied with serving God in private; it is my duty and privilege to honor him regularly and constantly in public."

Light comes from the moon in one second and a quarter; from the sun in eight minutes; from Jupiter in fifty-two minutes; from Uranus in two hours; from a star of the first magnitude, three or twelve years; from a star of the fifth magnitude, sixty-six years; from a star of the twelfth magnitude, 4000 years. Light which left a star of the twelfth magnitude when the Israelites left Egypt has not yet reached the earth.

The Name Protestant.

The name of Protestant took its rise from the following circumstances: At a diet of the princes of the empire held in Spires, in Germany, in the year 1529, it was decreed by the majority there present that in those places where the edict of Worms had been received it would be lawful for no one to change his religion; that in those places where the new religion (that is, the Lutheran) was exercised it should be maintained till the meeting of a council, if the ancient (the Popish) religion could not be restored without danger of disturbing the public peace; but that the mass should not be abolished, nor the Catholics hindered from the free exercise of their religion, nor any of them allowed to embrace Lutheranism; that the Sacramentarians should be banished from the empire; that the Anabaptists should be punished with death; and that no preachers should explain the Gospel in any other sense than what was approved by the Church. Six princes of the empire introduced their protest against this decree, namely, John, elector of Saxony; George, margrave of Brandenburgh; Ernest, and Francis, dukes of Brunswick and Lunenburg; Philip, landgrave of Hesse; Wolffgang, prince of Anhalt. To these were joined several of the free cities of Germany; and from this protest the Lutherans first obtained the name Protestant, which was afterwards given in common to all who separated themselves from the tyrannical and idolatrous practices of the Church of Rome.

"I Can Not, Sir."

A young man—we will call him Honest Frank—who loved truth, was a clerk in the office of some rich merchant. One day a letter came recalling an order for goods which had been received the day before. One of the merchants handed it to Honest Frauk, and with a persuasive smile said:

"Frank, reply to this note. Say 'The goods were shipped before the receipt of the letter countermanding the order.'"

Frank looked into his employer's face with a sad but firm glance, and replied:

"I can not, sir."

"Why not, sir?" asked the merchant angrily.

"Because the goods are now in the yard, and it would be a lie, sir."

"I hope you will always be so particular," replied the merchant, turning upon his heel and going away.

Honest Frank did a bold as well as a right thing. What do you suppose happened to him? Lost his place? No, quite different. The merchant was too shrewd to turn away one who wouldn't write a lying letter. He knew the value of such a youth; and instead of turning him away, made him his confidential clerk.

I Will Begin Now.

Emma was a sweet little girl six years old. One day she said to her mother:

"Mamma, I mean to begin at the new year to love Jesus!"

"But," said her mother, "how do you know you will live till the new year?"

Emma sat some moments without speaking. At length she looked up, with tears in her eyes, and said:

"Perhaps I shall not. I will begin now, and then, mamma, if God lets me live I shall be a Christian when the new year begins."

Little ones, did any of you resolve, as little Emma did, not to wait till the new year to give your hearts to God, but to do so at once? I hope, if you did not, you will not wait any longer. Hasten to Jesus now. Tell him your sins. Tell him you want a new heart, that will be good and love him. And he will hear you. He will give you what you ask, and help you to be good and do good. Then, with holy joy in your hearts, you will find this the happiest year you have ever known.

Never Run in Debt.

Horace Greeley says: "Hunger, cold, rags, hard work, contempt, suspicion, unjust reproach are disagreeable, but debt is infinitely worse than them all. And if it had pleased God to spare either or all of my sons to be the support and solace of my declining years the lesson which I should have more earnestly sought to impress upon them is—'Never run into debt! Avoid pecuniary obligation as you would pestilence or famine. If you have but fifty cents, and can get no more for a week, buy a peck of corn, parch it, and live on it rather than owe any man a dollar.'"

IN THE DIRT FOR NOTHING.—A man who almost idolized Mr. Whitfield, once went to hear him preach. He was so delighted with the speaker that he rolled on the ground in a great state of excitement. "Such a preacher as Mr. Whitfield! Who ever heard his like?" Being asked the reason of his performance, he replied, "Because Mr. Whitfield preached!" Learning, however, that it was not that minister whom he had heard, he said, "Oh, then, I've dirtied myself for nothing!" There is a moral to this story. Reader, can you tell what it is?

FOR PRESIDENT,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

FIRST STREET METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,—At the love feast on Sunday last, at this church, eight persons were received into the church.

An exhibition for the benefit of the colored orphans now at the United States Marine Hospital will be given by colored children on Wednesday evening, June 3, 1868, at 7½ o'clock, at National Hall, Poydras street. Managers: F. K. Hyde, Esq., Mrs. E. Hyde, J. H. Collins, Esq.; Z. Baker, Mrs. C. Baker, T. Isabelle, Esq., Mrs. M. Jackson. Miss M. Hyde, pianist. Admission fifty cents. Refreshments to be had in the hall.

ADVERTISING AGENCY.—Geo. P. Rowell & Co., No. 40 Park Row, New York, will be found prompt and efficient in attending to all business committed to them. We have found theirs a No. 1 agency in our dealings with them.

The Shreveport Gazette says a colored man and colored boy were murdered on the night of the sixteenth instant, six miles west of Keachi, in this State. They were going to Shreveport with a wagon and team and three bales of cotton belonging to Mr. Waterhouse. On the road below Logansport the man who was driving was murdered and concealed by the roadside, the murderers taking possession of the wagon. Ten miles further on they killed the boy, and concealed his body and the cotton and wagon. The two men Rutherford and Parim were arrested, and taken before Justice Caffy at Keachi, who committed them to the parish jail.

The Shreveport News says the farmers could scarcely ask more flourishing crops at the present season than the country every where presents. The Gazette says Red river had risen twelve inches during the week previous, and was at the date of that paper within three and a half feet of the highest water mark of April, 1867. All the low plantations are more or less submerged, but the highest places are uninjured. The prospect for a crop on the hills and on the best river places is very good.

A writer for the Houston Telegraph makes the candid admission that "there are good men North as well as in the South."

DENTISTRY.—We take great pleasure in recommending all who wish an excellent job of dentistry done to Dr. B. F. Wright, 153 Customhouse street, between Dauphine and Burgundy streets. Dr. Wright expects to start North soon to spend the summer, and up to the time of his departure will attend to the work of all who call on him at ONE-HALF of his heretofore moderate rates, if paid in greenbacks. As he is a workman of the best order, we do not see why his rooms should not be crowded during the time he remains in the city, even though it is hard times.

LOW FARES.—Since the fare between Boston and New York has been reduced to three dollars on several lines the travel has largely increased. Sixteen carloads of passengers left the Boston depot of the Old Colony and Newport road on one trip last week for Newport and New York. The high rates of fare from New Orleans in every direction deter travel from this city.

CONNECTICUT SENATORIAL ELECTION—The Legislature of Connecticut yesterday elected Ex-Governor Buckingham to the United States Senate in place of James Dixon, whose terms expires on the fourth of March, 1869. The Democrats voted for Dixon, who was elected six years ago by the Republicans. This election secures a thorough Republican and true patriot in the Senate in place of a Johnsonite.

The Hon. Michel Vidal has been prevented by illness from attending the National Convention at Chicago, to which he was a delegate from the Fourth District. General A. L. Lee is to act as his proxy, we are informed. All of the other delegates have left for Chicago, and will doubtless be present during the session of the Convention.

ADMISSION OF SOUTHERN STATES.—The House was entirely occupied Friday with the bill to admit Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, South Carolina, and North Carolina to representation in Congress. The most important amendment offered was that of Mr. Woodbridge, to strike out Alabama, for the reason that the new Constitution of that State has not been adopted by a majority of votes. The proposition was lost by yeas fifty-nine, nays seventy-three. The Republicans who voted in the affirmative were Ashley, of Nevada; Baker, Baldwin, Blair, Coburn, Perry, Hawkins, Higby, Hopkins, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Ketchum, Lawrence, of Pennsylvania; Loan, Marvin, Myer, Poland, Robertson, Sawyer, Stewart, Ward, Washburne, of Massachusetts; Woodbridge, ———. The bill finally passed by a strict party vote, except that Loan, Baker, and Williams, of Pennsylvania, Republicans, voted in the negative.

Editorial Correspondence.

CHICAGO, May 15, 1868.

TRIUMPHANT VOTE.

On Monday afternoon at about six o'clock the final vote was taken on the admission of the delegates from the South. In the morning of that day Mr. Foster made an elaborate argument in favor of an admission on a plan which he conceived to be the only feasible one, but which was not so considered by the Conference. In the afternoon session Dr. Slicer made a speech against admission, which was more remarkable as a relic of the debates of 1844 than for its bearing on the subject in question. But he was followed and answered by Dr. McClintock in an argument no less luminous than triumphant. Then came the vote. Many plans were presented for the action of the Conference, but Dr. W. H. Harris, an able Secretary, has the honor of proposing a plan no less simple than legal, and which was adopted. He was sensible enough to omit a preamble, but presented a series of resolutions which met the case. The excitement in the house was now at its height, and all were impatient for the result. As each resolution was adopted the result was hailed with loud applause, and when the final one was adopted the Conference and spectators were very enthusiastic. The yeas and nays were called, and the result was as follows: For admission 210, against admission twenty. (Great applause.) The following are the resolutions presented by Dr. Harris:

Resolved, That all action of the General Conference of 1864 restricting or purporting to restrict the rights and privileges of the Annual Conferences which the bishops were authorized by the said General Conference to form within the United States and Territories, be and the same is hereby repealed.

2. Resolved, That the following conferences, viz: Alabama, Delaware, Georgia, Holston, Mississippi, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and North Carolina, and Washington, are hereby declared to be annual conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States of America, and vested with all the rights, privileges, and immunities usual to annual conferences of said Church.

3. Resolved, That the provisional delegates elected to this body by the aforesaid conferences severally are hereby admitted to membership in this General Conference on the presentation of the requisite credentials.

4. Resolved, That a committee of seven be appointed to which shall be referred the credentials of the said provisional delegates, together with so much of the journals of the said conferences as relates to their election, and that the committee report at the earliest practicable moment.

"CASTE IN RELIGION."

The article in the New Orleans Times of May 8 with the above caption is a canard. It is a story made out of whole cloth, and no one acquainted with Methodist usage would have attempted to perpetrate such a joke.

The matter of assigning delegates to lodgings is not a matter of Conference action. This is the work of a committee who make the arrangement prior to the meeting of Conference. I hate to spoil such a nice little joke so keenly relished by old slave-masters, but the truth must come out. Rev. Dr. Hatfield, who is the one mostly abused in the Times article is the best abused man in Chicago by the Chicago Times, a violent Copperhead sheet.

REV. MR. PUNCHEON.

This distinguished minister was presented to-day to the General Conference. He is the accredited representative from the British Wesleyan Conference to this body. In anticipation of his presence there was an unusually large attendance of the delegates and of spectators who crowded the church to overflowing. Mr. Puncheon was formally introduced by Bishop Janes in a neat speech, at the conclusion of which he commenced an address which for clearness of statement, chasteness of language, beauty of illustration, finish of delivery, and powerful effect has rarely if ever been excelled in this country. The speaker was at home. He was completely at ease. His sincerity was most apparent. His heart was in his words. I send you his speech in full.

LAY DELEGATION.

The laymen are here in full force. Their convention to-day was a fine success. There is apparently good ground for the statement that the General Conference may act favorably in the matter. The plan which meets with most favor is this: For a district meeting to elect thirty laymen to an Annual Conference, and the Annual Conference to choose one of the thirty as a delegate to the General Conference. This is simple, and may succeed well.

A GREAT DAY IN ISRAEL.

At nine o'clock this morning (May 15) the church was crowded in every part. It was the hour appointed by the General Conference for solemn prayer to Almighty God in behalf of the Senate of the United States. All felt that our Senators required wisdom and strength and purity in this supreme hour. The rumors that had reached us of corruption and treachery had awakened the deepest solicitude and led us to God, our only helper. Bishop Scott presided, Philip Phillips sang, and Doctors Ready, Pattison, Pearne, and Slicer led the Conference in prayer for the interposition of God's power at this time of our national embarrassment, and that he would grant unto our Senators the wisdom and righteousness they need.

This memorable prayer meeting was followed by a sermon by Rev. Mr. Puncheon, who had been invited to preach before the General Conference. His text was: "For we have not received the spirit of fear but of power, love, and of a sound mind." His divisions were three—simple and natural, and were as follows: Courage, Gentleness, and Intelligence. It would have been better had the preacher followed the example of Mr. Wesley and reversed the order of the points, and then he would have had Intelligence, Love, and Courage, and which would have allowed him to present his strongest point last.

With a master's hand he discoursed upon these mighty words, now melting his audience into tears, now exciting them to shouts of joy, and anon hushing them to silence most profound. His address is not elegant, his voice is not musical, his manner is not winsome, but he is in earnest. Eminently evangelical, he seemed intent on unfolding the riches of Christ. His ejaculations for the gift of the Holy Ghost on the Church, his stirring appeals to the sinner, were overwhelming. I rejoiced that this great pulpit orator set such an apostolic example before the preachers of our Church, the influence of which can not be otherwise than most salutary. MORE ANON.

Men and Times.

An able writer in one of our periodicals, in a very suggestive and thoughtful article upon the characteristics of the age we live in, styles it the money-making age. Other eras of the world's history have been respectively of war, of migration, of poetry, of art, of theology, of feudalism, of reformation. This is the age of wealth getting. For some purpose in the designs of Providence it seems to be arranged that the civilized world should now be devoted chiefly to the accumulation of material wealth. Perhaps it may be only preparatory to some greater developments of spiritual and intellectual growth, for which this accumulation of wealth and its appliances may be necessary. As in all other times the age has brought specially to the front that class of men whose faculties, habits, and training were most in sympathy with itself. Practical men were adapted to the management of affairs, men who have devoted themselves to some specialty of enterprise or industry which is in public request on account of its money-making power.

Thus has arisen gradually in the last one hundred years to respectability, to influence, to social and political rank, and finally to the first prominence, that class best known and described by their popular designation of "business men." Thus has come to pass a phenomenon, which has often been quoted as an unanswerable proof of the degeneracy of the times. Men of letters, of scholarly distinction, of social prominence, of high intellectual and moral endowments, and men reared in the old political schools, are astonished and disgusted to find themselves quietly set aside by men entirely their inferiors in everything save the faculty of being business men, and of "putting through" everything in which they engage, in war, in politics, in the professions, and even in social matters, in a business manner. This tendency shows itself in the unconscious modes of thought and expression of our most prominent public men. Mr. Lincoln showed it in his conception of the expression of the rebellion as a "job" to be "finished" by "hammering away." Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan fought their battles and managed their campaigns as business men. Our most influential and successful Senators, Representatives, and Governors are business men. By this we do not mean necessarily men who have been engaged in mercantile pursuits, but men whose habits, manner of action, and inclination are those which make mercantile and other business men rather than those which make scholars, students, orators, and professional men. This tendency has even invaded a profession so intellectual as the press. The most successful long-lived and influential papers of the country are those which have connected themselves most closely with the business interests of the country. For the next generation to come we predict that business ideas and business men will be the ruling ideas and the topmost men in American politics and society. The practical bearing of this truth upon the present political situation of our State is very direct. The restoration of the agricultural, commercial, and political prosperity of Louisiana, if achieved at all, must be achieved upon business principles. Especially does this apply to the restoration of that interest which is the foundation of all others, the agricultural interest, but by this we do not mean strictly that men who intend to farm or plant must do so as a business, with strict attention to system, economy, thrift, and industry, although even this self-evident fact may have still to be learned by some individuals; but we mean a far wider, more radical application of the same truth—that the State of Louisiana as reorganized must as a State, as a whole body politic, through her Legislature take hold of her agricultural interests as a matter of business, upon purely business privileges, and aid by special practical legislation her agricultural interests before they will ever recuperate. This has become necessary from the condition of things resulting from the war. Our idea of the precise method by which this can legitimately or profitably be done we are prepared to lay before the public. For the present we stop with this proposition, that State action is necessary under existing circumstances to assist the agricultural interests of the State.

Catholicism in the Diocese of New Orleans.

This city, as is well known, has been the stronghold of Roman Catholicism in the South ever since the settlement of the country.

The following statistics of Archbishop Odin's diocese, which is all that part of Louisiana south of thirty-one degrees north latitude, or of the lower boundary of Western Mississippi, were carefully collected by another, and we consider them to be correct. They are as follows: 89 churches, 131 priests, 20 female academies and parochial schools, 10 academies and free schools for boys, 14 hospitals, and probably 6 or 8 orphan asylums.

The publication of the first church paper of the Catholic Church in this part of the country was commenced a few weeks since.

Her power, though still great here, is gradually waning. The colored element is rapidly leaving them, with their salvation by works, for a better way—a salvation by faith; for a religion that teaches that while all good works must be attended to, yet when this is done, they do not bring the Lord in debt to them, nor even merit anything, but having done all that they possibly could, they are still unprofitable servants, a religion that teaches the necessity of being "born of the Spirit."

But as Catholicism in this country, where it is brought face to face with Protestantism, loses many of its repulsive features seen in Papal countries, may we not believe that the time is not far distant when she will be reformed and regenerated by the influence of Protestantism, and zealously proclaim the truth as it is in Jesus? As in this country she apparently loses that fierce, domineering, bigoted, persecuting spirit which believes in the inquisition with all its horrors, which characterizes her in Papal countries, may we not hope that retaining her zeal she may cast aside this spirit of Antichrist, and assume a spirit of love and charity, and seek with all Protestant Christendom to scatter the Bible—the word of God—among all the inhabitants of the land, instead of withholding it?

She must in this enlightened age, this age of investigation, become more charitable, and proclaim a salvation by faith, a regeneration of the heart, or lose her power with the people.

Book Notices.

"A Treatise on Meteorology," by Elias Loomis, LL.D., professor of natural philosophy and astronomy in Yale college. Published by Harper & Brothers, New York. For sale by Krull & Dickey, No. 106 Canal street, New Orleans.

Taking into consideration the author, we judge this to be a standard work, containing the latest and most reliable information on this truly interesting science.

While it may be designed more especially for a text book for schools and colleges, yet it should by no means be limited to these. As this work does not require the close thought of mathematics and many other sciences, business men and laboring men will read it with great interest as well as profit, after the duties of the day are past. And when going on a journey it would be much better to take such a work than the light trashy reading generally found for sale on our public thoroughfares.

It treats on the atmosphere, its composition and changes, on the formation of dew, frost, fog, clouds, rain, snow, hail, etc. On the theory and laws of storms; on tornadoes, waterspouts, etc. Also, on electrical phenomena, thunder, lightning, polar light, etc. On mirages, the rainbow, shooting-stars, detonating meteors, aerolites, etc.

"The Old World in its New Face; Impressions of Europe in 1867-68," by Rev. Henry W. Bellows, of New York city. Published by Harper & Brothers. This work, we doubt not, will find a wide sale. It is written in good style by a wide-awake man; one who has evidently traveled through Europe with eyes and ears open, and he will interest you from the commencement to the close.

For sale by Krull & Dickey, No. 106 Canal street, New Orleans.

"Brakespear, or the Fortunes of a Life Lance," a novel by the author of "Guy Livingstone," "Sword and Gown," "Maurice Deering," etc.

"Poor Humphrey," a novel by F. W. Robinson, author of "Christie's Faith," "No man's Friend," "Carry's Confession," etc.

"Jeanie's Quiet Life," a novel by the author of "St. Olave's," "Janita's Cross," "Alec's Bride," etc. The works of this author are spoken of in high terms by the London Atheneum and London Post.

All of the above works for sale by Krull & Dickey, 106 Canal street, New Orleans.

"Arthur's Home Magazine," with its usual amount of interesting reading matter, music, illustrations, etc., is received. Edited by T. S. Arthur and Miss Virginia F. Townsend. Price $2 per year. Address T. S. Arthur & Son, 809 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

"Our Children in Heaven," by Wm. H. Holcomb, M. D., of New Orleans. Published by J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia. This work was mislaid for a day or two at the office, so that we had not time before going to press to make an examination thereof. We therefore state the subjects of the chapters: "Is there light?" "How are they raised?" "What bodies have they?" "Where do they go?" "Who takes care of them?" "What are they doing?" "Can we communicate?" "Why did not the Lord prevent?" "Why did they die?" "What good can come of it?" Another notice may appear hereafter.

We will add that if the author succeeds as well as a writer as he did in curing patients of yellow fever, his readers will all be satisfied.

The work is for sale by Blelock & Co., 130 Canal street, New Orleans.

"Harper's Monthly," a magazine of 144 pages, has arrived. Among the contents we see "Lookout Mountain and Who Won It," "Among the Andes of Peru and Bolivia," "Immortal," "Shooting Stars and Aerolites," "Daybreak," "The Loot of Lucknow," "Woman's Kingdom," etc. Published by Harper & Bros., New York. $4 per year.

"The Galaxy" for June is as interesting as ever, and is one of the largest monthlies published. "Steven Lawrence Yeoman," "Lady Jacqueline," "Grasses and Wild Flowers," "Forced Marches," "Beechdale," etc., go to make up the contents. Published by Sheldon & Co., 500 Broadway, New York. $4 per year, in advance.

(For the New Orleans Advocate.)

NEW ORLEANS, May 13, 1868.

MR. EDITOR:

It is but a few days since, in a brief communication addressed to you, I expressed myself relative to the want of candor in our community. I now beg leave to direct your attention and that of your readers to the important signs of the times. In my belief we are approaching a point where ordinary human means will no longer avail, and deliverance is not to be expected from man. If confirmation were wanted, that belief is most decidedly confirmed by the daily progress of events.

I allude to the process of coalition begun among the heads of despotism, which has been followed by every species of tyranny than have ever before existed. I can discern signs, some of them at our own doors, that various agencies are being stirred up to operate in aid of the unholy union of despotism and tyranny. I can not presume to foretell what these despots will be permitted to do; but I can easily foresee what they will endeavor to do. So surely as every genuine lover of liberty and equal rights strives to extend to others the civil and religious liberties he so highly values for himself, so surely will these powers of darkness labor in the opposite direction, opposing freedom of inquiry and limb, muzzling the press wherever it is possible, stopping so far as they can the progress of all associations which have the elevation of the lower classes for their object; undermining wherever they can the bulwarks of liberty, thwarting and, where possible, paralyzing the action of the national government. It is easy to talk of "rump Congress," "mendicant loyalists," "carpet-baggers," and "scalawags;" but he must be a most superficial observer who is not well aware that the present upheaving of the masses throughout the States proceeds from far more weighty causes than the selfish agitation of demagogues, morbid craving for novelty, or a wanton desire to overthrow established institutions merely because they are established. There is a strong and continually increasing desire to obtain that freedom of conscience and limb which the republican system offers to all men—that right of every man to exercise the reason God has given him, and to guide his actions by his convictions. To oppose this, or in other words to oppose the spirit of republicanism, is the object for which false democracy, under the name Democrat, now combine their efforts. It is a law of their nature, a necessity of their existence. Their exertions will be all the more strenuous, all the more unscrupulous, because of the numerous difficulties before them, and because of the volcanic character of the ground on which they stand. But to oppose republicanism in any way is to oppose the great heads of that system (the people); to "make war" upon them; and with this aspect of the case before us, turn to the prophetic words, Rev. xix. 19, 20.

It is evident republicanism is true democracy, and recognizes the social individuality of every man, and the political equality of each man also, if he can reason intelligently and act with a conscience. False democracy, on the other hand, denies the manhood of certain native Americans on account of their color, rejects their political individuality, however refined and intelligent, and exalts the ignorant, the brutal, the swindler, and the drunkard to the high position of American citizens, entitled to vote at elections, and to have a voice in the enactment of laws for the government of sober, docile, industrious, honest, intelligent colored men, who are equal, often superior, to their so-called "superiors."

A treaty of peace has been proclaimed, and yet I venture to ask, Is there peace? True, the war of artillery and bayonets have ended, but the war of opinion goes on, and will go on with increasing energy through the length and breadth of the United States, and will not cease till government is based upon justice to black as well as white, providing for the largest growth of freedom in the individual, and until the absolute requirements of justice are fulfilled. Can the tinkering expedients of political diplomacy silence the conscience—that voice within so unceasingly proclaiming to man his accountability here and hereafter, and which, impelled by power from on high, is now urging the nation onward to a destiny to us unknown? Will the immortal mind be always borne down by force of prejudice? Will the great heads and authors of the republican system suffer their design for regenerating the negro to be the ordinary course of human affairs? Can we rationally expect peace? To what end that treaty which we are assured on high authority has placed "the repose of the Union on a solid and durable basis?" Repose, indeed! Such repose as that obtained in the troubled dream of the patient whose brain is burning with fever! Notwithstanding all the warnings and signs, still, "as a snare shall the day come."

Let us pause and consider for a moment who are the opponents of equal rights to all men, irrespective of race or color. In the ranks of the opponents are to be found the supporters and advocates of the "lost cause." Any one knowing the strenuous efforts they made during the rebellion to support slavery—can it be supposed that their zeal has in the least abated? Certainly not; they only want political power, and if they are true in their promises to the God of Slavery—they will fulfill their engagements and bring the whole scheme of oppression to play on the country. And besides, since they have professed no particular measures—a thing which every political party ought to do; and since they have nothing to depend on, they must fall into the arms of accidents and chances, that promise even less than the re-establishing of slavery.

The Constitution of the United States has been set at naught by them. They have trampled it under their feet. They have not recognized the demands of the government. They have gone to war against it, and because they did they became outlaws. They have, so far as politics are concerned, cut themselves off from the government, and they should be willing to wait and see how the government will dispose of them. Congress has a right to legislate for these rebellious States. They have no right to legislate for themselves. They have given no proof that they are loyal to the United States government, or that they will be—none that is sufficient. Time and good works, unbroken faith, are the only remedies that can be looked for with any degree of hope in their case.

The nation is at this moment passing through a greater struggle than it was passing through four years ago. Dark clouds hang more heavy to-day than they hung then. Notwithstanding one great cloud, one mighty stain, has been wiped away, yet there are others to be disposed of. The war against prejudice is more terrible than the war of sword.

We have only to be united, and combat the pretentions of the false Democracy with the doctrines of the true Democracy, which recognizes the right of each to "life liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," "all men are born free and equal," no taxation without representation, governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. True Democracy is as natural to a just man as health is to a harmonious man.

The object that the false Democracy aim at is too palpaple and evident to be misunderstood by the meanest capacity, and it is gratifying to know that their insane and desperate attempts to check the chariot of universal suffrage, are equally vain and futile, and must eventually terminate in their own disgrace and defeat.

The importance of the subject must be my excuse for this lengthiness.

Respectfully,

FREDERICK K. HYDE.

Flowers.

Nature is so lavish of her choicest gifts that mankind are just a trifle careless in respect to them. Birds and flowers, the most beautiful, the most refining things in existence, are given us year after year, but scarcely half the world appreciate the blessing. Men hasten to their business; women eagerly arrange their plans and perform their duties; children rush to and from school; and in the ceaseless bustle of active life few pause to gather or admire the bright flowers which bloom over their heads, under their feet, and around on every side.

I confess that a keen appreciation of flowers always betokens refinement to me, no matter when I see it displayed; and the gentleman who saunters down the street with a geranium in the buttonhole of his coat betrays a noble chord somewhere in his nature in common and in sympathy with the poor old lady in the attic who has cultivated a marigold in an old cracked bowl on the windowsill.

When I see a little boy trudging home from school with his dinner basket filled with tender-eyed violets, I mark him as a child who will grow up to manhood with an appreciative soul for the beautiful and good; while the little girl who is delighted with a wreath of clover-blossoms and yellow dandelions, I mentally prophesy will develop into a pure womanhood, quick to perceive and enjoy God's best gifts to his loving children.

A collection of choice exotics, whether in the cradle, at the altar, or on a grave, seem to breathe hope—hope in life, and hope beyond life. A common lilac bush has a kind of sacred veneration in my eyes, for I remember one shaded my grandmother's window, so that her room was literally a bower of odors, and to this day that same fragrance invariably recalls tender recollections of the dear old soul who long ago took her departure to that land where the flowers are always blooming and the fields are ever green.

There are none so unfortunately situated in life, be their cares or sorrows what they may, but that can have flowers of some description if they only will, and their cultivation tends to elevate, purify, and strengthen the soul. Nothing is more refining than the care of plants, and the exquisite pleasure derived from watching their growth and daily unfolding of bud and blossom is a blessing in itself. I believe God gives us flowers to gladden our lives, and the more pleasure we take in them the more they will bestow on us. No one ought to be so cruel as to pass them by heedless of their innocent ministrations, for really they are God's messengers sent to us with silent tongues.

I remember so distinctly one hot, dusty day last July a young girl's entering the street car bearing in her hand a huge bunch of water lilies. Every face turned toward them as if she held a magnet, and when she left the car the eyes of rough men followed that handful of flowers until it was lost from sight, and it seemed almost as if an angel's wing had flitted through the car with a softening, peaceful, influence.

Then why do we not enliven our rooms with their gentle sweetness, and adorn our yards with their bright beauty, enjoying their bewitching influence to our utmost ability.

Let daughters place a few flowers by the side of the evening paper for their father, be he farmer, mechanic, or merchant, and observe how it will smooth out the wrinkles on his brow made by the cares of the day. Let them put a bunch of delicate blossoms on the tray which carries the breakfast to an invalid mother, and note how it will enhance the value of the offering. Let husbands bring to their homes a rare shrub or flower, and mark with what a smile they will be received. Let brothers present to their sisters a bouquet for party or opera, with a caution to keep their hearts as pure as the flowers, and watch how it deadens the effect of the shallow flatteries poured into their ear. Let the sick room be provided with flowers from sympathetic friends, and view the cheerful air they spread around. In short, cultivate and use the flowers, and all the world will be the better for it.

All of the Creator's works are involved in mystery Some are wise enough to fathom the secret principle of vegetation, that life-reviving power which is given to every plant, to each in its own season, after its own fashion, and to its own kind.

"Paul may plant and Apollos may water, but it is God who giveth the increase," therefore mingled with our daily prayer should be loving, heartfelt thanks to him for his bounteous and beautiful gift of flowers.

The Penitent Believing Cripple.

A young girl of fifteen, whose illness was of a very painful character, and from her physical deformity added, however, to severe bronchial affection, her difficulty of breathing was so great that for many weeks her only attitude night and day was kneeling in her bed, with her arms resting on the pillow. The suffused cheek and purple hue of the poor hands, together with the convulsive movement of the eye, gave fearful evidence of the bodily sufferings of this deeply afflicted one.

For a long time there was no testimony that her feet were on the Rock, and that she was really trusting in Jesus. Very much prayer was made, however, for and with her, till at last the cloud dispersed, the full sunshine of the Father's love was displayed, the prisoner was set free, and out of the joy of the renewed heart the lips spoke, and none who were privileged to enter within the hallowed precincts of that sick room will easily forget the blessed evidence she gave to the sustaining power as well as quickening grace of Him who doeth all things well. Just before the closing scene she expressed herself as thoroughly resting on the love of Jesus. Her countenance beamed with a heavenly expression; her eyes were gazing up as if to pierce the veil separating her from the unseen world, and she exclaimed, "I have seen Jesus; I am coming in a few minutes; I hear him calling me." Truly her end was perfect peace, and she fell asleep without a struggle or a sigh. EUG. MAX.

THE PERPLEXED HOUSEKEEPER'S SOLILOQUY.

BY MRS. F. D. GAGE.

I wish I had a dozen pairs
Of hands this very minute,
I'd soon put all these things to rights;
The very mischief's in it!

Here's a big washing to be done,
One pair of hands to do it;
Sheets, shirts, and stockings, coats and pants,
How will I e'er get through it?

Dinner to get for six or more,
No loaf left o'er from Sunday;
And baby cross as he can live,
He's always so on Monday.

And there's the cream, 'tis getting sour,
And must forthwith be churning,
And here's Bob wants a button on—
Which way shall I be turning?

'Tis time the meat was in the pot,
The bread was worked for baking,
The clothes were taken from the boil—
Oh dear! the baby's waking!

Hush, baby dear! there, hush-sh-sh!
I wish he'd sleep a little,
Till I could run and get some wood
To hurry up the kettle.

Oh dear! oh dear! if P—— comes home
And finds things in this pother,
He'll just begin and tell me all
About his tidy mother!

How nice her kitchen used to be,
Her dinner always ready,
Exactly when the noon bell rang—
Hush, hush, dear little Freddy.

And then there will some hasty word
Ring out before I'm thinking;
They say that hasty words from wives
Set sober men to drinking.

Now isn't that a great idea
That men should take to sinning
Because a weary, half-sick wife
Can't always smile so winning?

When I was young I used to earn
My living without trouble;
Had clothes and pocket money, too,
And hours of leisure double.

I never dreamed of such a fate
When I, a lass, was courted—
Wife, mother, nurse, seamstress, cook, housekeeper, chambermaid, laundress, dairy woman, and scrub generally, doing the work of six,
For the sake of being supported!

Looking Out for Slights.

There are some people always looking out for slights. They can not pay a visit, they can not even receive a friend, they can not carry on the daily intercourse of the family, without suspecting some offense is designed. They are as touchy as hair-triggers. If they meet an acquaintance in the street who happens to be preoccupied with business, they attribute his abstraction to some motive personal to themselves, and take umbrage accordingly. They lay on others the fault of their irritability. A fit of indigestion makes them see impertinence in everybody they come in contact with. Innocent persons, who never dreamed of giving offense, are astonished to find some unfortunate word or some momentary taciturnity mistaken for an insult. To say the least, the habit is unfortunate. It is far wiser to take the more charitable view of our fellow beings, and not suppose a slight is intended unless the neglect is open and direct. After all, too, life takes its hue in a great degree from the color of our own mind. If we are frank and generous the world treats us kindly. If, on the contrary, we are suspicious, men learn to be cold and cautious to us. Let the person get the reputation of being touchy and everybody is under more or less restraint; and in this way the chances of an imaginary offense are vastly increased. Your people who fire up easily miss a deal of happiness. Their jaundiced tempers destroy their own comfort as well as that of their friends. They have forever some fancied slight to brood over. The sunny, serene contentment of less selfish dispositions never visits them.

The Cross Before the Crown.

The way to the crown is by the cross. We must taste the gall if we are to taste the glory. If justified by faith we must suffer tribulations. When God saves a soul he tries it. Some believers are much surprised when they are called to suffer. Though they would do some great thing for God, what he permits them to do is to suffer for his sake. Go round to every one in glory, each one has a different story to tell, yet every one a tale of suffering. But mark, all were brought out of them. It was a dark cloud, but it passed away. The water was deep, but they reached the other side. Not one there blames God for the way he led them thither. "Salvation!" is their only cry. Child of God, murmur not at your lot. You must have a palm as well as a white robe. Learn to glory in tribulations also.

Adam and Eve.—We talk of Adam and Eve as having been before the fall in a happy condition. But one thing they missed, they never were children. Adam never played marbles. He never played hookey. He never drove a tandem of boys with a string. He never skated on a pond, or played ball, or rode down a hill on a hill-sleigh. And Eve, she never took tea with another little girl from the little tea table set out with the tiny tea things. She never rolled a hoop, or jumped a rope, or pieced a baby quilt, or dressed a doll. They never played blindman's buff, or pussy wants a corner, or hurly burly, or any of the games with which childhood disports itself. How blank their ages must have been, wherein the memories of youth come floating back from the long past, chanting a lullaby to the ear of fancy in the still hours of night, no father's words of kindness speaking from the churchyard where he sleeps. Adam and Eve, and they alone of all the countless millions of men and women that have ever lived had no childhood.

How to Make Others Happy.—I do not know, says an estimable writer on social philosophy, any way so sure of making others happy as being so one's self to begin with. I do not mean that people are to be self-absorbed, but they are to drink in nature and life a little. From a genial, wisely developed man good things radiate; whereas merely benevolent people are very apt to be onesided and fussy, and not of the sweetest temper, if others will not be good and happy in their way.

Spiritualism.—Horace Greeley sums up as the result of a number of years' investigation and observation of spiritualism, that the thing itself is inexplicable; that men and women have not been made better by it; on the contrary have grown lax in their notions of marriage, divorce, and moral purity, and that the aggregate of insanity and suicide has been increased by spiritualism. A good many others will agree with him.—Boston Journal.

Reconstruction Bill to Admit Five Southern States.

The following bill for the admission of the Carolinas, Louisiana, Georgia, and Alabama, to representation in Congress, was passed on Thursday by a party vote of 108 yeas to 35 nays:

Whereas, The people of North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, and Alabama have, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the more efficient government of the rebel States," passed March 2, 1867, and the acts supplementary thereto, framed Constitutions of State government which are Republican in form, and have adopted said Constitutions by large majorities of the votes cast at the elections held for the ratification or rejection of the same; therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, and Alabama shall be entitled and admitted to representation in Congress as States of the Union when the Legislatures of said States respectively shall have duly ratified the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed by the Thirty-ninth Congress, and known as the fourteenth, upon the following fundamental conditions:

That the constitutions of said States shall never be amended or changed so as to discriminate in favor of or against any citizen, or class of citizens of the United States in their right to vote, who are now entitled to vote by said constitutions respectively, except as a punishment for such crimes as are now felonies at common law, whereof they shall have been duly convicted; and no person shall ever be held to service or labor as a punishment for crime in said States, except by public officers charged with the custody of convicts by the laws thereof, and that so much of the seventeenth section of the fifth article of the constitution of the State of Georgia as gives authority to legislatures or courts to repudiate debts contracted prior to the first day of June, 1865, and similar provisions in all the other of the constitutions mentioned in this bill, shall be null and void as against all men who were loyal during the whole time of the rebellion, and who, during that time, supported the Union, and they shall have the same rights in the courts and elsewhere as if no rebellion had ever existed.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That if the day fixed for the meeting of the Legislature of either of said States by the Constitution thereof shall have passed before the passage of this act, such Legislature may be convened within thirty days after the passage of this act by the President of the Convention which framed the Constitution of such State.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the first section of this act shall take effect when the President of the United States shall officially proclaim the due ratification by the Legislatures of said States respectively of article XIV of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States proposed by the thirty-ninth Congress, and it is hereby made the duty of the President, within ten days after receiving official information of the ratification of said amendment by the Legislature of either of the said States to issue a proclamation announcing the fact.

A Louisiana Republican under French Conscription.

The Paris correspondent of the Crescent under the date of April 25 refers in the following to Mr. Alphonso Delange, a prominent and active Republican of this city, last year a member of the Radical Republican Executive Committee, and a member of the Louisiana Senate in 1864 and 1865:

How could a Senator of Louisiana come to be judged by a French council of war? I will tell you. The Senator began life at a village on the banks of the Garonne. About ten years ago, at the age of seventeen, he left family and country and set off for the United States. Here, thanks to his own energy and intelligence, the young Gascon got on well, and at length founded an important commercial business. Success caused him to forget France, and he became a naturalized American. In a short time afterward he was elected member of the Legislature of Louisiana. A few months ago, having learned that his father had died, the Senator then bethought him of France, and remembered he had still got a mother there, to whom he was bound to carry consolation. However, if he had forgotten France, his country had not so acted toward her truant son. Scarcely had his foot touched native soil when he was pounced upon by gendarmes and arrested. He explained and protested in his quality of American citizen, but all to no effect; he was hurried off to durance vile, and there learned that he was charged with being what is called in military language an insoumis. The council of war condemned the American statesman to six days' imprisonment. What is to be the end of this affair? Will the French force a Senator of Louisiana to carry the Chassepot? Will his government demand him to be given up, and ask for reparation? It seems that during his absence he had been drawn for the conscription, and as naturalization has no retroactive effect he had been a French citizen at the time his military duties ought to have been discharged. I am sorry I can not give you the name of your distinguished and rather unfortunate legislator, who has certainly met with rather hard lines.

Mr. Delange was one of the victims of the outrages committed by rebel policemen, firemen, and citizens at Mechanics' Institute, on the thirtieth of July, 1866, and was then so severely wounded in the head that he was in a half-frenzied condition for several days afterward. As an American citizen who has resided in the United States some twenty years, he is clearly entitled to the protection of our Government, and the prompt action of Secretary Seward is invoked in his behalf.

Where the Best Shoes Are Made.—In the United States the manufacture of shoes has reached the highest perfection. The shoes of Massachusetts have a world-wide reputation for their beauty of form, and they excel those of any other part of the world. A century ago the town of Lynn was famous for its manufacture of shoes, and at the present time about ten million pairs of boots and shoes are made in this town alone; and in the State of Massachusetts, in 1860, there were made nearly thirty-three million pairs of shoes, and eleven million five hundred thousand pairs of boots. Outside of the New England States, Philadelphia is the city of next note as a manufacturer of boots and shoes.

IMPEACHMENT AND THE PEOPLE

The tone of the Western press indicates unmistakably that the sentiment of the Republican people cordially sustains the thirty-five Senators who voted for conviction, and utterly condemns the action of the Republican Senators who voted against conviction, from whatever cause. The St. Louis Democrat of Monday says:

Seven Republican Senators have impeached themselves and thirty-five others, alleging that they have infamously slandered Mr. Johnson and the Democrats who have defended him. The case will be tried in November, but the people, who will form the jury, can not be bought.

The same paper says:

President Johnson has escaped conviction by buying the vote of one juryman. We demand a new trial—a trial before the people in November. Neither money nor patronage will clear him there.

The Washington correspondent of the Democrat telegraphed Saturday evening:

There is far more indignation than despondency among Republicans to-night. The fact of having been sold out is too well known to excite controversy, or to admit of any denial. Last night thirty-six Senators were pledged to each other to vote for conviction on the eleventh article. The list did not include Grimes, Fessenden, Henderson, Trumbull, or Van Winkle. There was no doubt of carrying it if Anthony, Sprague, Ross, and Willey would declare their intentions to vote for it. All of these did. There had been no special doubt regarding the first two, except what arose from these gentlemen not having expressed their opinion. When asked, they stated their intentions fairly, and were found to be for conviction. Willey and Ross pledged themselves, making thirty-six. The result showed Willey to have had due regard to his promise, and Ross to have violated it, and this violation caused the failure of impeachment.

All that is said for Ross by the President's friends, is that they were sure of him, and all that the Republicans know is that he deceived them grossly. To those newspaper men who have defended him from the charges of being bought, he has constantly conveyed the impression, in unmistakable terms, that he thought Andrew Johnson guilty. On Wednesday evening Senator Ross told your correspondent, in conversation on the avenue, in presence of Senator Cattell, that he should vote guilty on the first, second, third, and eleventh articles, and on Thursday evening, in the Senate chamber, he said that he should vote for the first, second, and third, and that he thought there was something in the eighth, and that he had no doubt of the President's guilt, as charged in the eleventh article, though no evidence had been admitted to prove the latter. On the same evening he marked himself down on a list of Senators who were marking as for the first, second, third, and fourth articles.

The Cincinnati Gazette says:

The issue which these Senators made can not be dodged in this way. If Johnson is not guilty of gross misgovernment and of destroying the public peace, they are. If the public welfare does not demand his removal, it does demand that they shall resign their offices. Their acquittal of him is a confession of their own guilt. And when the American people can be indifferent to the Executive treachery which betrayed what the heroic sacrifices of the people had achieved; to the bold attempt to put the rebels in power, in order to make a party for the traitor; to the long years of conflict which this has brought upon the whole land; to the renewal of war in the South, and to all the reign of terror and bloodshed which the Executive has caused, then, and not till then, will they resign themselves in silence to this betrayal of impeachment, and will allow that men to whom they have delegated their rights may betray them, and then assume a new character which places them above responsibility.

The Chicago Republican says:

Not upon the loyal masses of the Republican party in the North will Johnson's acquittal strike heaviest. Like the defeat at Bull Run, or Lee's raid into Pennsylvania, it has served to knit the organization more firmly together, and strengthen their determination to fight on in this line until the battle is won. What the combined power of eleven great States could not accomplish seven recreant Senators will surely fail to achieve. There is no sign of dismay or demoralization in the Republican ranks in consequence of Saturday's events; every heart is burning, and every eye blazing with the fervent desire to meet the enemy in the open field once more, and show the world that treacherous diplomacy is not to lose for us all that our four years' fighting was incurred to save. * * * * *

But it is in the South, where the feeble leaven of loyalty is struggling for very existence amid the prepondering lump of rebellion, that the effects of this verdict will be disastrous. It is accepted by the rebels as a triumph of their ally and patron over the friends of law and Union. It is received as an indorsement of the President's traitorous course for the last two years. It is a direct encouragement to the renewal of the bloody outrages at Memphis and New Orleans. Already we begin to hear the first ebullitions of their fiendish glee at the anticipated delivery of the loyal element into their persecuting hand. The vote that sent a thrill of disappointment and regret into every patriotic heart carries rejoicing and hope into each rebellious heart. Until the strong arm of law and justice is felt in the protection of the white and colored loyalists of the rebellious States; until the traitors see the glitter of the same bayonets and hear the echo of the guns they learned to dread and flee from in the war the life of a friend of the Union cause down South must be a desperate and dangerous one. The Ku-Klux Klan will devise fresh persecutions and atrocities at this vindication of their Grand Cyclops, and many loyal homes will be made desolate, we fear, by the insolent traitors, grown bold and defiant by this unlooked-for encouragement to their schemes of rage and hate. The Unionists of the South should prepare for dark days; but let them rest firm in the assurance that the loyal arm of the country has not lost its might, nor the loyal millions of the North their determination to crush out the last embers of rebellion, in consequence of this seeming reverse. The Republican party is a party of progress, as well as of freedom; and there will be no resting on arms until every legitimate fruit of the battle field is secured, and the powers of government intrusted to loyal hands.

The Chicago Tribune, organ of Senator Trumbull, says:

The appointment of Ad Interim Thomas was not embraced in the eleventh article, nor has there been a sufficient declaration of the views of Senators on this branch of the question to commit them to vote for acquittal on it.

The Missouri delegation in Congress prepared the following address:

To the Radical Union Men of Missouri—The impeachment has failed on one article, and the final result is in doubt, but the cause of loyalty, freedom, and right has not failed, nor is it in doubt. The country looks anxiously to the patriots who stood by it in war. Be firm and advance the Union standard to the front. Organize instantly and thoroughly. Spare neither time, labor, nor means. Trust no doubtful men; you can thus help to convert disaster into victory, and can bring glory out of Missouri's humiliation. Do it!!! C. D. Drake, B. F. Loan, C. A. Newcomb, J. F. Benjamin, W. A. Pile, J. W. McClurg, J. J. Gravelly, George W. Anderson.

Washington, D. C., May 16, 1868.

The Chicago Journal of Saturday evening says:

We have never known greater excitement among the people of this city since the war than that of to-day. All were anxious about the result of impeachment, and the result, as announced on our bulletin, was received with the same feeling of grief and disappointment by loyal men, and of inward or demonstrated satisfaction by the other class, as our occasional bulletin announcements of Federal reverses were received during the war. The excitement will now be changed from Washington to the Chicago Opera House.

More than nine-tenths of those who voted for Andrew Johnson for Vice-President are in favor of his conviction by the Senate.

THE ANGEL AT THE SEPULCHRE.

A Statue by Palmer.

BY H. H. BOONE.

Next to the majesty of God is thine,
O Angel at the Sepulchre! Thy face
Is glowing with the fires that shine
From those whom he permits to trace
The inner circles round his changeless throne;
And lightnings from thine eyes flash through the tomb,
In which the Savior lay, enwrapt in gloom,
Shut out from morning twilight, and alone!
Thy spotless pinions scarcely yet are still
From motion of thy mighty flight; but he,
The Master, has arisen from the chill
Of death triumphant: and a world is free!
Thy powerful hand the stone hath rolled away,
And Jesus, living, greets the coming day!

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

"All that Glitters is not Gold"—Bars of Mexican Gold made of Brass.—Friday evening a search warrant was issued and placed in the hands of Messrs. Pecora and Carr, who not long after proceeded to No. 93 Orleans street where, the learned search warrant supposed, were hidden eighty-three bars of precious gold. The premises were entered by the specials, who made known their delicate but immense business, and the eighty-three bars of solid goid gently demanded—worth only $300,000. Of course a Spaniard, Manuel Romero, protested that he possessed no gold, no wealth, no nothing; you no likee you no takee me. But the ardor of two officers, well backed, was not to be stayed by the persuasive lingo of a humble Spaniard. Pounds on pounds of bright nuggets were under that roof and must be secured, for a few months ago a conducta in Mexico had been robbed of something like a million of dollars, and then a reward of $50,000 had been offered. Bountiful offer, open to all experts, and why not New Orleans officials get a greasing of it? Manuel was made a prisoner in his own castle, while the search warrant was busy hunting up these eighty-three bars of glittering metal. Of course the search warrant dived its nose into an old trunk, where it instinctively smelled the precious stuff, and "on opening the box a scene of dazzling splendor was spread before them. There, in the recesses of that trunk lay thousands and thousands of dollars in native gold, and with the indubitable stamp which assured the detectives that the rich Mexican prize was at last within their grasp." "Native" gold is good, good enough for the Picayune. "Step by step they advanced in their labor of justice; link after link in the chain of evidence against the criminals was knitted until secure of their prize, they reached out their hands and grappled it.' And such a grapple! nothing but a lot of gilded bars of metal not worth its weight in brass. We, like a Camp street paper, are going ahead of transactions. The officers having secured the lucre under the pleasant belief that they possessed the simon pure, made great haste to their chief's office, and then in the consciousness that a huge piece of business had been transacted that would forever immortalize them, they settled down to drinks of—ice water all around. Poor, criminal Romero saw his wealth, procured through brigandage in the Montezuma country, in the hands of law-officers, and then himself locked up as a felon—on supposition. The light of yesterday blasted all the golden visions, for, after many doubts and queries it leaked out that the Mexican gold was only a poor composition, and not worth the cab hire that it cost. The last we saw of the charmless bars they were lying loose around the floor of Recorder Neville's office. How are you, gold bars?

About these nuggets: Sharpers in certain cities manufactured a few hundred of them and had one genuine bar. This good one concealed in their pockets while half a dozen of the spurious mysteriously covered in a box they took to a rich old "fence," showing him the real, and asking a fair advance on the lot—supposed to have been stolen—implore utter secrecy, but no sooner are the greenbacks in the sharpers' fingers than they chuckle, laugh, and grow very fat, and the "fence" thinking of his fine bargain off the thieves, grows fat too, until he with a miser's joy inspects his purchase, and then he grows very lean and thin, but he has no remedy.

It is our supposition that this same little game was tried here, and that is probably the way which our detectives became so active to secure so huge a prize as was expected—for the memory of that Mexican robbery still cents the air with a reward of $50,000. Manuel Romero was in the parish prison yesterday, and that perhaps was not altogether wrong; for if not guilty of having gold bars, probably he would soon have been possessor of several had he been left to his financial calculations.

Forgery of a Cash Warrant.—Mr. A. D. Voisin, 46 Carondelet street, on oath states that on the 15th instant Frederick King, Jr. went to his office, Carondelet street, and there by means of a forged and counterfeited Jefferson City warrant obtained the sum of $210 with intent to defraud. The warrant purported to be as follows:

City of Jefferson—No. 378—Controller's office, January, 1868.—The Treasurer of the city of Jefferson will pay to the order of Willis Adams the sum of three hundred dollars for cleaning 2500 feet of ditching.' Y. J. Le Corgne, Controller. Streets and landings account.

This pretended warrant was indorsed Willis Adams.

Mr. Voisin purchased this document, as a broker, for $250, and after buying it sent to Jefferson to inquire if the document was genuine, when he was informed that it was a forgery, and the Treasurer of said city pronounced the warrant a forgery in every particular. King was allowed to give bonds in $1000 to appear and undergo an examination before Recorder Neville on the 25th instant. The accused is known as "Sonny King," and resides in the fourth district.

Hebrew Education Society—Laying a Corner-Stone.—This association yesterday performed the interesting ceremony of laying the corner-stone of its new school house on Calliope street, near Prytania. Excellent preparations had been made for the reception of guests on the ground, and at three o'clock a refined audience had assembled to participate in the affair. The President, Rev. H. S. Jacobs, opened the ceremonies in a few appropriate remarks, during which he referred to the exertions of the association to accomplish the immense work undertaken, and of the flattering successes met with thus far. They have succeeded in perfecting arrangements by which a building that will cost full thirty thousand dollars is in a fair way of being finished for a most laudable purpose within a short period.

A brass band regaled the crowd with some pleasing operatic airs, after which Rev. B. E. Jacobs offered up prayer.

Secretary Kohn now brought forward the copper box' and the various articles which were to be deposited in it, and displayed them to the people. There were all yesterday morning's newspapers, the names of the several press reporters present, a large assortment of ancient and modern coins, annual reports of the several Hebrew associations, names of the societies' founders and officers, and other articles that will be very entertaining to those who come after us several hundred years hence.

Messrs. Leon Godcheaux, A. H. D'Meza, and John Marks squared and lined the corner-stone, a fine block of marble, in position, and when pronounced prepared for the reception the box, having been sealed, was placed in the cavity, and with a silver trowel mortar was applied and the corner-stone was complete.

Rev. J. K. Gutheim, orator of the day, delivered a pleasing and learned address, and frequently was saluted with hearty applause. It was stated that the school would be open for the reception of all sects, and that primitive and lofty branches of education would receive such attention as is seldom bestowed on children here or elsewhere. One motto was to be that a little learning was a dangerous thing, drink deep or taste not the Pierian spring.

Rev. Mr. H. S. Jacobs closed the day's festivities with a benediction.

The following named gentlemen compose the Building Committee: Messrs. L. A. Levy, Jr., L. H. Joseph, Joseph Simon, S. Kohn, and George G. Wolf, and when the edifice shall be complete they will witness a monument to which they can point with an exalted degree of pride.

The house will be finished within a few weeks, and be an extensive structure, erected on an elaborate plan by competent architects and builders.

Ironical.—A dispute has grown up regarding the ownership of one hundred and fifty-eight bars of railroad iron which was brought down to our city yesterday on board of the steamboat St. Nicholas from Red river. The iron is claimed by a Mr. Calloway, who it appears has permission from the United States government to recover all the iron left by the United States in Red river for his use and benefit. A counter claim is set up by a Mr. Johnson, who alleges that the iron in question was recovered from the river by himself, and that it was dumped there by a railroad company, and not by any one connected with the United States expeditions in that region. Mr. Johnson, it appears, had hauled the iron from the river to his plantation. The issue having been brought before the District Court, General Buchanan has ordered the captain of the St. Nicholas to retain possession of the iron until the Court shall decide as to the right of the ownership, or shall direct it placed in the Marshal's hands.

Another Street Railroad.—The Orleans Railroad Company purchased at the Controller's sale on Friday the right of way to establish a single track street railroad, starting from the intersection of Canal and Dauphine streets, running down Dauphine street to Dumaine, down Dumaine to Villere street, down Villere street to St. Bernard street, down St. Bernard street to Aubry street, thence up Aubry street to Gentilly road, thence down Gentilly road to St. Bernard street, down St. Bernard street to Marais street, thence up Marais street to St. Peter, thence up St. Peter to Basin street, up Basin street to Canal street, thence up Canal to the junction of Dauphine and Canal streets. The price to be paid is twenty-two thirty-seconds of a cent for each passenger carried. The Orleans road extends over the route of this new road from Dauphine down Dumaine to Villere, and from the intersection of Marais and St. Peter up Basin street to the starting point.

An Unchained Tiger—He Takes a Drink. A drayman having on his dray a cage in which was a Mexican tiger by some accident ran against a post at the corner of Old Levee and Toulouse streets, and the shock burst open the door when out jumped the tiger and in his hurry to enjoy his accidental freedom made his way into the store at the corner mentioned and playfully smashed some bottles of liquor, which he appeared inclined to drink. There was a small panic in the neighborhood sufficient to frighten the feline, and wishing to avoid the excited throng the tiger ascended two pairs of stairs and would have gone the third, but there were none. After gazing around and viewing the uncommon sight he became inclined to rest, but there was no rest for him, for his keeper appeared and roped him. The pretty animal was taken away without having committed any other depredations than wasting a little liquor and frightening several persons rather more than would be pleasant for daily recreation.

Magnolia Park—A New Enterprise.—An enterprising citizen of New Orleans has leased the magnificent Robelot property immediately below Algiers and close to the landing of the Opelousas ferryboat, and is busily engaged in fitting it for a first-class summer resort. This enterprise promises certain success, for apart from its advantageous location, being so easily reached by a breezy trip on the splendid boat that plies between the French market and the landing at the Opelousas railroad depot, the capacities of the property as a place of recreation and amusement are unsurpassed. It is well named "Magnolia Park," for in addition to shrubbery of the choicest kinds it is thickly studded with magnolia trees of native growth. The large and airy dwelling-house will be so arranged that families may be entirely private, while at the same time there is ample room for the advocates of more demonstrative enjoyment. This new park opens in a few days, and no doubt will become a favorite resort for parties and families in search of quiet pleasure hedged in by respectability. Take a trip on the ferryboat Porter and visit Magnolia Park.

Assault in Carrollton.—United States vs. Louisa Seelstron and Bertrand Morel.—This was a charge made by a colored woman named Harriet Williams, that on the twenty-fifth of April last an assault and battery was committed upon her by Mrs. Seelstron and her son, Bertrand Morel, in Carrollton. The woman Williams alleges that she was beaten over the head several times by Mrs. Seelstron with the butt of a horsewhip, while the son, Morel, struck her on the arm with a bar of iron, from which assault she was laid up several days.

A complaint was made before the justice of the peace in Carrollton against these parties, who dismissed the case and entertained some kind of complaint against the poor colored woman, and subsequently advised her to let the matter drop, consequently it was alleged by her that she was denied justice in the case, and demanded the adjudication of the case before the United States authorities. The parties charged were arrested and brought before the Commissioner, who held them to bail for an examination of the case on the twenty-sixth instant.

MARRIED:

BUCKNER—KENNEDY—On the twelfth day of May, 1868, at Shreveport, Louisiana, by Rev. J. D. Smith, Mr. LEE BUCKNER to Miss LUCY KENNEDY, both of Shreveport.

LATEST BY TELEGRAPH.

From Washington.

Washington, May 15.—The impeachment managers appear to have abandoned yesterday's project, whatever that may have been. They had no meeting to-day. A vote to-morrow is considered improbable. Messrs. Howard and Conkling are confined to bed. Mr. Grimes is better and Mr. Morton is on the street.

Senate—No session.

House—The letter of the Missouri delegation to Senator Henderson was up as a question of privilege.

Several Missouri Representatives said the objectionable letter was written and the interview obtained at the instance of Mr. Henderson.

Considerable excitement ensued, but the Speaker deciding that it was not a privileged question and several members objecting to its present consideration, the House proceeded with the regular order.

Mr. Wilson was proceeding to explain a private bill, when Mr. Woodward, who was the author of the resolution censuring the Missouri delegation, desired to know what the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. Pile, who was near him) meant by distorting his face. He was not accustomed to being talked to in grimaces and cabalistic signs. The Speaker rapped the House to order, and asked for what purpose the gentlemen from Pennsylvania rose. If it was a question of order, the gentleman from Iowa could be taken off the floor, not otherwise. Woodward desired to know what the signs and facial contortions of the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Pile, meant. The manner in which they were made was more befitting the Five Points than this hall.

The speaker reminded Mr. Woodward that the last remark was not in order. Mr. Woodward resuming, said the gentleman had come toward him making cabalistic signs of this kind (putting his thumb to his nose and gyrating his fingers), and he could not understand that language.

Mr. Pile disclaimed any intention of insult.

Mr. Woodward said as the gentleman belonged to the party claiming to possess all the morality of the country (cries of "order" on the Republican side) he wanted to know what the signs meant.

Mr. Myers, of Pennsylvania, desired to know if the remarks of his colleague would go in the Globe, uttered as they were out of order.

The speaker said the gentleman had risen to a point of order, and his remarks would go in the Globe.

Private bills were resumed until adjournment.

The Star says there is a lull in the impeachment excitement, partly from the impression that the question will not be taken to-morrow.

Some of the managers favor postponement, while others, it is known, are in favor of disposing at once and for all of a question that is now only serving to weaken and distract the Republican party. Some leading Republicans believe that it will be policy to get wholly rid of the impeachment matter as a feature of the coming Presidential canvass, and to move on to fresh fields and pastures, where training under the Republican standard they can rally on commoni ssues.

The San Francisco Times and Bulletin of the 15th deprecate partisan action on the impeachment measure.

The Golden Gate sailed for Panama with a million in gold.

Washington, May 16—Senate.—The Judiciary Committee reported without amendment the House bill admitting Arkansas. It lies over.

The omnibus admission bill from the House was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Court opened at twelve. All the Senators were present.

The Republican Senators voting against calling the eleventh article first were Messrs. Fessenden, Fowler, Henderson, Ross, Trumbull, Van Winckle, and Willey. On this question Mr. Wade voted for the first time during the trial.

Chief Justice Chase, after admonishing the people to quietness, ordered the clerk to read the eleventh article, after which the questions were propounded in terms as agreed upon.

Those voting not guilty were Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, McCreery, Norton, Patterson, of Tennessee, Ross, Saulsbury, Trumbull, Van Winckle, and Vickers—19.

Senator Williams moved for a recess of fifteen minutes, which was negatived. He then moved adjournment to the twenty-sixth.

Senator Johnson suggested the announcement of the vote.

Chief Justice Chase said he would not announce the vote until taken on all the articles unless the Senate ordered otherwise.

Mr. Drake raised the point that nothing was in order pending a motion to adjourn.

Mr. Henderson said the motion to adjourn was not in order while the roll was pending.

Judge Chase sustained the last point, and directed the Secretary to read the roll, which being read the Chief Justice stated that there were thirty-five votes for guilty and nineteen for not guilty, and that the President was acquitted on the eleventh article.

Judge Chase then said that the Senate was now in process of carrying out the order to proceed to vote upon the articles of impeachment, and that no motion was now in order while that was pending. Mr. Conness appealed, and the appeal was sustained by 30 to 24. Then by a vote of 32 to 21 the court adjourned to the twenty-sixth.

Mr. Wade resumed the chair, and after a long debate the joint resolution to adjourn to the twenty-fifth was negatived, and the Senate adjourned as usual.

House.—The House refused to entertain a resolution appointing an inquiry committee on the conduct of the Missouri delegation by 28 to 82.

Private bills were resumed.

A resolution that for the future and more efficient prosecution of the impeachment of the President the managers be directed and instructed to summon and examine witnesses under oath, and to send for persons and papers, to employ a stenographer, and to appoint sub-committees to take testimony, the expenses thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the House, was adopted.

Adjourned to Monday.

Internal revenue receipts for the week, $2,889,000. For the year, $66,000,000.

The excitement to-day has been too great for wild demonstrations, but the feeling is intense. The President was surrounded by his Cabinet officers when the vote was announced by telegraph.

The congratulations were hearty but quiet, and on the announcement of the postponement of further action to the 26th, the party at the White House dispersed.

An unusually large crowd gathered at the White House grounds to hear the band which plays there every Saturday.

The President occupied his usual position on such occasions. There was no demonstration.

The Republican Senators who voted for acquittal have been subjected to no annoyance.

Much money changed hands on the eleventh article, and an immense amount remains in the hands of stakeholders on the final result.

Washington, May 18.—The following were introduced under the regular Monday call:

A bill to construe and prevent frauds in the law regarding abandoned lands in the Southern States.

A joint resolution amending the Constitution, making naturalized citizens eligible to the Presidency.

A bill construing the government of the telegraph hence for New York.

A resolution appointing a committee of five to investigate the Senator Henderson and Missouri delegation affair was adopted.

A preamble and resolution authorizing the Speaker to add two from those who voted against impeachment to the managers, to be present and assist in the investigations, was rejected.

Mr. Banks reported the Alaska appropriation bill, which was postponed till June.

Mr. Stevens offered a resolution calling for the secret proceedings of the Impeachment Court. He said no one could doubt there was deep damnation somewhere, and he wanted to find out who was guilty. Answering the question whether Senators would have been justified in committing perjury, Mr. Stevens said: "Well, sir, I don't think it would have hurt them much." The resolution passed.

After refusing to concur with the Senate for a recess, the House adjourned until to-morrow.

Senate—The Virginia Constitution was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

A memorial was presented from the Philadelphia Corn Exchange, asking for a modification of the whisky tax. Referred to the Finance Committee.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted to Senator Grimes.

The deficiency appropriation for the third military district passed.

The recess resolution was recalled from the House and passed.

Senator Harlan stated that he had had no communication with Bishop Simpson since impeachment began.

Adjourned to Thursday.

Among the witnesses summoned by the managers are Daniel W. Voorhees, Perry Fuller, of Kansas, and General Thomas Ewing.

The charter of Washington city expired to-day, the President not having signed the extension.

Mr. Stevens' resolution asking for official proceedings caused a bitter debate in the Senate.

Politics very feverish, and the atmosphere is filled with third party elements, though not sufficiently tangible to warrant details.

The Tribune is captious. It elaborates on last night's dispatches regarding changes in the President's Cabinet and policy as follows: "The Washington agent of the New York Associated Press telegraphs the following, probably under White House and Grimes, Fessenden & Co.'s direction: 'The tone of leading Northern papers and the spirit of debate in both the Senate and the House to-day indicate that the acquittal element, with Chase at the head of it, is to be read out of the Republican party if the Chicago Convention can be ruled by Radical Congressmen and editors.'"

The Tribune's Washington dispatch says: "First, the conspiracy on the part of Fessenden and Trumbull and company includes not merely the defeat of impeachment, but of the Republican party and of the candidates of the Chicago Convention. So far as Mr. Chase is concerned, it is known that he does not hesitate to say that the Republican party has been led in a wrong direction, and that he has always been opposed to impeachment. He has not abandoned those principles which he claims to be Republican. He believes in impartial suffrage and universal amnesty.

"Within the last few days Mr. Chase has said that if the Republican party should persist in its present course a new party must inevitably be organized."

The Times' special from Washington says: "The stories about Chief Justice Chase and the Presidency are finally coming into some tangible shape. He has formally put himself into the hands of his friends, and said that while he is not a candidate he can not object to the use of his name, and will run if nominated by the Conservatives."

The World's special says: "It is generally understood to-night that if the vote had been taken upon all the articles of impeachment yesterday the President would have almost immediately reorganized his Cabinet. The State, Treasury, War, and Interior Departments were, as the report says, to be first put into other hands. The following are the persons named as those who were to assume the several secretaryships: State, William M. Evarts; treasury, Mr. Groesbeck; war, Ex-Governor Cox, of Ohio; interior, Mr. Catron, of Illinois. Mr. Stanbery would probably be returned to the position of Attorney General. No name is mentioned for the new head of the postoffice department. As the impeachment matter stands none of these changes can be expected to be made. The administration of the government will probably continue for an indefinite period in present hands."

Washington, May 19—Senate.—No session.

House.—No quorum. The managers examined Charles W. Wooley regarding his draft for twenty thousand dollars. He averred that it had nothing to do with impeachment, but withheld further information relative to his private business. The managers have summoned several newspaper men.

A full Cabinet meeting was held to-day, including General Thomas.

D. W. Voorhies has not been before the managers, and has not been summoned.

Chicago dispatches indicate that the Vice-Presidential contest is with Hamlin, Colfax, and Wade, indications favoring Colfax. The most credible speculations indicate the exclusion of the Southern delegates.

Washington, May 20.—The Senate was not in session.

House—Without transacting any business, the House adjourned till Saturday.

The impeachment managers have demanded all telegrams sent hence on Friday.

General Boynton testified to hearing Mr. Ross say on the fourteenth that he would vote for the eleventh article.

Some seventy-five private telegrams sent hence were furnished to the managers.

People complain because the cashier of the First National Bank allowed Mr. Butler to examine private accounts kept by the bank.

President Johnson was in a Masonic procession to-day on foot.

James Buchanan is worse.

The Committee on Commerce reported to the House to-day a bill putting Pass a l'Outre, at the mouth of the Mississippi river, into the hands of James R. McClintock and John K. Scott, upon condition that they keep the channel cleared out to the depth of eighteen feet, in which case they will be allowed to charge a tonnage duty on vessels passing through that channel of thirty cents per ton of registered measurement on vessels drawing fourteen feet and upward. They are allowed eighteen months to comply with the conditions of the bill, and whether the required depth of channel is obtained is to be determined by the engineer corps of the United States.

The engineer department are opposed to the bill, but as the government has for years been appropriating money to improve this channel without success the committee are disposed to favor the project of the parties who will undertake to deepen it for the privilege of charging a specific toll. It is not intended to ask the House to act on the bill however before next session.

It is stated that the managers have summoned, or rather requested, Senator Henderson to appear before them. Mr. Henderson wrote them a letter doubting their right to interrogate a Senator, saying that he would bring the matter before the Senate to-morrow for its opinion and action.

The movement for reducing the whisky tax to fifty cents seems to be gaining strength.

Chicago, May 20—National Republican Convention.—Governor Ward called the Convention to order. Bishop Simpson offered up prayer. Carl Schurz was chosen temporary chairman.

A committee of one from each State was appointed on credentials. Texas is unrepresented.

The Southern States were all called. There are nineteen negroes among the delegates. The canvass for Vice-President is spirited. It is thought that Mr. Wade will lead on the first ballot.

The Convention adjourned after effecting organization, to await a report from the Committee on Credentials to-morrow.

General Conference—Petitions for uniting the Methodist Episcopal and Protestant Episcopal Churches was referred to a committee of five.

A resolution looking to the organization of the colored preachers into a separate Conference was referred to the committee on boundaries.

Miscellaneous Telegrams.

Chicago, May 19.—The Soldiers' and Sailors' Convention organized by electing Governor Fairchild, of Wisconsin, temporary chairman.

Augusta, May 19.—A rain and hail storm occurred this afternoon, flooding the streets and washing up a portion of the track of the street railroad. The storm was the heaviest for many years.

Chicago, May 19.—A special to the Tribune says General Logan was stoned at York, Pennsylvania. One of the stones missing Logan struck Governor Hahn, of Louisiana, on the breast.

Washington, May 19.—The managers' investigation has developed nothing yet.

The Senate has indefinitely postponed the Arkansas admission bill.

John Nagler, of Prince William county, Virginia, has sued Mr. Stanton for $50,000 for trespass on his farm.

Vicksburg, May 19.—Passed up, Dexter at 1 P. M. yesterday, and Magenta at midnight. River rising slowly.

Vera Cruz, May 11.—The vomito is severe. Among the victims are many of the oldest citizens.

Paul H. Lewis vs. Charles Izard.

IN THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, for the Fifth Circuit and District of Louisiana, No. 5485.—By virtue of a writ of seizure and sale issued by the above-named Court in the above entitled suit, and received by me on the second of March, 1868, I have seized and taken into my possession, and will expose for sale at public auction, to the highest bidder, on WEDNESDAY, the twenty-seventh day of May, 1868, at twelve o'clock noon, at the entrance to the Customhouse, on Old Levee street, between Canal and Customhouse streets, in this city, the following described property, viz:

TWO CERTAIN LOTS OF GROUND, situated in the first district of this city in the square bounded by Nayades, Clio, Prytania, and Erato streets, designated as lots Nos. 30 and 32 on a plan deposited in the office of T. O. Starke, notary, as plan No. 103; said lots adjoin each other, and measure each twenty-nine feet front on Erato street by a depth between parallel lines of one hundred and fifty-nine feet nine inches and ten lines, together with all the buildings and improvements thereon, which above described property will be sold to satisfy the plaintiff's, Paul H. Lewis' claim, viz: the sum of thirty-five hundred dollars, interest, and all costs, as per act of mortgage on file, passed before Edward Barnett, notary in this city, on the sixteenth day of October, 1866.

Terms—Cash in United States Treasury notes, and costs of deed and internal revenue stamps at expense of purchaser.

Margaret R. Deas, Widow, etc., vs. Mrs. C. D. Moncure and als, Children and Heirs of Henry Doyal, Deceased.

IN THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, for the Fifth Circuit and District of Louisiana, No. 3788.—By virtue of a writ of fieri facias, issued and to me directed by the above named court in the above entitled and numbered suit, and received by me on the sixth March, 1868, I have seized and taken into my possession, and will expose for sale at public auction to the highest bidder, on FRIDAY, the twenty-second day of May, 1868, at the hour of twelve o'clock noon, at the door of the courthouse of the parish of Ascension, in Donaldsonville, Louisiana, the following described property, viz:

A CERTAIN PLANTATION, situated on the left bank of and fronting on the Mississippi river, in the parish of Ascension in this state, formerly known as the "Hard Times," but now known as the "Southwood" plantation, and bounded on the upper line by the line of the parish of Iberville, and on the lower line by lands now or formerly belonging to S. R. Tillotson, and measures about twenty-eight and a half arpents front on the Mississippi river by eighty arpents in depth between diverging lines, with the opening thereto belonging; together with all the buildings and improvements thereon, as well as all the cattle, live stock, implements of husbandry, etc., of whatsoever kind or nature thereon or thereunto belonging; twenty-three Mules, four Carts, thirty-five Plows, twenty thousand new Bricks and a lot of Corn in barrels.

Seized to satisfy, as far as may be, the plaintiff's claim herein, viz: Five thousand four hundred dollars, together with interest and all costs, as per judgment.

Terms of Sale—This being the second adjudication, the above property will be sold at twelve months' credit, the purchaser being required to furnish good and sufficient joint and several security, with preference and special mortgage privilege on the property sold, bearing interest at the rate of eight per cent per annum, and to pay in cash an amount to cover all the costs of suit amount to five hundred dollars ($500) more or less.

Costs of deed, bond, recording, internal revenue stamps, etc., at expense of purchaser.

IN FAVOR OF

JONAS WHITCOMB'S REMEDY FOR ASTHMA.

MONROVIA, Ind., April 29, 1856.

MR JOSEPH BURNETT—Dear Sir: I am now nearly out of WHITCOMB'S REMEDY FOR ASTHMA. I let a friend of mine have half of the last dozen I sent for. I would not be without the medicine for any consideration. Before I commenced taking the medicine I was totally unfit for business two-thirds of my time. But now I can attend to business all the time. When I have symptoms of Asthma, or even an attack, a few doses subdues it at once.

Please send me one dozen more as low as you can afford it. Send to Belville on Terre Haute and B. Railroad by express. I can remit by letter if you prefer it.

Very respectfully,
JOHN McLELLAND.

Prepared by Joseph Burnett & Co., Boston. For sale by all druggists at $1 per bottle. my2

VOICES FROM HOME.

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDING.

When a wanderer, roaming unloved and unknown,
Where strange stars are shining afar from my home,
When cold words accost me, and trials beset,
There's comfort in memories I never forget;
And I steal from the throng of the world's crowded mart
And I cherish so dearly the gems in my heart.
I talk with those memories, so truly my own,
And list to their whispers—the voices from home.

When afar from the couch of my infant years
Where many my joys and few my tears;
When men wear false faces, and nothing is true,
Oh, sacred home voices there's comfort in you.
And oft in the dusk of the twilight hour
They come like the scent of a long withered flower,
And they talk to me softly, with love in their tone;
They touch up old pictures long faded and gone.

And I seem to forget that I am friendless and 'lone,
For mother and father and sister they come—
They come like the starbeam on wild, moonless night;
They leave long behind them their purity and light.
Oh, the chastening influence they leave when they're gone—
There's nothing so sacred as voices from home.

Through years wild with brambles my path leads from home,
My summer has faded, its freshness has gone;
And many the graves I have made by the way,
Where dead hopes lie mangled, and young loves decay.
But the loved of my childhood, their words and their tone,
Will live in my bosom 'till earth's life is gone;
And when in this strange world my mission is done,
He will send me his summons by VOICES FROM HOME.

THE CHANGED CROSS.

It was a time of sadness—and my heart,
Although it knew and loved the better part,
Felt wearied with the conflict and the strife,
And all the needful discipline of life.

And while I thought on these—as given to me
My trial-tests of faith and love to be,
It seemed as if I never could be sure
That faithful to the end I should endure.

And thus, no longer trusting to his might,
Who says, "We walk by faith, and not by sight"—
Doubting, and almost yielding to despair—
The thought arose: My cross I can not bear.

Far heavier its weight must surely be
Than those of others which I daily see;
Oh, if I might another burden choose,
Methinks I should not fear my crown to lose.

A solemn silence reigned on all around,
E'en nature's voices uttered not a sound;
The evening shadows seemed of peace to tell,
And sleep upon my weary spirit fell.

A moment's pause, and then a heavenly light
Beamed full upon my wondering, raptured sight:
Angels on silvery wings seemed everywhere,
And angels' music thrilled the balmy air.

Then One more fair than all the rest to see—
One to whom all the others bowed the knee—
Came gently to me as I trembling lay,
And "Follow me," he said, "I am the way."

Then speaking thus, he led me far above;
And there, beneath a canopy of love,
Crosses of divers shape and size were seen,
Larger and smaller than mine own had been.

And one there was most beauteous to behold,
A little one with jewels set in gold;
Ah! this, methought, I can with comfort wear,
For it will be an easy one to bear.

And so the little cross I quickly took,
But all at once my frame beneath it shook;
The sparkling jewels, fair were they to see,
But far too heavy was their weight for me.

"This may not be," I cried, and looked again,
To see if there was any here could ease my pain.
But one by one I passed them slowly by,
Till on a lovely one I cast my eye.

Fair flowers around its sculptured form entwined
And grace and beauty seemed in it combined;
Wondering, I gazed, and still I wondered more,
To think so many should have passed it o'er.

But Oh! that form so beautiful to see,
Soon made its hidden sorrows known to me;
Thorns lay beneath those flowers and colors fair,
Sorrowing, I said, "This cross I can not bear."

And so it was with each and all around,
Not one to suit my need could there be found;
Weeping, I laid each heavy burden down,
As my guide gently said, "No cross—no crown."

At length to him I raised my saddened heart,
He knew its sorrows, bade its doubts depart,
"Be not afraid," he said, "but trust in me,
My perfect love shall now be shown to thee."

And then with lightened eyes and willing feet
Again I turned my earthly cross to meet;
With forward footsteps, turning not aside,
For fear some hidden evil might betide.

And then, in the prepared, appointed way,
Listening to hear, and ready to obey,
A cross I quickly found of plainest form,
With only words of love inscribed thereon.

With thankfulness I raised it from the rest,
And joyfully acknowledged it the best;
The only one of all the many there
That I could feel was good for me to bear.

And while I thus my chosen one confessed,
I saw a heavenly brightness on it rest:
And as I bent—my burden to sustain—
I recognized my own old cross again.

But Oh! how different did it seem to be,
Now I had learned its preciousness to see:
No longer could I unbelieving say,
"Perhaps another is a better way."

Ah, no! henceforth my one desire shall be,
That he who knows me best should choose for me;
And so whate'er his love seems good to send,
I'll trust it best because he knows the end.

A STORY FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS.

How a Man Made His Fortune by a Pin.

"Many people have inherited a great name from their parents and friends; why can not I make a great reputation by my own industry and perseverance?"

These words were spoken by a young man of respectable appearance, yet really in want, as he walked one autumn morning in the year 1789 up Antin street in Paris, and approached the stately house of a great banker. On ringing the door bell his heart beat with fear and anxiety when he was met by a servant in livery, who asked him rather bluntly what he wanted.

"I wish to speak to Mr. Perregaux," replied the young man. "Is he at home?"

The answer was affirmative, and the porter led him up the broad marble stairway to the upper story, where the young man was admitted into a splendid ante-room, ornamented with paintings and statues. He quietly took a seat in the corner, and had hardly the courage to face the great man who went in and out of the banker's room. He thought of his home in the country, of his departure from his beloved parents, of their prayers and their blessings. He recalled his mother's last words: "What will you do in Paris, my son? Stay here. You have your home, though it is a poor one." And then he thought of his own answer: "Let me try my fortune, dear mother, in order that I may share it with you and my dear friends." "But," answered she, "fortune does not always visit those who seek it." To this he replied: "But it never seeks those who never seek it." "Well, go," said the tender-hearted mother, "go, and if you don't succeed do not be ashamed to return to us. Your father's house and the arms of your mother will always be open to you."

Mr. Perregaux was reading a letter when the young man was admitted to his presence, and hardly noticed the unassuming stranger.

"Do you wish to speak to me, young man?" said the banker in a friendly way. "If so, tell me in what respect I can serve you."

"Mr. Perregaux," said the young man, looking plainly and calmly in his face, "I have neither name, nor rank, nor fortune, but industry, strength, and a strong will to work. Can you not give me a place in your great business house? even the most insignificant one would suit me."

"What is your name?" asked Mr. Perregaux, who could not keep his eyes from the attractive features of his young applicant, and read in his clear eye discretion and fidelity.

"Jacques Laffitte," was the answer.

"Your age?"

"Eighteen years," replied the young man. "I was born on the twenty-ninth of October, 1771."

"Are you a Parisian?" inquired the banker further.

"No, sir, I am from Bayonne. My father is a carpenter and has ten children to care for. My object is to find a place where I shall be able to support my father's family."

"A noble undertaking, young man," replied the banker; "but I regret to say that I have no place vacant for you. I am sorry for this. Perhaps a latter application would find me able to receive you,"

Everything seemed to swim before Laffitte's eyes. He scarcely knew how to reach the door. His knees trembled as he descended the marble staircase, and with a slow step he went down into the street. The refusal was almost more than he could bear. Yet he summoned courage and started off.

Just as he reached the street, he saw something shining in the sand that had collected near the steps. It was only a pin, yet he took it up and stuck it in his coat. This little act, apparently unseen by any one else in the world, decided his whole future. Mr. Perregaux stood at the window, and, without designing it, happened to see the refused applicant pick something up, and wondered what it was. When the young man stuck it in the left breast of his coat the banker thought it was a pin. Men who have great knowledge of human nature, like Mr. Perregaux, understand the meaning of seemingly insignificant things, and how far small actions go toward the interpretation of character. So he said to himself: "The man who will not refuse to pick up a pin must certainly have some habits that will be of great use if he ever has an opportunity to employ them."

He quickly opened the window and called young Jacques.

The young man quickly returned, hastened up stairs, and was soon again in the presence of the banker.

"Do you have the goodness," said Jacques, "to comply with my request?"

"What makes you so decide?" replied the banker.

"From the fact that you have recalled me," was the answer. "I believe you would not have done it if you had not wished to accept my application."

"Quick powers of observation, love of order and economy," replied Mr. Perregaux, in a friendly way, "will make a good business man. Go into my counting-house; I will descend as soon as possible, and give you a little business to attend to."

From this hour young Laffitte was in Perregaux's counting-house. His industry and fidelity helped him in every respect. His punctuality won him the confidence of his employer. His zeal and progress increased from day to day, so that he soon excited the attention and admiration of his companions. In a few years he became bookkeeper, and afterward cashier.

The French revolution broke out, and the new order of things which called Perregaux to the Senate compelled him to commit his business largely to the hands of some reliable colaborer. He took Laffitte in as his partner, and as the sphere of the latter was now larger, he had more opportunity to exhibit his business tact and energy. In the last years of the empire a new sphere of life opened to him. In 1809 he was appointed Director of the Bank of France. After that he was made President of the Chamber of Commerce, and thus he came into intimate relations with the most influential people of the country.

The decline of Napoleon's power brought him into honorable political positions. He acquired the confidence of the entire city, and indeed of the entire country, in consequence of his wise and judicious counsel for the government of the city. His dear parents in Bayonne were still living, and he supported them all the time in the most handsome way possible, and after his mother became a widow he took her to his house in Paris. Many young men of talent owed their prosperity to him as he had started them in business. He supported a great many in their studies at his own expense.

When Louis XVIII. was compelled to flee before the advance of Napoleon at the beginning of the "Hundred Days," he committed his entire private fortune to Laffitte, and Napoleon, too, placed his fortune in Laffitte's hands. Thus the great banker had for some time in his own keeping the property of both rivals to the French throne.

After Paris was captured in the year 1815 he advanced two millions of francs to the State, which was compelled to give that much to the allied hosts. One hundred thousand francs were appropriated to him as director of the Bank of France, but Laffitte refused to receive it during the laborious years of his administration.

Nearly the whole time of the Restoration he was a member of the Chamber of Deputies, and one of the most worthy of the number. His parliamentary activity was distinguished by his warm patriotism, nobility of character, and acute understanding. He always subjected his own interests to the general good. In spite of the displeasure in which the family of Marshal Ney were, he permitted his only daughter to marry Ney's son, the Prince of Modena.

He reached the climax of his political prominence in the July revolution. Without him, Louis Philippe would never have ascended the throne. His political opinions were very decided, and if we can not approve of some of them, we certainly can not help admiring his honor and integrity. He was a member of Louis Philippe's ministry, and had charge of the finances of France; yet this lasted but a short time, as his views did not agree with those of the king. He offered his resignation, and retired with dignity, as a simple citizen of the country.

Lafitte died on Easter-day, 1844, amid universal regret. The French people had found him a true friend, and his name will ever be held by them in great respect.

An Englishman was once making some extraordinary statemeuts as to the speed of a horse which he owned. "My dear sir," said an American, "that is rather less than the average speed of our roadsters. I live at my country seat, and when I ride to town in a hurry in the morning my shadow doesn't keep up with me, but generally comes into the store a minute or two after my arrival. One morning my horse was restless, and I rode him as hard as I could several times around a large factory, just to take the old Harry out of him. Well, sir, he went so fast that I saw my back before me the whole time, and I was twice in danger of riding over myself."

To the Colored Inhabitants of the Southern States of North America Recently Emancipated from Slavery.

The Christian Salutation of the Society of Friends in Great Britain.

May all blessings, spiritual and temporal, be multiplied unto you from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ our Savior.

DEAR BROTHERS AND SISTERS: Children of the same Almighty parent who hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, receive, we beseech you, these few words from us, your friends across the wide Atlantic.

For more than a hundred years we and our forefathers have sympathized with you and your forefathers in your bondage, have desired and pleaded for your freedom, and endeavored to aid in procuring it, and we now rejoice with humble thankfulness to God in your having obtained it.

Rarely if ever since the Most High brought his people Israel out of the land of Egypt and from the house of bondage, has so vast a multitude been set free from actual slavery so suddenly and so completely. We are glad to believe that many, perhaps most of you, regard this great blessing as a gift from God. He who ruleth in the kingdoms of men and giveth them to whomsoever he will, and who bringeth good out of evil, has overruled the dreadful evil of war in your land so as to produce the blessed fruit of liberty to the slave. We have rejoiced to learn that notwithstanding the suddenness of the change in your condition, most of you are already living as peaceable citizens, showing that you know how rightly to value and how wisely to use the precious boon of freedom.

We have a few things to say to you, and though many of you may know them already, and be well aware of their importance, we believe you will not despise the faithful and loving counsel of your friends. Let the word of brotherly exhortation sink deep into your hearts as we remind you of some of the duties which are called for at your hands, all of them important, and a few of them new, or enforced by new motives, in this your state of freedom.

Your duty to your Heavenly Father is to show your love and gratitude to him for the blessing of liberty and for all his mercies by doing his will as it is set forth in his own blessed book, the Bible, and taught you by his Holy Spirit.

Your duty to Christ is, accepting him as your redeemer, to believe in, love, and obey him, in whom, if you are his sincere disciples, you have a redemption infinitely more blessed than your redemption from outward slavery; even redemption, through his blood, from the guilt and bondage of sin, and translation into the liberty of the children of God.

Your duty to your country and its rulers is to obey the laws, to be subject to those in authority, to maintain order, to fulfill your bargains, to be honest and strictly truthful, avoiding all deceit in word or deed, to labor diligently as freemen for your own support and that of your wives and children, and for the welfare of that great nation of which you now more completely form a part, and to show, as you may be admitted either at once or by degrees to all the rights and duties of citizenship, that you are as capable as the white man of properly using and fulfilling them.

As witnesses in courts of justice, be true and careful.

As voters, be honest and wise; never to be bribed with money or warped by interest, by favor, or by fear.

And if admitted to office fill the office, whatever it may be, respectably in the sight of men, but faithfully in the sight of him who seeth the heart.

Your duty to yourselves is, with the held of the Lord, to keep yourselves strictly temperate, pure, and chaste, and to avail yourselves of every opportunity of acquiring that knowledge of God and of Christ which is life eternal, and that useful learning whereby you will increase your power of rising in the scale of society, and of being made a blessing to all around you to an extent which some of you may be hardly able to suppose possible.

Your duty to your families is to bring them up in the fear and love of God, to give them a good education, even if it be at considerable sacrifice to yourselves, and to teach them the love of their country, and to mind their high calling as Christians and as American citizens.

We know that in your strength you can not fulfill all these duties. You have need, like ourselves and like other men, to watch and pray that you enter not into temptation; and to you, as well as to us, in the great love and goodness of our Heavenly Father, is the Holy Spirit offered to deliver from temptation and to lead in the way of righteousness. Possibly some of you may have said to yourselves while you were yet slaves, "Oh! how easy would it be to do right and to fulfill our duties if we were but free;" and it may be that you often find, even now that you are free, duty still hard and temptation still strong, and sin still alluring. Be not discouraged by this experience; give not up the struggle; but let this feeling of your own helplessness and tendency to evil bring you to the mercy-seat and make you more fervent in prayer, that, through Christ strengthening you, you may do that which of yourselves you could not do.

We would here offer a few practical hints to such of you as still reside on or near the plantations of those who were formerly regarded by law as your owners. Many of you have, we believe, continued in their employ as free laborers, and conducting yourselves with diligence and integrity have been treated in return with fairness and with confidence by your employers—a result which we can not doubt has largely benefited both parties. There may be other cases of a very different character. Those who have heretofore exercised unrestrained power may have found it difficult to adapt themselves to their new position, and some of you may have been treated unjustly and oppressively. Even under such circumstances it is far better and far wiser to suffer wrong, and take it patiently, than to render evil for evil. We do not say that you are to give up the independence and the rights secured to you by law; but in maintaining or asserting them let it ever be with meekness and gentleness. You may often by this conduct so soften the hearts of others as to bring about a change in their behavior toward you, and may thus experience the fulfillment of the truth, "When a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him." And should trials and disappointments still attend you how cheering is the assurance that "All things work together for good to them that love God."

In conclusion, we would express our trust that through the blessing of the Most High, there is open to you, our colored brethren, a goodly prospect of an honorable citizenship on earth, and, if you are real Christians, and seek to maintain the profession and practice of genuine Christianity without wavering, the far brighter prospect of being in the end fellow citizens with the saints, and members of that glorious family above of which God is the father, and Christ the Lord and Savior. That this may be the blessed portion of every one of you at the end of this life is the sincere desire of those who now address you. Farewell.

Signed by direction and on behalf of a meeting representing the Religious Society of Friends in Great Britain, held in London, the first of Eleventh Month, 1867.

RICKMAN GOODLEE, Clerk.

Decision.

"For the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision." He who knows the way of faith will remember the valley of decision.

Peter stood upon the edge of the little craft in the stormy sea of Galilee, and seeing his Master and Lord standing out upon the sea, exclaimed, "Lord, if it be thou, bid me come to thee on the water." "And he said, "Come." Then he descended out of the vessel, and as if the wave were rock, walked safely.

Multitudes seeking the rest of faith—purity of heart—stand precisely where Peter did, and like him in anxious haste they say, "Lord, bid me come to thee! May I come to thee?" but when the Master says "Come," strangely remain standing. Catching a glimpse of the troubled waters they exclaim, "I shall surely sink." What, step out upon a single promise? Yes, trembling soul. "Be not afraid." "The day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision."

Those ten lepers, when they saw him, lifted up their voice and said, "Jesus, Master, have mercy upon us." The great Physician quickly said, "Go show yourselves to the priests." "And as they went they were cleansed."

Again, view thyself, doubting one, cursed with the leprosy of sin. You, also, have been crying "Lord save me," "impart to me thy fullness and power." Jesus (the same evermore) says "go," "be thou clean," "according to thy faith be it done unto thee." But you still stand and say, "Lord, give me first the evidence, let me feel the cleansing blood applied, let me see my disease removed." Ah, I see, you must have the cleansing first, then you can believe. Not so. "By faith are ye saved." Can you see the open, easy way? Will you go counting yourself clean because he who hath power to cleanse and save to the uttermost hath said it?

Oh, trembling soul, go at once! "The day of the Lord (the moment of his cleansing) is in the valley of decision."

You have long been in deep distress of soul—for weeks or months have been crying, "Saw ye him whom my soul loveth? Oh, give me light, love, joy, and peace!" Hold, my brother! plead no longer thus, the delay is not in God but in thyself.

Hast thou not said, I am wholly the Lord's, soul and body, friends, time, talent, reputation, future possibilities, and all? Yea, all this have I oft repeated with the honesty of a dying man. Yea, I know I am willing to "follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth." Then thou art near the kingdom. "The Word is nigh thee." Now hush the anxious beating of thy heart and believe not that he will but that he now accepts thee. Arise, "go thy way," confessing with thy mouth the precious acceptance. Thou art saved now. "According to your faith be it unto you."

But what says the trembling, tearful one; must I at once arise and confess this reliance, profess this great blessing, and that, too, before I am conscious of its possession, without further feeling or token of cleansing? Yea, this is the way; this is faith.

But what if I should, after all, lack that which I profess, and the future be as the past. I shall then have to fall back upon the old line of battle, and the church and world will cry rashness, presumption, fanaticism, and the precious cause I love will be dishonored. Dear brother, the Lord in whom thou art trusting will not suffer thee to be confounded. "Thomas, be no longer faithless but believing." Peter, cease looking at the waters, or thinking of the fathoms beneath thee, or listening to the tempest. Look to Christ. Walk boldly out. Let the feet of thy faith stand firmly upon God's immutable word, "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." Delay not. "To falter would be sin."

"The day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision."—Guide to Holiness.

A Bank for Losings.

BY REV. T. L. CUYLER.

On the chief thoroughfare of this city I often pass a stately savings bank built of freestone, and I see groups of working people going in to deposit their hard-earned money. Some are mechanics; some are Irish domestics; some are poor widows laying by a few dollars for their fatherless children.

But on the same street the tempter has opened more than one bank for losings. In some parts of the city there is one on nearly every corner. In almost every rural hamlet, too, is there a similar institution. New York city contains six thousand of them.

In each of these banks for losings is a counter on which old men and young, and even some wretched women lay down their deposits in either paper or coin. The only interest that is paid on these deposits is in redness of eyes and foulness of breath and remorse of conscience. Every one who makes a deposit gains a loss. One man goes into the bank with a full pocket, and comes out empty. Another goes in with a good character, and comes out with the word drunk written on his bloated countenance. I have even seen a mechanic enter in a bran new coat, and come away again looking as if the mice had been nibbling at his elbows.

I have known a young clerk to leave his "situation" behind him in one of the Devil's banks of losings. Several prosperous tradesmen have lost all their business there. Church members have been known to reel out from these seductive haunts—trying to walk straight, but backsliding at every step. What is worst of all, thousands of people go in there and lose their immortal souls!

If the cashiers of these institutions were honest they would post on the door some such notice as this:

"BANKS FOR LOSINGS—Open at all hours. Nothing taken in but good money. Nothing paid out but disgrace and disease and degradation and death. An extra dividend of delirium tremens will be paid to old depositors. A free pass to perdition given to those who pay well at the counter; also tickets to Greenwood and other cemeteries entitle the holder to a drunkard's grave! All the children of depositors sent without charge to the orphan asylum or the almshouse."

Young men! beware of the banks for losings. Some bait their depositors with champagne; some with ale or Bourbon; some with a pack of cards, and others with a billiard table.

Young ladies, never touch the hand that touches the wine glass. Never wear the name of a man who is enrolled on the deposit list of the Devil's bank. Never lean on the arm that leans on the bar-room counter. It will be a rotten support.

The best savings bank for a young man's money is the total abstinence pledge. The best savings bank for his time is honest industry and a good book. The best savings bank for his affections is a true woman's heart. The best savings bank for his soul is a faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

But if you do not want your greenbacks turned into black eyes and red noses; if you don't want your pocket emptied, and your character wormeaten, and your soul drugged with the poisons of the pit—then keep outside of the "National Brandy Bank for Losings."

William B. Astor the Millionaire.

John Jacob Astor commencing commercial life in New York in 1784 as porter to Robert Browne, furrier, at the weekly wages of two dollars and his board, died in 1848 worth more than $20,000,000. About $2,000,000 of this he bequeathed to various grandchildren and others, to the Astor Library, New York, the German Society of New York, and to the "Astor House" established in his native town in Germany; the remainder fell to his eldest son, the present head of the family. He had previously received a large bequest from his Uncle Henry, the butcher; and this added to the $18,000,000 left him by his father gave him a fair start in life. He has since increased his wealth, or rather it has increased itself, to at least double what it was in 1848, and it is even said that he is worth at this time $80,000,000. He has never engaged in any trade or speculation, but has confined his operations to the purchase of real estate and the collection of his rent-roll.

There is probably less known of William B. Astor than of any other prominent or wealthy man in this or any other country. His wealth and age are alike indefinite; he keeps the amount of his rent-rolls and the number of his years to himself, and no record is to be found of either. He may be seventy-four, as his father married Sarah Todd in 1790, but in appearance he is not more than sixty-five. The events of his life have been few. What little there is known of his actions is to his great credit. The first act of his life, after coming into possession of his property, was to increase the Astor Library Fund, the Halleck annuity, and other bequests of his father, and he has aided many other commendable charities in an unostentatious way. His habits are quiet and secluded. He has an office in Prince street, near Broadway, one of the smallest houses in New York, and which looks more like the fire-proof vault of a great bank than the business office of the richest man in America. He is to be seen occasionally at this office, and on his way to and from it walking in Broadway. He seldom rides. He prefers to walk, less from economical motives than a desire to preserve his health by exercise; and it is notable that in all his businss transactions he is controlled by a wise and yet liberal economy, as in his social habits he is guided by a sensible regard to the laws of hygiene. As his economy has resulted in preserving and increasing his wealth, his quiet habits and constant exercise have combined to make him one of the healthiest and strongest men of his age in the country. His economical turn of mind, inherited from his father, has not, however, prevented him from being a liberal man, but the world hears but little of his charities, though, with his thousand and one tenants Mr. Astor bears the reputation of being a good landlord, which is not a bad recommendation in this crowded city of hard-hearted landlords and complaining tenants. And his love of seclusion has not prevented him from being a pleasant but quiet companion to his troops of friends and admirers. — Harper's Weekly.

The Child and the Berries.

"Look, papa," cried a child, "at the berries I have found."

As his little girl said it she showed her father her basket half full of them.

Why did he start and ask, "Have you eaten of them, my child?"

"No, papa."

"Not one?"

"No, papa, not one."

He was very pale, as though some great sorrow had touched him; but he murmured, "Thank God!"

"Give them to me," he said, "every one."

"Every one, papa?"

"Yes, every one; I must fling them all away."

"Fling away my pretty berries that I took so long to find?"

"Yes, dear child, they are poison."

There were tears in her eyes, but she gave them up, and he dug a deep hole in the garden, flung them in, stamped them to pieces, and buried them.

"Why, what are they?" she asked.

When he answered he said, "They are the deadly nightshade."

Hast thou, O Father, ever taken away the berries that it took us so long to find? We know thou didst it in mercy, but it was hard to think so then.

Tinseled Weddings.

The passion for parade and display on the occasion of weddings is constantly on the increase in this city. The provinces follow the example of the metropolis, which is responsible for the social bad taste reproduced elsewhere. Two persons can hardly be married now-a-days without a blaze of fireworks and beating of gongs, metaphorically speaking, that would be immensely popular among the Indians, but which is anything but pleasant or pertinent in this more civilized section.

A marriage is a very serious and solemn thing, and should be as quiet and chaste as possible. But candidates for wedlock at present seem to consider it a golden opportunity for advertising their pecuniary extravagance and mania for millinery; thereby offending delicacy and good breeding to a great extent. These tinseled weddings are malapropos in the extreme, say what you will. No doubt many refined people are so influenced by fashion that they adopt them most unwillingly, but we hope the time is coming when such meretricious parades of rites that should be sweetly sacred will be left to the vulgar to whom it properly belongs.—New York Gazette.

Postage on the Advocate.

Inquiries come to us from subscribers wishing to know the regular rate of postage on a weekly paper. Some of these inform us what the postmasters are charging them, and we find it to be three or four times the lawful rate. We state for their information that the postage is only twenty cents a year, or five cents a quarter, payable in advance, and no postmaster has a right to charge more than this.

Rev. B. N. Brown,

Who has filled the pulpit of Rev. Dr. Newman for the past four Sabbaths, left for his home at Washington, D. C., last Monday evening via Jackson railroad.

He bears with him the kind regards of the people he has so acceptably served.

Good for the Mind.—The Phrenological Journal for June, serves up a most nutritious bill of mental fare. Among its leading characters are George Hall, first mayor of Brooklyn: Phineas Staunton, artist: Governor Isaac Murphy: J. G. Holland (Timothy Titcomb): King Theodore: Thos. D'Arcy Magee, with portraits, biographical and phrenological sketches: Philosophy of Dreaming and Insanity: Mr. Beecher's Philosophy: The Secret of Success, for Young Men; Writing for the Press; Abyssinia and its People, etc. End of volume 47. A new volume begins with the next number, July. $3.00 a year, or 30 cents a number. Published by S. R. Wells, 389 Broadway, New York.

To the Freedmen.—We have received a printed circular from the Society of Friends in England to the freedmen of America, which we publish this week. We hope that it will find many readers.

☞ Dentistry.—We take great pleasure in recommending all who wish an excellent job of dentistry done to Dr. B. F. Wright, 153 Customhouse street, between Dauphine and Burgundy streets. Dr. Wright expects to start North soon to spend the summer, and up to the time of his departure will attend to the work of all who call on him at one-half of his heretofore moderate rates, if paid in greenbacks. As he is a workman of the best order, we do not see why his rooms should not be crowded during the time he remains in the city, even though it is hard times.

Dandruff can be killed by the use of Burnett's Cocoaine; also irritation of the scalp. Sold by all druggists, and at 592 Broadway.

Life Insurance.

We would call special attention to the advertisement of the ermania Life Insurance company found on the last page of the Advocate. The subject of Life Insurance is now attracting much attention from those in moderate circumstances who desire to leave their families a support in case they are called away by death. We advise our readers, especially our colored friends, both ministers and others, to insure their lives. The advantages of doing so are plain. By paying a certain sum per year the company bind themselves to pay in case of death the full amount of insurance. Of course the amount of the yearly payments depends on the age of the person insured. If the person is twenty years old he pays about $22 a year. If sixty years of age $82 a year. For all intermediate ages a proportionate amount is charged.

The payments may be made quarterly or half-yearly if desired. However, after the third year's payments the person insured shares in the profits of the company, which are great. This will make their yearly payments about one-third less than the amounts above stated.

Mr. Morris C. Cole, the agent of this company, may call on the pastors of our churches, and we assure them that he is in every way worthy of their confidence.

To All Whom It May Concern.

It has occurred to us of late that a few practical, plain words of sense, addressed in a friendly way, to that not small class of our Southern non-Republican friends who are beginning to dismiss from their minds the impracticable ideas of the past, and open their eyes to the new ones of the present, would be exceedingly apropos.

So we have concluded to speak a piece of our mind to "all such," perfectly aware that while we will have but few open approvers among those to whom we speak, we will have many silent listeners in whose hearts our words will quietly sink, and perchance, after some months, bear fruit.

Just sit down a moment, and forget that a Yankee is talking to you, and that you ever were a rebel, and remember only that we are Americans and countrymen. Let us not forget also that we propose to talk good hard sense together, and will consequently dispense with all that nonsense which forms the staple of a certain class of political speeches and editorials.

We will assume that while we each have our political and personal prepossessions, yet we are on both sides in the main honest men, and anxious for the material, political, and social welfare of our sections and State. Also that we sincerely wish to see that public policy adopted which will soonest start Louisiana and the South forward in a new career of prosperity, and to link ourselves individually with that career, so that in our lifetimes we and our families may reap some of its success. If there be any among us who do not share in these aspirations we do not speak to them, and they had better not read further, as what we have to say will only provoke them, and do them no good—not at all.

We are fully aware, dear friends, that you have been for some time alive, even painfully so, to the stupid and nonsensical character of the rant and drivel dealt out to you in the political columns of the LaCrosse Democrat and the New Orleans Times and Crescent, and other sheets of that ilk, which pass current in your circles. You laugh in your sleeves, we know, at their humbug, as you think what fools the readers are who possibly believe their rodomontade, but you do not reflect that nine out of ten of these very readers are thinking the same thing about you and the rest of their fellow sufferers.

As a starting point, we suppose that you agree with us that the issues involved in the war, the right of secession, the supremacy of the Union, and the abolition of slavery are settled; we presume, also, that you are prepared to admit that the Congressional policy of reconstruction, upon the basis of the citizenship and suffrage of all men without distinction, except so far as to temporarily exclude certain individuals from participation in the government, on account of their overt acts of hostility towards the Union, is an accomplished fact, and can not successfully be resisted.

Now, in view of these facts, you will be called upon within the next six months to vote once more for a President of the United States, and to take sides with one of the two political parties which divide the country. And right here we desire to ask you a plain question.

Is it better for the intelligent white men of Louisiana to ally themselves with the young, vigorous, triumphant party of progress and improvement, which is to rule this nation for the next thirty years, or with the divided, discouraged, worn out wreck of the old Democratic party, which can do nothing but oppose everything?

Before you answer, just examine the subjoined table of the next electoral vote. We give the Democrats the benefit of every doubtful State which they claim:

Thus we see that giving to the Democrats every possible doubtful State North, and a majority of the Southern States Grant will be elected by a large majority. But this is too violent a supposition for even the most sanguine Democrat. If we divide the doubtful votes equally with the two parties, which will come much nearer the actual result, you will see that Grant will be elected by the overwhelming majority of 235 electoral votes to 82 of all kinds against him. Leave out the 71 electoral votes of the rebel States and Grant has a majority over the Democratic and doubtful States together of 44 electoral votes. Divide the doubtful States equally, and he has a majority of 126. Thus in every possible aspect of the case he is as sure to be elected as the sun is to rise.

Now in view of the fact that you really have no greater differences with the Republican than with the Democratic party we put the plain question to you, is it not more to your interest as business men representing the wealth and intelligence of the older citizens of the State, to ally yourselves with the spirit, the enterprise, and the ruling party of this generation, than to be dragged down with the sinking remnants of a party without a policy, a principle, or a hope.

Editorial Correspondence.

Chicago, May 21, 1868.

AN INTERESTING MEETING.

A most interesting meeting was held in the Clark Street church on the evening of the 20th instant, the object of which was to listen to addresses from the delegates and others from the South on religious and political subjects. The writer was called to preside; and Rev. Dr. Holdish led the devotional exercises. Dr. Mitchel, of Virginia and North Carolina, was the first speaker. After referring to his appointment, he spoke in the most hopeful terms of the work of God in his department. In an amusing manner he recited instances of danger and trial, and declared that he treated all threats on his life with courage and contempt. And in conclusion he spoke in most encouraging terms of our cause in the States he represented.

General Cyrus Bussey, of New Orleans, was than announced and made a very fine speech. He eloquently vindicated the policy adopted by the trustees of the Ames church touching the seating of the congregation, and alluded to a certain anonymous circular against the pastor and trustees of said church which had been sent to the delegates of the General Conference as coming from a Ku-Klux, and that all the gamblers, drunkards, and rebels in New Orleans would have gladly signed it. He then spoke in earnest words of both religious and political reconstruction, and was warmly applauded.

The chairman then introduced Rev. Henry Green, of New Orleans, who was received with loud applause. He was the first colored man who appeared before a white audience since the commencement of the Conference. In his usually mild style, and smiling all over his face, he began to tell how long he had been a Methodist, and his story of his first pair of pantaloons convulsed the large large audience with loud and prolonged laughter. He then alluded to his slave experience, and said he once gave his old driver a bottle of whisky to allow him to hold a prayer meeting, and as the result nearly the whole of that section of Louisiana was converted to God.

He was followed by Rev. Brother Lewis, of South Carolina, who related the thrilling story of his labors, trials, and successes in his department. He is a fine speaker, clear in his statements, and correct in his manner; and his remarks were well received.

But the colored speech of the evening was made by Rev. Anthony Ross, of New Orleans. He commenced in his usual way when he is about to deliver a good sermon. He said he was not a scientific man, and had never rubbed his head against a college wall. He then went on in a way which set the congregation alternately weeping and laughing. But his greatest hit was this: He was telling the year he came to New Orleans as a slave, but could not remember and said 1861, and repeated it over and over again, and appealed to his hearers if he was not right; but he was not satisfied that he himself was right, and after another effort he hit on the correct year, 1831, and then got out of the difficulty by saying that he was not the only man that made mistakes, for "President Johnson makes mistakes sometimes." This remark was like an electrical shock, and the people cheered and cheered and cheered again.

Texas was next represented, and our dear friend, Rev. Joseph Welch, spoke with real eloquence and great power. Although it was then ten o'clock the congregation listened with profound silence. With becoming severity he denounced those Northern Methodists who come South, but who practically deny their loyalty and religion by identifying themselves with secessionists. From his large personal experience he then described the religious wants of Texas and spoke hopefully of the future of the Lone Star State.

The last speaker was a colored brother, the Rev. Mr. Brown, of the Washington Conference. Having had the advantages of being born free, and of an early education, he has some culture, and speaks with considerable correctness and much force. So deeply interested were the people that they insisted that Mr. Brown should continue the story of his life, which he did, amid frequent and loud applause.

This meeting gave general satisfaction, and a collection of $112 was taken in behalf of our brethren from New Orleans, to defray their expenses.

DEPARTURES.

Our brethren, Ross, Green, and others, left Chicago to-day for New Orleans, where they will arrive on Saturday afternoon, if all is well. Their visit here has done them much good. They have now a clear idea of the power and piety of the Old Church, and they return home with fresh assurance to their people that of that Church "the half has not been told them."

THEY ARE COMING.

The General Conference has received telegrams from the General Conference of the African and Zion Methodists now in session at Washington: to the effect that delegates were en route to our body to consider the terms of church affiliation. These delegates are to be presented to the Conference to-morrow at 10 A. M. I feel clear that an ecclesiastical union of all the branches of the Methodist family now in the South is not only desirable but would be of great service to the cause of Christ. But the mode of union is difficult because of official positions, and I judge this may prove an insuperable barrier. But I will not anticipate; let the future speak for itself.

NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE.

The Committee on the Book Concern have agreed to report to the General Conference in favor of adopting the New Orleans Advocate as an official journal, and also of establishing a Book Depository in our city, and the adoption of the report is more than probable. These are important measures, and can not fail to strengthen our work in the Southwest; especially the supply of books for our people will meet a real need.

GRANT AND COLFAX.

May 22.—Place at the head of your column Ulysses S. Grant and Schuyler Colfax, for the next President and Vice-President of the United States. The National Union Republican Convention have unanimously chosen them for these high offices, and the American people will approve their action. A more orderly, temperate, and intelligent political body never assembled in this country, and the unanimity of sentiment and action is without parallel. When the unanimous vote for Grant was announced a curtain in the rear of the chairman was raised revealing a magnificent picture representing our national capitol, with Grant sitting to the right of the entrance, and at his feet stood the goddess of liberty, with one hand pointing to Grant and the other to the capitol, while high above the pediment were the words "Match Him." And at that moment three doves painted red, white, and blue were let fly amid the wildest enthusiasm. These were birds of promise who will return to us bearing the olive leaf, the assurance of dry land. The Convention has adjourned. The nominees are before us, and we will elect them. Colfax was chosen for the purity of his character, and Mr. Wade rejected because of his profanity. Let the Church in the South, therefore, rally and support Colfax.

Beware of the Egyptian Corn Humbug.

An individual under the name of F. E. G. Lindsey, of Abingdon, Virginia, is sending out circulars, professing to have for sale a new and wonderful variety of corn, called "Egyptian corn," for which he charges $1 50 per package.

He also professes to be an editor of a paper called the "Itinerant Cornucopia." From our own experience with this circular we came to the conclusion that the whole thing was a swindle, and the person styling himself F. E. G. Lindsey a villain. The circular was sent to us a year or two ago as an advertisement, and was published accordingly. But our bills for advertising were all sent in vain, as we never received a single response.

We received a letter from one of our subscribers in Michigan, stating that he had sent the money according to direction for packages of corn for himself and neighbors, but never received the corn, nor could he get any reply to his letters of inquiry.

We received another of these circulars a month or two since, requesting us to insert the same as an advertisement, and send bill, "making it as low as you can for cash." We, of course, threw it aside. But seeing the advertisement in several of the papers of this State, and fearing that many may be swindled thereby, we take this opportunity of warning all against sending their money for this "Egyptian Corn," as they would probably all see Egypt before they would see the corn. We hope also that no other editors will be deceived into publishing this circular, and that those who have been deceived will immediately warn their readers of the deception.

We trust that arrangements may be speedily made with the sheriff at Abingdon to arrest those engaged in this business.

The Constitutional Union, published at Washington, urges the nomination of Andrew Johnson and S. F. Cary, of Ohio, as the Democratic candidates for President and Vice-President.

On the Desirableness of a Classical Education.

New Orleans, May 26, 1868.

Mr. Editor: Though far from being a classical scholar, and therefore unable to show any of the great advantages of a classical education, yet I am decidedly of the opinion that it would be well for the youth of Louisiana to be thoroughly trained in the classics. The slight acquaintance that I have of the dead languages I find to be of no little benefit to me. I would not, however, be supposed to speak in praise of the classics, because I have learned a little something of them. I speak in praise of them chiefly because so many great men, who have been trained in them, speak so highly of them. These men of themselves are sufficient proof to show of how much value a thorough knowledge of the classics is.

That there are those in Louisiana who oppose the idea of giving the youth a thorough classical education I am aware. But such men, generally speaking, have no knowledge of the classics themselves, and are therefore unable to see wherein the youth would be benefited by the study. They have spent the greater part of their lifetime in accumulating wealth (a small something compared with the fame of the true scholar), and think because they have, without any knowledge of the dead languages, contrived to "make a living," or to rise to some degree of popularity, it is a mere useless waste of time to study them. They have no aspiration other than that for this world's goods, the largest accumulation of which will not insure to them one-tenth of the fame that Pope would have received had he done nothing more than translated the "Iliad." That the classics form one of the most important branches in the education of a man I presume no one of the least literary attainment will deny. Of the greater benefits of the study of the classics it is not my purpose to speak. I leave this for another more competent than myself. My design is merely to notice a few of the minor benefits of a knowledge of the classics.

He who has some acquaintance with the classics has the benefit of being able to spell and pronounce correctly almost two-thirds of the compound or derivative words in the English language, the majority of which may be traced from the Greek and Latin. Nothing, perhaps, can show more plainly the scholarship of a man than his pronunciation in speaking and his orthography in writing. As small as this may appear, it is nevertheless a fact.

No man can justly be called a scholar who can neither pronounce nor spell correctly. It is true persons may, by their dictionaries, learn to pronounce very correctly. Put them on the orthography of the words and they will fall through.

In order to ascertain the correct orthography of the many "big words" often met with by the scholar, the mere "English scholar," as he is called, must refer to his dictionary. Not so with him who has studied the classics. Words which he may never have seen before are easily traced to their origin, and their meanings found out. And it is the same in writing the words. The classical scholar never writes "satisfaction" for "satisfaction," or "transmireene" for "transmarine."

But a knowledge of the classics also enables the scholar to ascertain the meanings of words without reference to a dictionary. In reading he often comes in contact with words that he may never have seen before. He does not stop to take up his dictionary to find the meaning of those words. No sooner does his eye fall upon them than he readily recognizes them as being derived from such and such a word or words. The meaning thus found out, also, is better than any he can get from a dictionary.

By knowing the derivation of the word he is able to see its full force and beauty. The dictionary tells him it means so and so; his tracing it to its origin tells him why and how it means so and so. Greek and Latin words when put into English lose all of two-thirds of their original force and beauty.

The various small Latin phrases particularly used in the English language can not be understood and always used correctly by him who has not studied the language. It is true they may often be written correctly, but seldom if ever pronounced correctly by the mere English scholar. He uses them principally because they pass for "big words" in English. But he can not see their force and beauty. Why they mean this or that he can not tell. These, however, are mere minor points, holding no comparison, so to speak, with the greater benefits to be derived from a knowledge of the classics.

Meeting a gentleman yesterday he inquired of me the meaning and derivation of the word "anatomy;" but before I could begin to tell he continued by saying that he knew that "ana" in Greek meant to "cut," and that he thought "tomy" must mean "up," and that he had concluded the word meant to "cut up." The fact was that he had never studied Greek, but he wished to have me think that he had. He evidently took the meaning of the word from a dictionary, which told him it meant to "cut up," from two Greek words, etc.

Another gentleman in my presence looking at the words "Memorabilia of Xenophon,' taking them to be Latin words and wishing to "show off," read them, "To the memory of Napoleon."

If these two gentlemen had even a partial acquaintance with the Greek and Latin they could never have made such glaring blunders. Best not to attempt to analyze or translate words unless we have some good reason to believe we are able to do so.

Again, a knowledge of the classics enables one to speak more fluently and write more intelligibly. That is, the classical man say say whatever he has to say in a much more fluent manner, not having to stop always to think what to say. Words seem naturally to come to him. In writing it is the same thing. Is it not a fact that nearly all the great pulpit orators, political speakers, and writers that ever lived within the last five centuries or more, and even previously, were thoroughly classical scholars? He who has read their lives will answer yes, The greatest orators, poets, and philosophers that ever lived are indebted to the classics chiefly for what they may have done. If it were possible for you to question them in reference to their abilities they would tell you that it was their knowledge of the classics that made them what they are.

Thinking, Mr. Editor, that I have already encroached too much upon your space, I must abruptly close.

Yours respectfully,
FREDERICK K. HYDE.

The Peace of God.

"WHEN HE GIVETH QUIETNESS WHO THEN CAN MAKE TROUBLE?"

This is a world of turmoil and care, and the greatest need of the toilers here is a sure resting place. Weariness comes to all, yet in different phases. The seeker of selfish gratification though often lagging in the pursuit ever views the pleasure most coveted just beyond, almost within his grasp. Present attainments lose their anticipated value in possession, and the brilliant colors with which imagination paints the future soon fade. Often, too, when to the fullest extent rejoicing in some newly found happiness a reaction comes, deep gloom enshrouds the heart darkening every avenue of hope. Yet if the feelings are analyzed no definite cause appears for the transition from exultation to despondency. Is there none? Yes; and one of universal application. These souls of ours were not designed to find their highest joy in mere selfish indulgencies. Such a perversion of their powers dwarfs instead of expanding them, and all that is noble and true within us cries out against the sacrilege; hence arises this dissatisfaction with that which seemed a real good, an emotion often developing to the most bitter despair. This is a friendly warning, and its language, if rightly interpreted: "You are pursuing a dangerous course; seek a safer one, ere the shadows before you so deepen that you may not escape their gloom."

These yearnings for something higher and better, these struggles to burst the bonds of evil, are the Spirit's opportunities. The invitation: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden" then reaches the heart with a force that, in moments of conscious enjoyment would be impossible. Happy the soul that yields to the sweet wooings of the Comforter; that consents to cast aside the fetters of sin, accepting in their stead the freedom that a Savior's love bestows. Only in thus yielding is rest amid the conflict of life secured.

Strange to our earthly wisdom are the paths by which our Father leads his erring ones from darkness to his glorious light, "For now we see through a glass darkly." The results are marvelous, and we often wonder until faith imparts a new lesson of the omnipotence of God's grace.

Very cheering are the glimpses, that this quickened inner sight reveals. Sometimes these views are caught in retracing the path already trod. "Why was I thus led?" questions the trusting heart. As when in a diversified landscape the rays of the setting sun flood the valley with a golden glow while the surrounding hill-tops are comparatively in shade; so the eternal sunlight of God's truth shines upon the circling track of the years that are past, showing the hidden dangers, and how a protecting Providence safely led the traveler through them. In that one glance of faith the soul rests satisfied, confiding the present and the future to a wisdom that can not err, to a love that is unfathomable.

This is the "quietness" which no "trouble" of earth can disturb—the "peace" that is the inheritance of those who have chosen Christ as their portion.

New Orleans, May 23, 1868.

Advertisements.

As a general rule advertisements are well written, striking and characteristic, but sometimes they are worded with an utter disregard to syntax, and sometimes the punctuation renders them a trifle obscure, as witness the following, cut from various papers in our office:

"Wanted a steady young man to look after a horse of the Methodist persuasion."

"To Let—A cottage in Newport containing eight rooms and an acre of ground."

"For Sale—A piano by a lady about to cross the channel in an oak case with carved legs."

"Lost—A small lady's watch with a white face, also two ivory young ladies' work-boxes. A mahogany gentleman's dressing-case, and a small pony belonging to a young lady with a silver mane and tail."

"Lost or strade from the scriber a sheep all over white—one leg was black and half his body—all persons shall receive five dollars to bring him. He was a she goat."

A lady recently advertised in a city paper that she wanted a "gentleman for breakfast and tea," while another in the same journal asks for "a husband having a Roman nose with strong religious tendencies," and a third party seeks to recover a "lost wallet belonging to a gentleman made of calf-skin."

An advertisement of cheap shoes in a country paper has the following nota bene:

"N. B.—Ladies wishing those cheap shoes will do well to call soon, as they won't last long."

A man once advertised for "competent persons to undertake the sale of a new medicine," and adds, we doubt not with truth, "It will be profitable to the undertaker."

The following extract from a medical advertisement is perhaps correct:

"Consumptives, cough while you can, for after you have taken one bottle of my mixture you can't."

What Rum Will Do.

Some years ago in one of the counties of New York a worthy man was decoyed into a licensed tavern, and tempted to drink until he was drunk. In the delirium of drunkeness he went home and murdered his wife in the most barbarous manner. He was carried to the jail while drunk, and kept through the night. Awaking in the morning and looking around upon the walls, and seeing the bars upon the windows, he exclaimed:

"Is this a jail?"

"Yes, you are in a jail," answered some one.

"What am I here for?" was the earnest inquiry.

"For murder!" was the answer.

With still greater astonishment and earnestness he inquired, "Does my wife know it?"

"Your wife know it?" said some one; "why, it was your wife you have killed."

On this announcement he dropped suddenly as if he had been struck dead. Let it be remembered that the constable who carried him to jail sold him the liquor which caused his drunkenness; the justice who issued the warrant was one of those who signed his license, and the sheriff who hung him also sold liquor and kept a ten-pin alley.

Speech of Speaker Colfax.

As we have already been informed by telegraph, a large number of the Republicans of Washington complimented General Grant and Speaker Colfax with serenades on the night their nominations were made public. Mr. Colfax made the following admirable response on that occasion:

My Friends—I thank you with all the emotions of a grateful heart for this flattering manifestation of your confidence and regard. I congratulate you on the auspicious opening of the eventful campaign on which we are entering. The Chicago Convention, representing the entire continental area of the republic, every State, every Territory, every district, and every delegate, from ocean to ocean, declared that their first and only choice for President was Ulysses S. Grant. (Great applause.) Brave and yet unassuming, reticent and yet when necessary firm as the eternal hills (applause); with every thought and hope and aspiration for his country; with modesty only equaled by his merits, it is not extravagant for me to say that he is to-day the man of all other men in the land—first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen. (Great applause.)

His name is the very synonym of victory, and he will lead the Union hosts to triumph at the polls as he led the Union armies to triumph in the field.

But greater even than the conqueror of Vicksburg and the destroyer of the rebellion is the glorious inspiration of our noble principles. Animated by the sublime truths of the Declaration of Independence, our banner bears an inscription more magnetic than the names of its standard bearers, which the whole world can see as it floats to the breeze—liberty and loyalty, justice and public safety. Defying all prejudices, we are for uplifting the low, and protecting the oppressed. (Applause.) History records, to the immortal honor of our organization, that it saved the nation and emancipated a race. We struck the fetters from the limbs of the slave, and lifted millions into the glorious sunlight of liberty. We placed the emancipated slave on his feet as a man, and put into his right hand the ballot to protect his manhood and his rights. We staked our political existence on the reconstruction of the revolted States on the sure and eternal corner-stone of loyalty, and we shall triumph. I know there is no holiday contest before us, but with energy and zeal, with principles that humanity will approve, and that I believe God will bless, we shall go through the contest conquering and to conquer, and on the fourth of March next the people's champion will be borne by the people's votes to yonder White House, which I regret to say is now dishonored by its unworthy occupant.

Then, with peace and confidence, we may expect our beloved country to enter upon a career of prosperity which shall eclipse the most brilliant annals of our past. I bid you God speed in this work, and now good night.

Complimentary.

The Chicago Post sketched the personnel of the National Convention and said:

W. P. Kellogg, of Louisiana, attracts more admiration from the ladies, perhaps, than any other of the delegates, and deservedly, if a handsome face ever deserves admiration. His only formidable rival in their esteem is General D. E. Sickles, of New York, whose former facial attractions have given place to a careworn look, but whose gallantry and wounds have given him an additional interest in the regards of all.

Governor Hamilton, of Texas, looks like a man of about fifty-five years of age, well formed, and about six feet in height. He wears long hair and beard, both streaked with gray, and has a general expression of gruff decision, the natural result of the course of life a Union man has had to lead in Texas.

Governor Brown, of Georgia, is a tall, spare man, and stoops slightly. He has a high forehead, and deeply set eyes. His face is cleanly shaven, except a small tuft of beard under the chin. He speaks deliberately, but not with hesitation, and force is added to his remarks by earnestness of tone and gesture.

Governor Brown's Speech.—In the Chicago Convention Mr. Conway, of Louisiana, said: I suppose that it is part of the settled policy of the Republican party, to-day, to have the South come into the Convention Union end foremost—(laughter)—but we have another marked event of moment. There is with us to-day, in full part and full fellowship, one of the former Governors, in the days of the rebellion, of one of the rebellious States, who has since become reconstructed (applause), and has proved himself in fire true as steel, a genuine Republican and in full fellowship with the Republican party. I move that Ex-Governor Joseph E. Brown, of Georgia, be invited to say a few words. (Tremendous applause, and cries of Brown, Brown.)

The Chair—It is hardly necessary to put a motion which has such a reception. Will Governor Brown address the Convention?

Shrewd Financier.—The Jackson (Miss.) Pilot says:

We are informed that a certain sheriff from a rural county came to this city a few days ago with some $2000 in money to turn over to the treasurer, but finding that he could make a speck by buying warrants at a discount, went into the market, bought the warrants, turned them over to the treasurer at their face, pocketed the thirty or forty per cent discount, and went home. We are also informed that this is a common practice, though in direct violation of the law. And some of these fine days the parties may get picked up at it.

The Massachusetts Democratic State Convention met at Worcester on the 20th. Charles G. Greene, of Boston, presided. John Quincy Adams, late Democratic candidate for Governor, made a brief speech. No platform was adopted. J. G. Abbott, Reuben Noble, Josiah Bardwell, and George W. Gill were chosen delegates to the National Convention.

THE CHICAGO CONVENTION

THE RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED.

NOMINATION OF PRESIDENT

DETAILS OF THE ROLL CALL.

THE VICE-PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATION.

The National Executive Committee.

The Chicago papers have very full reports of the proceedings of the Republican National Convention at Chicago. The limited space in our columns precludes the entire republication of the proceedings.

The time having arrived to receive the reports of committees, that on resolutions was called:

The Platform.

Colonel Thompson, of Indiana, chairman of the committee, said:

The committee to whom the subject of preparing resolutions for this Convention was referred have instructed me to submit to the Convention the following report:

The Union Republican party of the United States, assembled in National Convention in the city of Chicago on the twentieth of May, 1868, make the following declaration of principles:

I. We congratulate the country on the assured success of the restoration policy of Congress as evinced by the adoption of all the measures of Congress for the reconstruction of the States lately in rebellion—the Constitution securing equal civil and political rights of the people—and we regard it as the duty of the government to sustain these States, and to prevent the return in them of anarchy and misrule.

II. The guarantee by Congress of equal suffrage to all loyal men of the South was demanded by the considerations of the public safety, of gratitude, and of justice, and must have meaning. Still, the subject of suffrage in all the loyal States properly belongs to the people of those States.

III. We denounce all forms of repudiation as a national crime. The nation requires the payment of the public indebtedness with the utmost good faith to all the creditors, both at home and abroad, not only according to the letter, but the spirit of the laws under which it was contracted.

IV. It is due to the labor of the nation that taxation should be reduced, as far as the public interest will permit.

V. The national debt, contracted as it has been for the national salvation, should be extended over a fair period for redemption, and it is the duty of Congress to reduce the rate of interest thereon, whenever it can honestly be done.

VI. The best policy to diminish our burden of debt is to improve her credit, so that capitalists shall loan us money at lower rates of interest than that now paid—a most important benefit—to pay as fast as possible consistent with our agreements—to warn off all repudiation, threatened or suspected.

VII. The government of the United States should be administered with the strictest economy; and the corruptions which have been so shamefully nursed and fostered by Andrew Johnson call loudly for radical reform.

VIII. We profoundly deplore that the untimely and tragic death of Abraham Lincoln should require the accession of Andrew Johnson to the Presidency; he has acted treacherously to the people who have elected him, and to the cause he was pledged to support; has usurped high legislative and judicial functions; he has refused to execute the laws, and has used his high office to influence other officers to ignore and violate the laws; has employed his executive power to render insecure the proper peace, liberty, and life of all citizens; he has abused the pardoning power; has denounced the National Legislature as unconstitutional; has persistently and corruptly resisted by every means in his power every attempt at the restoration of the States lately in rebellion, and has perverted the public patronage into an engine of wholesale corruption, and has been justly impeached of high crimes and misdemeanors, and properly pronounced guilty by the united votes of thirty-five Senators.

IX. The doctrines of Great Britain and other European powers that because a man is once a subject he is always so must be resisted at every hazard by the United States as a relic of feudal times not authorized by the laws of nations, and at war with our national honor and independence. Naturalized citizens are entitled to be protected in all their rights of citizenship as those who are native born; and no citizen of the United States, native or naturalized, must be liable to arrest or imprisonment by any foreign power for acts done or words spoken in this country, and if so arrested and imprisoned it is the duty of the Government to interfere in his behalf.

X. Of all who were faithful in the trials of the late war there were none entitled to more especial honor than the brave soldiers and seamen who endured the hardships of the campaign, and imperiled their lives in the service of the country. The bounties and pensions provided by law to these brave defenders are obligations never to be forgotten. The widows and orphans of the gallant dead are the wards of the people—a sacred legacy bequeathed to the nation's protecting care.

XI. As immigration has in the past added to the wealth of the country, the development of our resources, and the increase of our power as a nation, the coming of the oppressed of all nations should be fostered and encouraged by an impartial and just policy.

XII. This Convention tenders its sympathy to all the oppressed peoples which are struggling for their rights.

The Platform Adopted.

The motion was then put, and the resolutions adopted almost unanimously, only three or four voices voting in the negative.

Additional Resolutions.

Mr. Thompson reported an additional resolution that an adjournment of this convention shall not work a dissolution of the same, but it shall remain as organized, subject to be called together at any time and place that the National Republican Executive Committee shall designate. Adopted.

At the call of the Executive Committee the resolution was adopted.

Mr. Schurz: I will now read what I intended to ask the Convention to adopt as an independent resolution:

Resolved, That we highly commend the spirit of magnanimity and forgiveness with which men who have served the rebellion, but now frankly and honestly co-operate with us in restoring the peace of the country, and reconstructing the Southern State governments upon the basis of impartial justice and equal rights, are received back into the communion of the loyal people; and we favor the removal of the disqualifications and restrictions imposed upon the late rebels in the same measure as the spirit of disloyalty will direct, and as may be consistent with the safety of the loyal people. (Cries of "Good! Good!")

That is my first amendment. It seems to me that the platform of the Republican party ought to contain at least a recognition of the great charter of our rights and liberties—the Declaration of Independence. I would, therefore, move that the following resolution be added to those already reported by the committee.

Resolved, That we recognize the great principles laid down in the immortal Declaration of Independence as the true foundation of democratic government, and we hail with gladness every effort toward making these principles a living reality on every inch of American soil.

When the President of the Convention announced that nominations were in order, General Logan arose and said:

Then, sir, in the name of the loyal citizens, soldiers, and sailors of this great Republic of the United States of America, in the name of loyalty, of liberty, of humanity, of justice; in the name of the National Union Republican party, I nominate as candidate for the Chief Magistrate of this nation, ULYSSES S. GRANT. [The greatest enthusiasm prevailed upon the nomination of General Grant. The mass arose to their feet and gave three rousing cheers for the nominee. Handkerchiefs were waved and the band played "Hail to the Chief."]

A Delegate from South Carolina—I move you, sir, that the vote be taken by acclamation.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

The President—The rules designate the manner in which the vote shall be taken. The list of States and Territories will be called by the Secretary, and as they are called, shall designate him whom they would have for President of the United States. It is understood, under the rules, that the chairmen of the delegations shall announce the vote for their respective States.

The Secretary—The State of Massachusetts.

The Chairman of Massachusetts delegation—Mr. President, the State of Massachusetts gives twenty-four votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The President — Massachusetts gives twenty-four votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The Secretary—The State of Michigan.

The Chairman of the Michigan delegation—Mr. President, the State of Michigan, following the State of Massachusetts, gives sixteen votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The President—Michigan gives sixteen votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The Secretary—The State of Minnesota.

The Chairman of the Minnesota delegation—Mr. President, Minnesota, the "North Star State," gives all she has—eight votes—for Ulysses S. Grant. (Applause.)

The Secretary—The State of Mississippi.

The Chairman of the Mississippi delegation—Mr. President, the State of Mississippi, the home of Jefferson Davis, repudiates the traitor, and offers her fourteen votes for Ulysses S. Grant. (Applause.)

The President—Mississippi gives fourteen votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The Secretary—The State of Missouri.

The Chairman of the Missouri delegation, Mr. President, the State Convention of Missouri instructed the delegation to vote for the nomination of Ulysses S. Grant upon the radical platform. We have confidence that General Grant will carry out the principles of the platform. Missouri gives General Grant twenty-two votes.

The President—Missouri gives twenty-two votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The Secretary—The Territory of Montana.

The Chairman of the Montana delegation, The mountains of Montana are vocal with the name of Grant. She gives him two votes. (Applause and laughter.)

The President—Montana gives two votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The Secretary—The State of Nebraska.

The Chairman of the Nebraska delegation—Mr. President, Nebraska, the last State admitted into this Union, and the first to adopt impartial suffrage, (applause) gives six votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The President—Nebraska gives six votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The Secretary—The State of Nevada.

The Chairman of the Nevada Delegation—The Silver State has but six votes, but proposes to give six more in the fall. Nevada gives six votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The Secretary—The State of New Jersey.

The Chairman of the New Jersey delegation—Mr. President: The New Jersey delegation instructed by her convention—and in giving those instructions she spoke the voice of every man of the Republican party within her borders—now deliver their fourteen votes for Ulysses S. Grant, not only a victorious soldier, but conspicuous for calmness of judgment, sincerity of patriotism, and personal honesty.

The President—The State of New York.

The Chairman—The State of New York gives sixty-six votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The President—The State of New York gives sixty-six votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The Secretary—The State of North Carolina.

The Chairman—North Carolina, known as the land of the "tar heels," (great laughter), gives eighteen votes for Ulysses S. Grant, and will give twice eighteen—thirty-six thousand votes, all of which will stick. (Great applause.)

The Chairman — North Carolina gives eighteen votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The Secretary—The State of Ohio.

The Chairman—Ohio has the honor of being the mother of our great leader. Ohio is on the line, and on that line Ohio proposes, under that Captain who never knew defeat, to fight it out through the summer and in the autumn, when a great victory will be secured. The people of that State have directed the delegates to cast their votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The President—Ohio casts forty-two votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The State of Pennsylvania.

The Chairman—The State of Pennsylvania casts fifty-two votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

Rhode Island.

The Chairman—Little Rhody, small in stature but patriotic, gives her eight votes for General Ulysses S. Grant, and wishes she had more. (Applause.)

The President—The State of South Carolina.

The Chairman—The State of South Carolina, the birth-place and home of John C. Calhoun and the doctrine of State rights, first to withdraw herself from the Union, directs me through her representatives sent here by a Republican majority of 43,470, (applause), returning as we do to the councils of those who desired only to preserve the Union, arm in arm and heart to heart with Massachusetts, (great cheers), gives her twelve votes for General Ulysses S. Grant. (Immense applause.)

The President—South Carolina gives twelve votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The State of Tennessee.

The Chairman—Mr. President: Tennessee being one of the Southern States that was forced into the rebellion, Tennessee being the first to reconstruct and be readmitted into the Union, and to-day being in the enjoyment of a most liberal republican government in the United States, casts her twenty votes for Ulysses S. Grant (cheers), and with the solemn pledge never again to present the name for President or Vice-President of such a traitor as Andrew Johnson. (Loud cheers.)

The President—Tennessee gives twenty votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The State of Texas.

The Chairman, Judge Paschal—Texas, through her delegates here assembled, have instructed me to cast twelve votes for Ulysses S. Grant, from the empire State of the South, containing 275,000 square miles, and capable of sustaining 20,000,000 of people. (Applause.)

The President—Texas gives twelve votes for Grant.

The State of Vermont.

The Chairman—Mr. President: The Republicans of Vermont, through their delegation, give their ten votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The President—Vermont gives ten votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The State of Virginia.

The Chairman—Mr. President: The State of New Virginia, rising from the grave that General Grant dug for her in the Appomatox in 1865, comes up here with her twenty votes and enlists under his banner, and they propose in next November to move on the enemy's works. (Loud applause.)

The President—Virginia casts twenty votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

West Virginia.

The Chairman—Mr. President: West Virginia, a corner of the rebellion which never gave a Democratic majority, gives freely and willingly her ten votes for Ulysses S. Grant for President. (Applause.)

The President—West Virginia gives ten votes for Ulysses S. Grant.

The State of Wisconsin.

The Chairman—Mr. President: Wisconsin, the last on the roll of States, adds her voice to that of her sister States, and gives her sixteen votes for Ulysses S. Grant. (Applause.)

The President—Wisconsin gives sixteen votes for Ulysses S. Grant, and the roll is completed. Gentlemen of the Convention, you have 650 votes. You have given 650 votes for General Ulysses S. Grant. (Tremendous applause.)

The audience gave three enthusiastic cheers for General Grant.

Enthusiasm.

The band played "Yankee Doodle."

A Delegate—I move that we try our throats with three times three, with swinging hats and waving handkerchiefs, for General Grant.

Nine tremendous cheers were given.

The cheers were given with tremendous enthusiasm, and ere they had been concluded the Union flag which had covered the background of the stage was raised, displaying a beautiful painting, representing General Grant seated on a pedestal at the entrance of the temple of liberty, while a beautiful female figure, representing Columbia, points proudly to the chieftain—the whole surmounted by the legend "Match him." This exhibition was the signal for more cheers.

After the subsidence of the cheers, a quartette of gentlemen, composed of Chaplain McCabe and three others, appeared at the chairman's table and sang spontaneously, and with fine voices, a song with the following refrain:

"We'll rally again, we'll rally again,
With the soldier and sailor and bummer;
And we'll fight it out here on this same Union line,
No odds if it takes us all summer!"

Each repetition of the chorus thrilled the assembly with new enthusiasm and elicited new bursts of applause.

The band played "The Battle Cry of Freedom," and the whole Convention joined in the chorus:

"The Union forever, hurrah! boys, hurrah!
Down with the traitor, and up with the star;
And we'll rally round the flag, boys, rally once again,
Shouting the battle cry of freedom!"

The President—The Convention will be in order.

Mr. Seymour, of Wisconsin—I move that the President be authorized to telegraph the result of the vote just taken to General Grant. (Cheers.) Carried with cheers.

The President—The Chair awaits the pleasure of the Convention.

Nominations for Vice-President.

It was then moved that the Convention proceed to nominate a candidate for the office of Vice-President of the United States, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. Price, of Virginia, then rose and nominated for that office Hon. Henry Wilson, of Massachusetts (amid applause), supporting his motion with a speech strongly eulogistic of Senator Wilson.

Mr. Claflin, of Massachusetts, seconded the nomination in a strong speech.

Mr. Lane, of Indiana, presented the name of that tried, trusted, and true patriot Schuyler Colfax. (Tremendous applause.) His purity of life, the speaker said, and his long identification with political life made it unnecessary for him to pay him a eulogy. Though he was an Indianian his fame was world-wide.

He traced Mr. Colfax's career in politics from the time when he commenced, a disciple of Henry Clay, in the Whig party, to the present day. Mr. Colfax had supported every measure of Congressional reconstruction. He declared that with Mr. Colfax as our standard bearer the Republicans would carry Indiana, sometimes slanderously denominated a doubtful State. He extolled Colfax as a representative of the religious and moral element. Finally, Schuyler Colfax was no doubtful man. He had stood by reconstruction, and, thank God, he had stood by impeachment. He would ever be found true to the principles of the Republican party.

Mr. Parker, of New Jersey, in behalf of the delegation from that State, disclaimed all prejudice of locality, and seconded the nomination of Schuyler Colfax as the candidate for the young men—their representative, loved by them beyond all others for the charms of mind and heart which make up the true patriot. With Grant and Colfax, he believed that State could in November be redeemed from the thrall of Democracy.

Mr. Cutcheon, of Michigan, in behalf of the delegation from that State supported the nomination of Mr. Colfax, declaring that no name could excite so much enthusiasm among the Republicans of Michigan as his. He promised 30,000 majority from Michigan for Grant and Colfax.

Mr. Brown, of Pennsylvania, pledged Alleghany county in that State, which he represented, for 10,000 majority for Schuyler Colfax.

Mr. Hassaurak, of Ohio, nominated Benjamin F. Wade, of that State. (Immense applause.)

Mr. Spalding, of Ohio, said that the delegation of Ohio was never before united; now it has only one mind and one voice, and that is for Grant and Wade.

Mr. Jones, of North Carolina, seconded the nomination of Mr. Wade, in behalf of the delegation from that State, which was unanimous on that subject.

Judge Tremaine, of New York, arose, and in behalf of 400,000 Union Republicans of the Empire State, presented the name of her favorite son, Reuben E. Fenton. (Great applause.)

Mr. Warmoth, of Louisiana, rose on behalf of the delegation from Louisiana to second the nomination of Mr. Fenton.

Mr. Storrs, of Illinois, spoke in behalf of a portion of the delegation of this State for Mr. Fenton.

He was followed by General Logan, Chairman of the same delegation, who announced that the vote of Illinois would stand 15 for B. F. Wade, (cheers) 11 for Hannibal Hamlin, (cheers) 3 for Fenton, and 3 for Colfax.

Mr. Wood, of Kentucky, said that he was authorized in behalf of the delegation from that State to present the name of James Speed for the Vice-Presidency.

Mr. Sands, of Maryland, nominated in behalf of that State the Hon. John A. J. Creswell, now United States Senator from Maryland.

Mr. Taylor, of Kentucky, seconded the nomination of Mr. Speed, and supported it in a five minutes' speech.

Mr. Creswell, of Maryland, arose (amid cheers) and declined in an appropriate speech the nomination of himself, and announced his own individual vote for glorious old Ben Wade, a man whose whole life had been a tribute to the doctrines of Republicanism. (Loud applause.) With him we can march to certain victory; and one more victory makes eternal the truths for which we have fought so hard and so long. (Great applause.)

Mr. Forney, of Pennsylvania, Chairman of the Pennsylvania delegation, nominated Andrew G. Curtin in behalf of that delegation, and called upon Mr. McClure, of the same State, to second the nomination, himself being too hoarse to make himself heard by the Convention.

Mr. McClure, in behalf of the 300,000 Republicans of Pennsylvania, on whom devolved the duty of carrying the centre of the enemy's column in October, declared that the preference of that State was for its beloved Governor Curtin, and promising, if he should be nominated, a gun from the Keystone State on the second Tuesday of October which will cheer the hearts of the Republicans.

General Williamson, of Iowa, nominated James Harlan of that State, and passed a eulogy on his character. This was known to be like the nomination of Mr. Speed, and one or two others expected yet to come, simply a complimentary one.

Mr. Whittemore, of South Carolina, announced the voice of his State for Henry Wilson.

Mr. Keffer, of Alabama, in behalf of the poor step-children of the Union residing in his State, nominated William D. Kelley, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Seymour, of Wisconsin, announced that the vote of that State would be divided between Fenton, Colfax, and Hamlin. He called for the nomination of some one who was head and shoulders above corruption, and he believed either of the men named answered this requirement.

General Shepley, of Maine, nominated Hannibal Hamlin, of Maine, as the hearty choice of the people of the Pine Tree State.

Mr. Raster, of Illinois, seconded the nomination of Hamlin, on behalf of eleven delegates of Illinois.

Mr. Hubbard of West Virginia, desired a vote to be taken.

Mr. Martin, of Kansas, desired to present the name of S. C. Pomeroy.

General Sickles, of New York, advocated the nomination of Fenton. The Convention of New York had thought it well to bestow upon some one of our war governors the second honor, Buckingham, Salomon, Andrew, Curtin, Fenton. He thought it appropriate to nominate upon the ticket with the man who never lost a battle, the name of a man who never suffered political defeat.

A delegate from Virginia moved that nominations be declared closed. Carried.

The Vote for Vice-President.

The Convention proceeded to vote for a candidate for Vice-President.

The result of the first ballot was as follows:

Alabama—For Wade, 4; Wilson, 4; Kelly, 6; Colfax, 1; Fenton, 2. Arkansas—For Wade, 1; Wilson, 9. California—For Wade, 5; Wilson, 1; Colfax, 2; Fenton, 2. Connecticut—For Wade, 2; Wilson, 4; Colfax, 2; Fenton, 4. Colorado—For Colfax, 6. Delaware—For Wilson, 6; Colfax, 6. Dakota—For Colfax, 2. District of Columbia—For Wade, 2. Florida—Wilson, 2; Fenton, 2. Georgia—Wade, 3; Wilson, 6; Colfax, 2; Fenton, 6; Curtin, 1. Idaho—Fenton, 2. Illinois—Wade, 15; Colfax, 3; Fenton, 3; Hamlin, 11. Indiana—For Colfax, 26. Iowa—Harlan, 16. Kansas—Pomeroy, 6. Kentucky—Speed, 22. Louisiana—Fenton, 14. Maine—Hamlin, 14. Maryland—Wade, 1; Cresswell, 13. Massachusetts—Wilson, 24. Michigan—Colfax, 16. Minnesota—Wade, 8. Mississippi—Wade, 5; Wilson, 5; Fenton, 3. Missouri—Wade, 20; Colfax, 2. Montana—Wade, 2. Nebraska—Wade, 6. Nevada—Wade, 2; Fenton, 4. New Hampshire—Wilson, 10. New Jersey—Colfax, 14. New York—Fenton, 66. North Carolina—Wade, 18. Ohio—Wade, 42. Oregon—Colfax, 6. Pennsylvania—Wade, 3; Colfax, 1; Curtin, 48. Rhode Island—Wade, 2; Colfax, 3; Wilson, 2; Hamlin, 1. South Carolina—Wilson, 12. Tennessee—Wade, 3; Colfax, 6; Fenton, 11. Texas—Wade, 1; Wilson, 11. Vermont—Colfax, 10. Virginia—Wade, 2; Wilson, 18. West Virginia—Wade, 2; Colfax, 1; Wilson, 5; Hamlin, 1. Wisconsin—Colfax, 7; Wilson, 6; Curtin, 1; Hamlin, 2. Total—Wade, 149; Colfax, 118; Wilson, 119; Fenton, 132; Curtin, 52; Hamlin, 34; Speed, 22; Harlan, 16; Kelley, 6; Creswell, 14.

Second ballot—Wade's vote increased to 170; Colfax, 149; Fenton, 140; Wilson 113.

Third ballot—Wade, 178; Colfax, 165; Fenton, 139; Wilson, 101.

Fourth ballot—Wade, 204; Fenton, 144; Colfax, 186; Wilson, 87.

Fifth ballot—Pennsylvania went over to Colfax, and with other changes carried the nomination, Wade receiving 204.

Before the summing up of tho fifth ballot was announced General Williamson, of Iowa, rose and desired to change the vote of that State which had been Colfax 8, Fenton 8, and make it unanimous for Colfax. (Great cheering.)

He was followed by a delegate from Connecticut announcing that State, which had voted six for Wilson, two for Wade, and four for Colfax, as unanimous for Colfax.

Then the votes of Louisiana, Massachusetts, and other States were changed to Colfax entire, and the Massachusetts delegation announced the withdrawal of Mr. Wilson for the candidacy.

Other States followed amid loud and excited cheering, and vociferous calls upon the Chairman, each State desiring to be among the first to confer its unanimous vote upon the Indiana statesman. A delegate from Indiana (whose delegation has never wavered from the support of Colfax,) swung his cane and hat in the air in high glee, himself being mounted upon a chair. Everybody was hurraing, swinging hats, handkerchiefs, etc., and amid such exuberant feeling, which proved so contagious as to extend even to the warmest Wade and Fenton men.

Final Vote.

The final vote was then announced as follows:

|---|---|
| Whole number of votes cast | 650 |
| Necessary to a choice | 326 |
| Colfax | 522 |
| Fenton | 75 |
| Wade | 41 |
| Wilson | 11 |

The Chairman then announced the Hon. Schuyler Colfax as the nominee for Vice-President.

The nomination of Schuyler Colfax was, at ten minutes to five, made unanimous.

The following gentlemen were then announced as the

MURDER OF FRANKLIN SINCLAIR.

Arraignment of the Accused—Testimony in the Case.

The following is the testimony in this case as taken before United States Commissioner Shannon:

Henry Sims stated that he formerly lived in Bastrop, Louisiana, but at present lives in Monroe; knew Franklin Sinclair; knows Mr. Payne now present; on the morning of the 16th of April, 1868, I met Mr. Payne; he had his double-barreled shotgun by his side; I said "good morning," and he replied the same, and asked where I was from; I said from Bastrop; Sinclair was a little behind me; Paine asked Sinclair where he was from; I did not exactly understand whether Sinclair said from Ouachita or Monroe; I then rode on, and after having gone about one hundred and fifty yards I heard a voice calling out "Hallo!"; I halted and looked back; the next word was "Hold on, will you?"; I did not understand who said this; I looked and saw Payne with his gun which appeared to be across his lap; directly he raised it; the second time he raised it he said, "Take your hand down"; this was said by Payne to Sinclair; the third time Payne raised his gun he said, "Take your hand down"; soon after that Payne fired, and Sinclair fell from his horse; I could not turn to look back; soon afterward I looked and Payne was on the ground himself, and both horses ran toward me; I could not hold my own mule, and I concluded to make my escape; I was riding along with Sinclair before we met Payne; Sinclair was a candidate for the Legislature in the parish of Ouachita; this occurrence took place above Linn Grove, parish of Morehouse; we had stayed at Charles Williams' house the previous night, and on this morning were returning to Bastrop together; Sinclair and Payne had not known each other before this time, I believe; I was not related to Sinclair.

Cross examined—When the greeting took place I did not perceive any feeling of anger; I did not see the greeting of Payne to Sinclair, but Payne's voice appeared to be in the same tone as the greeting to me, which was an apparently friendly one; I was excited after the occurrence took place; I think Sinclair was five or ten steps behind me; his horse's head was close to my horse's tail; I heard no other conversation between Payne and Sinclair than that which I have already given; I heard the expression "Hallo" first; the next was, "Hold on a little, will you?"

The first time Payne raised his gun I did not understand distinctly what Payne said; the second and third time, "Take your hand down;" Sinclair had a pistol, though I did not know where he had it; he was in the habit of wearing it in front; I never looked at the pistol; he never had it out of the case, that I saw; I heard the first shot, and looked around and saw Sinclair fall from his horse; as Sinclair struck the ground I heard another shot; Payne appeared to fall from his horse about the time ths second shot; as Sinclair and myself were going south Payne was going north, and when I looked back Payne's horse was toward the south; Sinclair's horse looked toward the north; both men had reversed position.

Payne has a place of business two miles and a half above Linn Grove, and on this morning he was going in that direction; I met Payne again on the Saturday morning after this occurrence before some magistrates, where an examination was keld; I don't know the magistrates' names; I was not at all acquainted with them; on this Saturday morning when I saw Payne I knew and feared him; I was examined before two magistrates; I am not positive that the word pistol was not used in giving my testimony; my recollection is the expression used by Payne was "Take your hand down;" I could only see the elbow of Sinclair's right arm as he sat on his horse, and he apparently had hold of something; dont know what it was.

Examination in chief resumed—I am a Methodist minister; the whole occurrence from beginning to end occupied from five to ten minutes.

Cross examined—I heard something about Phillips; this was after the good morning greeting; did not know which of the two used the word "Phillips;" the tone in which the word Phillips was used appeared to me to be as pleasant as the good morning greeting; can not tell whether either of the parties was angry at the time; they might have been angry; I did not hear any more until the words "Take your hand down;" the first time I looked around after the word "Hallo," I saw Payne with his gun across his lap; and then I heard for the first time the words "Take your hand down."

Anatole Germain—I left Sinclair on the evening of the fifteenth in company with Henry Sims to go to Linn Grove to distribute tickets; I left him at Bastrop; I went to Monroe to get tickets; I had engaged to meet Sinclair and Sims at Bastrop; I arrived at Bastrop on Thursday evening; I did not see Sinclair afterward; I saw Sims; Sinclair was an educated man, and kept a school at Monroe, I kept school at Trenton; Sinclair had been keeping school about ten months; our lives were threatened at Monroe before we went to Bastrop; I was told the threats were made by white people.

Cross-examined—When Sinclair and I left Monroe I was armed, but Sinclair was not; on our way to Morehouse Sinclair got a revolver; when I last saw Sinclair he had no pistol that I remember; he wore this pistol in his belt when he traveled.

The defense produced no evidence whatever relative to the shooting, and confined themselves principally to the subject of the hitherto peaceable character of accused, and also to the general habit of planters in that section carrying shotguns with them.

Mr. Shannon sent the case before the United States Circuit Court on the charge of manslaughter.

Crop Prospects.

The Iberville Pioneer says:

The late rains have been very favorable for the corn and potato crops, and an abundant yield of these cereals is anticipated. The fruit trees are already groaning under the weight of their precious bearing. We may expect a rich harvest of fruit of all kinds this season, and the woods will soon be darkened with blackberries.

The Sparta Times, Bienville parish, says:

From every part of the country we learn that the crops, though backward are promising, and the stand of corn and cotton good. The chilly weather is retarding the growth, but will the better enable the farmers to get the mastery of "General Green," and place their crops in good condition to profit by the coming summer showers and sunbeams.

---

George Robins, the noted English auctioneer, used to indulge in some pretty tall highfalutin in describing property committed to him for sale. For instance, referring to a country place he said the only drawbacks to its charms were "the litter of the rose leaves and the noise of the nightingales." Some of our New York auctioneers are trying hard to come up with George in their glowing puffs, but one of them announcing some superb rosewood furniture, finds plain English too poor for his purpose, so he calls it "bois de rose." Can foolish affectation further go?

LATEST BY TELEGRAPH.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, May 22.—Managers' Investigation.—Charles W. Woolley having sworn that he spent no money to influence the impeachment trial, declines answering questions regarding his investments.

Edmund Cooper testifies that he was approached by a brother-in-law and friend of Senator Pomeroy, proposing for $40,000 to secure five votes for acquittal. Senators Morton and Nye were on the list. The examination of telegraphers and dispatches continues.

WASHINGTON, May 22—Congress.—No session. A full cabinet meeting was held today.

General Grant and Speaker Colfax were serenaded to-night.

It is stated that Senator Pomeroy is about publishing a statement regarding Mr. Cooper's evidence. The general belief is that the proposition was a trap to catch the Presidents' friends.

The following is the text of the Chicago platform wherein the South is affected:

First—We congratulate the country on the assured success of the reconstruction policy of Congress, as evinced by the adoption in the majority of the States lately in rebellion of Constitutions securing equal civil and political rights to all. And it is the duty of the government to sustain those institutions, and to prevent the people of those States from being remitted to a state of anarchy. (Cheers.)

Second—The guarantee by Congress of equal suffrage to all loyal men at the South was demanded by every consideration of public safety, of gratitude, and of justice, and must be maintained, while the question of suffrage in all the loyal States properly belongs to the people of those States. (Cheers.)

The Chicago Conference has decided against the present election of additional bishops.

The following is the eighth article of the Chicago platform: "We profoundly deplore the untimely and tragic death of Abraham Lincoln, and regret the accession to the Presidency of Andrew Johnson, who has acted treacherously to the people who elected him and the cause he was pledged to support, who has usurped high legislative and judicial functions, who has refused to execute the laws, who has used his high office to induce other officers to ignore and violate the laws, who has employed his executive powers to render insecure the property, the peace, liberty, and life of the citizen, who has abused the pardoning power, who has denounced the national Legislature as unconstitutional, who has persistently and corruptly resisted by every measure in his power every proper attempt at the reconstruction of the States lately in rebellion, who has perverted the public patronage into an engine of wholesale corruption, and who has been justly impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors, and properly pronounced guilty thereof by a vote of thirty-five Senators."

Senator Grimes is rapidly recovering.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—The House was called to order, and immediately adjourned.

Both Houses meet on Monday.

Internal revenue receipts for the week, $3,204,009.

On the first of June the Treasury Department will be prepared to convert seven-thirties due the fifteenth of June and July, 1868, into five-twenties. These bonds will bear interest from July first.

The executive committee of the Western Union Telegraph Company have issued orders to their managers to deliver no more private telegrams to the impeachment managers. Those already obtained were furnished under a misapprehension of instruction.

Investigations before the impeachment managers show that $100,000 was subscribed in New York for President Johnson. He is to have $100,000 if convicted, and $50,000 to pay expenses if acquitted.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—Internal revenue receipts to-day $941,000.

Mr. Stevens was not in the House to-day.

The Republican Senators will have a caucus to-morrow morning for the purpose of rearranging the impeachment programme.

House.—Mr. Chanler introduced a resolution declaring that the control of State governments was in white people, and instructing the Committee on Elections to report resolutions declaring that this is a white man's government. Referred to the Committee on Elections.

A resolution looking to the erection of a commission to investigate illegal and unjust imprisonment during the war, was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Cary introduced a resolution declaring that the letter and spirit of the law justified the payment of five-twenties in legal tenders. Referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

A resolution justifying Secretary Seward in retaining possession of the ram Stonewall Jackson, recently sold to Japan, until Japan is pacified, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The tax bill was made the special order for Wednesday next. The law covers three hundred and sixty pages.

A resolution was passed bringing Charles W. Wooley to the bar of the House for contempt.

The impeachment managers support the resolution by a report, the reading of which required over an hour, with copies of private telegrams and evidence, mainly that of Thurlow Weed, showing that the scheme for buying votes for acquital was canvassed in New York, and that suspicious telegrams and persons passed between the parties here and in New York. Intimate relations were shown to exist between the counsel and the friends of the President and the party who canvassed the purchase of votes in New York. The report claims that the managers have other evidence but at present only feel justified in presenting such as will justify the arrest of Wooley.

Adjourned.

Answering questions regarding the tax bill and suggestions that the modified regulations and rates on whisky and tobacco should be presented in separate bills, Mr. Schenck said the bill might pass in three weeks and sooner with night sessions. He opposed separate bills, as the bill proposed by the committee was complete as a whole, and met on all but one or two points with the unanimous support of the committee. There were only three or four points which would provoke discussion.

The Republican members maintained that the committee's bill could not pass both houses and become a law before September.

Mr. Schenck, however, persisted, and the bill was made the special order for Wednesday, to be continued from day to day until finished.

The report of the managers leaves the corruption investigation in a misty state. The object they had in view appears to have been to make it probable that Mr. Wooley had used $20,000 to corrupt Senators. They show that a General Adams approached Collector Smythe, of New York, with a proposition to buy votes for acquittal. Mr. Smythe broke the matter to Thurlow Weed, who advised Mr. Smythe that it was not feasible. General Adams afterward canvassed with Mr. Weed on the subject, but Mr. Weed gave him no encouragement.

The matter was afterward canvassed in Mr. Weed's room at the Astor House, with Messrs. Weed, Wooley, Hastings, of Albany, General Sherman and Mr. Shook present.

Mr. Wooley afterward left for Washington. Several obscure dispatches passed between Messrs. Wooley and Weed, which Mr. Weed did not understand beyond that they referred to impeachment. Messrs. Shook and Hastings came to Washington.

The above is based on Mr. Weed's evidence. It is then shown that Mr. Wooley had ten thousand dollars at one time and five thousand at another time placed to his credit on a cypher dispatch addressed to Mr. Shook at New York. He drew ten thousand here in thousand dollar bills.

Mr. Shook denies having deposited the money to Mr. Wooley's credit.

Mr. Wooley drew $5000 from Cincinnati. He refuses to swear what was done with the money.

Nothing has yet transpired connecting Senators with this money.

General Butler denounces all the parties connected with the affair so far as gold gamblers and whisky men.

The amount mentioned by Mr. Adams as neccessary to secure the four votes was $30,000.

The evident disposition of the House is to compel Mr. Wooley to account for his money.

Among the dispatches was one from Mr. Wooley describing a meeting between Judge Chase and certain Republican Senators looking to a new party organization. Several dispatches regarding the gold market were produced.

Mr. Boker, a Radical from Illinois, denounced in bitter terms the whole proceedings, and blamed the House for permitting it to go on without allowing the Democratic party to be represented in the investigation.

WASHINGTON, May 25. — In the Senate seventy-five steamer captains and pilots protest against the further bridging of the Ohio river with less than 500 feet span.

Mr. Trumbull gave notice that he would endeavor to press the admission of Arkansas to a final vote on Wednesday. Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, May 26.—The court met at noon. A motion to proceed with the remaining articles was lost, 28 to 26. A motion to adjourn to June 23 was lost by a tie vote. The vote on second and third articles resulted in acquittal, when a motion adjourning the court sine die prevailed.

In the Senate Messrs. Anthony, Willey, and Van Winkle denied the newspaper reports that Chief Justice Chase had endeavored to influence their votes, and Mr. Fessenden denied his identification with the proposed third party, and announced his determination to support the Republican nominees. Adjourned.

House.—The motion to grant Woolley twenty-four hours to prepare his answer was tabled. The motion that the Speaker propound certain questions to the prisoner to be answered forthwith prevailed.

The Speaker announced that the functions of the managers had ceased.

A resolution continuing them as a committee to continue the corruption investigations prevailed.

A protest that a committee of investigation in which the minority was unrepresented was unparliamentary was overruled by the Speaker, who decided that the House controlled and could intrust the investigation to whomsoever it pleased.

A motion to add two members who had voted against impeachment was tabled on Mr. Butler's motion—sixty to fifty-one.

Mr. Woolley answered with a protest which has been published and announced himself willing to answer any questions which the House might direct.

The managers maintained that the committee represented the authority of the House and Mr. Woolley had no right to question the propriety of their questions. The House sustained this view, and Mr. Woolley was ordered into close confinement in the capitol until he purges himself of contempt by answering such questions as the committee propound.

The House went into committee on Indian appropriations, and adjourned.

The excitement in the court this morning was intense. On all preliminary questions Mr. Ross voted with the majority, and moved an amendment to the motion adjourning the court, to adjourn to the first of September. It was thought these votes indicated that Mr. Ross had gone over. The grave question turned on his vote. Mr. Ross rose from his seat pale, but otherwise gave no indications of excitement.

Mr. Woolley is confined in the room of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The case of Charles W. Woolley and the Corruption Committee is the main topic of conversation to-night. A habeas corpus will probably issue in the morning. Woolley is a grandson of old Bob Wickliffe, of Kentucky, known as "the old Duke."

The point at issue is: Mr. Woolley protests and has sworn that his money was not used to influence impeachment, and he invokes the constitution and appeals to the House to protect him in the sanctity of his private affairs, but under protest expresses willingness to answer any questions which the House may see fit to order, claiming the right to appeal from the committee to the House. The managers, on the other hand, claim that the committee has final discretion and authority. In this a majority of the House concur, and the present position of Mr. Woolley seems to be that he is in close confinement, at the discretion of the committee, through which he must purge himself of contempt by answering any questions they may propound.

As the situation is understood, Woolley's case can only come before the House again through the committee, which is composed of the impeachment managers. The Democrats combated this decision, claiming, among other things, that the committee did not represent the House, nor could it rightfully exercise the authority of the House, when, contrary to parliamentary usage, the minority was not represented on the committee.

Secretary Stanton has resigned the War office, leaving everything in charge of General Townsend.

WASHINGTON, May 27—Senate.—The bill incorporating the National Insurance Company passed.

The resolution accepting Mr. Forney's resignation went over under the rules.

Mr. Seward is asked for documents and correspondence regarding the Alabama claims.

Mr. Ross made a personal explanation regarding bribery reports.

Mr. Davis' resolution was amended by Mr. Ross to make the committee five, instead of three, to investigate corruption reports. Passed.

The admission of Arkansas was discussed to adjournment.

The discussion was confined mainly to minor points. No Republican opposes admission under her Constitution.

House—The committee on postroads was directed to inquire into the expediency of a general law forbidding bridges across navigable streams of less than five hundred feet span.

The committee on commerce reported the river and harbor appropriation, which was referred to committee of the whole.

A bill amending the laws for collecting fines, penalties, and forfeitures in customs passed.

The tax bill was introduced as heretofore printed. Mr. Schenck said there were several amendments which would be offered, most of them verbal.

The Indian appropriation was discussed to adjournment.

The keys of the war office are still with General Towsend. Half the guards have been removed.

Mr. Woolley was before the corruption committee to-day, but refusing to answer how he spent his money was recommitted.

It is stated that General Grant favors Schofield's confirmation.

There was no executive session to-day, but the Senate referred Schofield's nomination to a committee.

Internal revenue receipts to-day, $829,000.

There are plenty of rumors of members of the cabinet resigning, but nothing reliable.

The Senate tabled the nomination of Philip Foulk as naval agent at New Orleans. This action continues Sullivan in that office.

Miscellaneous Telegrams.

SAVANNAH, May 27.—Great enthusiasm is manifested by all classes of people here on receipt of the news of the defeat of the impeachment scheme. The Republican office, Metropolitan Fire Company's Home, and a large number of public buildings and private residences are illuminated to-night in honor of the overthrow of impeachment. Fireworks will be displayed, and number of serenaders will be out.

RICHMOND, May 27.—Official circles were excited to-day by a street assault by Hon. James Segor on Mr. Van Winkle, United States Marshal of this district. The fight was stopped by the Mayor before any serious damage was done.

CLEVELAND, May 27.—Coburn has been arrested. The fight will probably be declared off.

NEW YORK, May 27.—The Baptist Home Missionary Society continued its meeting, and the proceedings are marked by the most cordial feelings. A report in favor of admitting Southern delegates was adopted.

Dr. Manly, of South Carolina, made an important conciliatory speech.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Parties complying with the amnesty proclamatian of September were registered yesterday. This concession adds considerably to the white vote.

House and Senate engaged in unimportant routine.

The efficacy of habeas corpus in the Woolley case is doubted, the weight of opinion being that the House of Representatives is too high to be disturbed in its deliberations by this case.

CINCINNATI, May 27.—McCoole is in custody at Lawrenceburg, Indiana. The fight postponed.

BALTIMORE, May 23.—Rev. John C. Lyon, aged sixty-seven, for forty years a minister, and the founder of the German Methodist Church in America, is dead.

FURTHER EXTENSION OF TIME FOR COLLECTION OF THE CONVENTION TAX.

BOARD OF REGISTRATION,
State of Louisiana, New Orleans, May 26, 1868.

AT A REGULAR MEETING OF THE BOARD, held on TUESDAY, May 26, 1868, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the time for the final settlement of the Convention taxes by the Tax Collectors and Sheriffs throughout the State with the Auditor of Public Accounts be and is hereby extended to the first day of July, 1868.

By virtue of the foregoing resolution I hereby notify all Tax Collectors and Sheriffs throughout the State to continue to collect the Convention tax up to the first day of July, 1868.

The Tax Collectors and Sheriffs are further instructed that they will be held responsible for a rigid enforcement of the ordinance adopted by the Convention, January 4, 1868, (which is hereinafter published for the information of all concerned), exacting a penalty for non-payment of said tax.

The Convention remitted all penalties up to the twentieth day of March, 1868, and from that time the penalty will be exacted in all the parishes where the taxrolls were ready at that date, and thirty days after the taxrolls were completed in the other parishes, the penalty will be exacted.
S. B. PACKARD, Chairman.
R. C. RICHARDSON, Secretary.

ORDINANCE.

SECTION 1. Be it ordained by the Constitutional Convention of the State of Louisiana, That the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors of the State, except of the city of New Orleans, Orleans right bank, and the parish of Jefferson, shall give notice to the taxpayers of their respective parishes to pay the tax of one mill per cent levied by ordinance of the twenty-fourth December, 1867, by this Convention; and thirty days after service of said notice those who shall not have paid the tax due by them shall be considered in default, and the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors shall exact an additional tax upon such persons of twenty-five per cent upon the sum due by them for the first default, and an additional tax of ten per cent to be computed on the original tax for every subsequent thirty days said persons shall continue to be in default, up to the date of the final settlement.

SEC. 2. Be it further ordained, That the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors of the city of New Orleans, Orleans right bank, and parish of Jefferson, shall by public notice in one newspaper published in their parish, call upon all taxpayers to pay the tax levied by the ordinance of December twenty-four above mentioned, and all persons who shall not have paid the amounts due by them on account of said tax ten days after the publication of the above required notice shall pay an additional tax of twenty-five per cent on the original tax, and an additional tax of two and a-half per cent on the original tax of one mill per cent for every subsequent ten days said persons shall be in default.

SEC. 3. Be it further ordained, etc., That immediately after the taxpayers shall have been put in default by the expiration of the thirty or ten days, as the case may be, given in the notice required by the first and second sections of this ordinance, the Sheriffs and Tax Collectors throughout the State shall proceed to seize and sell after ten days' notice property of the delinquent taxpayers, movable or immovable, sufficient to pay the original tax, all additional taxes herein levied, and costs.

Adopted in Convention at the city of New Orleans, this fourth day of January, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty-eight.

No. 76—DECEMBER TERM, 1867.

St. Louis Street Foundry, etc., George Cronan, Claimant—Appellant vs. The United States—Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE CHASE DELIVERED the opinion of the Court:

This case is not distinguishable in principle from those just decided. It appears from the record that Cronan, in the Circuit Court, pleaded the amnesty proclaimed by President Lincoln on the eighth of December, 1863, and the oath taken by himself in pursuance of the proclamation.

In this plea there was no averment that Cronan was not within any of the exceptions made by the proclamation and it was, therefore, properly overruled. Upon proper pleading and proof, however, the claimant of property seized under the act of August 6, 1861, is entitled to the benefit of amnesty to the same extent as under like pleading and proof he would be entitled to the benefit of pardon.

The decree of the Circuit Court must be reversed as irregular, and the cause remanded with directions to allow a new trial, the proceedings in which shall be conformed, in respect to trial by jury and exceptions to evidence, to the course of the common law.

THE GERMANIA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, established in 1860, and based upon the most approved principles of Life Insurance security, presents its claims for consideration, believing that its solid foundation already secured by the faithful and efficient management of its officers and Board of Directors will give it the preference above all other similar institutions.

It is purely Mutual, as the net profits are distributed among the parties insured, the interest of the capital stock being only five per cent according to its charter.

It assumed the system of cash payments at the commencement of its existence, and maintained it faithfully until now, and promises the same for the future, thereby securing to policy holders the full amount for which they are insured. The advantage of this system over the half cash and half note system is patent to every careful observer, but will be more fully illustrated by the following statement and table:

If a person of thirty years of age insures his life for the amount of $1000 in one of the credit companies, and pays a premium of $28 30 per year, with a note for half of the premium, then by means of this note and interests thereon the amount will become less and less in the following proportions:

|---|---|
| After 10 years the $1000 will amount to | $887 44 |
| After 15 years the $1000 will amount to | 796 28 |
| After 20 years the $1000 will amount to | 666 02 |
| After 25 years the $1000 will amount to | 484 73 |
| After 30 years the $1000 will amount to | 220 47 |
| After 33 years the $1000 will amount to | 32 53 |
| After 34 years the $1000 will amount to | Nothing. |

So that after a lapse of 34 years the whole amount will be eaten up, notwithstanding the parties insured paid their money in good faith.

The large dividend of 40 per cent declared last January is evidence of the care and success with which the Managers have conducted the enlarged and rapidly increasing interests of the Company, and vouches for its future brilliant and permanent prosperity.

Parties contemplating an assurance on their lives will do well to examine the status of this Company, every facility for which will be given by the

IN FAVOR OF

JONAS WHITCOMB'S REMEDY FOR ASTHMA.

MONROVIA, Ind., April 29, 1856.

MR JOSEPH BURNETT—Dear Sir: I am now nearly out of WHITCOMB'S REMEDY FOR ASTHMA. I let a friend of mine have half of the last dozen I sent for. I would not be without the medicine for any consideration. Before I commenced taking the medicine I was totally unfit for business two-thirds of my time. But now I can attend to business all the time. When I have symptoms of Asthma, or even an attack, a few doses subdues it at once.

Please send me one dozen more as low as you can afford it. Send to Belville on Terre Haute and B. Railroad by express. I can remit by letter if you prefer it.

Very respectfully,
JOHN McLELLAND.

WHEN I WOULD BE REMEMBERED

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDING.

When brightest beams are glowing,
And the birds loud in their song,
And the voice of the winds is merry,
And the fairest flowers are blown.
When all eyes bloom with welcome,
And smiling lips are bland,
You may forget my blessing,
And the touch of an olden hand.

When the golden day has vanished,
And the birds are southward gone;
And the midday flowers are folded,
And the merry winds have flown.
When the smile of genial welcome,
Is vanished with the sun,
Will thoughts in joy forgotten,
With muffled footsteps come.

When night in cloak of silver
Comes stealing from the bower;
And alone you stand, sad, musing
In the dim, uncertain hour,
'Tis then I'd be remembered,
When brighter smiles have flown,
And prove how well I love thee,
When bolder loves have gone.

Oh, 'tis well to be remembered,
In the golden summer time,
When the world is drifting sunshine,
And our lives one merry chime.
But deeper, aye, and purer,
Are the thoughts that wisely come,
The memories that treasure
When sunshine friends have flown.

The clinging tendrils faith puts out
And clasps the chosen few;
Of all the throng that promised
So few, alas! are true.
And give me, then, the memory,
The trust, that only comes,
When the soulless dross and glitter
Has vanished, and is gone.

HOW FORTUNES ARE GAINED.

The Character and Habits of the Successful Men of New York City.

An Interesting Lecture to Young Men.

The following letter written by "Burleigh," the New York correspondent of the Boston Journal, is one of the most forcible lectures to young men ambitious of success in business which we have ever seen:

A young man coming to this city is greeted with two kinds of business—one good and one bad; one difficult to obtain, the other found everywhere. Clerkships in banks, insurance offices, and first-class stores are hard to be got. Capitalists create these institutions for their own sons and relatives; few die and none resign. Bar-rooms, concert saloons, low groggeries, the offices of shysters and quack doctors, and business of a questionable character, are usually open to young men fresh from the country with good morals; if they have a dash of piety it is all the better, for they will not drink nor steal. The kind of business a man adopts usually settles the question of his success. If he has brains and pluck, is content to wait, does well wherever he goes, is not afraid of earning his money, makes himself useful so that he can not be dispensed with, he will succeed. He may black boots, pick rags, shovel coal, be a low porter in a store; if he has integrity, talent, and industry, he will make his fortune. One of the richest men in New York began as a porter, and his master is now a book-keeper in his establishment. One of the most eminent bank presidents in New York to-day came to this city a penniless boy. "Do you want a boy, sir?" he said to a gentleman who stood in his store door. "What can you do?" "Anything, sir, to get an honest living." "Take these boots down stairs where you'll find some blacking, and black them." The lad soon returned with the boots in a high state of polish. "You've done those well," said the merchant. "My mother told me to do everything well, sir, that I did," was the reply. This answer touched the merchant's heart. He has done everything since as he blacked the boots. There is no place in the land where honesty, industry, and integrity bring a better reward. This is shown in the habits of the few men who succeed permanently.

A. T. STEWART.

Mr Stewart began business in New York in the smallest possible way. He occupied a small store, twelve feet wide, opposite where his down-town store now stands. For a long time he was his own porter, salesman, and cashier. He lived in rooms over his store. As he prospered he boarded his assistants in his family. He early adopted the rule to buy wholly for cash, to sell the exact article the purchaser bought, and never to deceive in quality or quantity. In business no man disputes Mr. Stewart's integrity. Goods can be bought by telegraph as well as in person. He is hard and severe. He gets a dollar's worth of service for every dollar that he pays out; but he does just as he agrees to with his men, and exacts from them only what he does himself. He asks no closer attention to business than he himself pays. He comes down early, and remains till the store is closed, and works long after his clerks have gone home. Every day's business is closed before he leaves, if it takes till midnight.

R. AND L. STUART.

This firm, so famous in the sugar business, so wealthy and so liberal, was founded in 1806. The mother of these sons, thrown on her own resources, commenced making a little candy which the boys sold. People laughed at the idea of this lone Scotch woman mingling piety with her molasses, and serving God by making a first rate article of candy. The success of this article led to the famous candy business, which has existed till now, and that led up to the immense sugar refinery which marks the house. While in the candy trade, no adulteration, no impure sugars, nor bad oils, were allowed. The Stuarts would as soon have adulterated the coin of the nation. They sold out their candy trade some time since. They bound the purchaser under the most stringent obligations to manufacture and sell nothing but the pure article, which had made Stuart's candy so famous. The candy of commerce—gum drops made of glue, liquorice drops made of Irish clay, flavored with fusile oils, can't be bought at this house. R. L. Stuart lives in a fine mansion on Fifth avenue, but Alexander lives next door to his refinery on Chambers street, in a plain brick house which has been his home for nearly half a century.

A. V. STOUT.

This gentleman is one of our wealthy citizens, a man of high integrity, and one of the most influential bankers in New York. He began life with nothing except good principles, industry, and perseverance. He indorsed notes when quite a young man to the amount of $13,000. He was called upon to pay them. He had $8000, all he possessed on earth. The bank would cheerfully have taken that sum and discharged him. It offered him accommodation by way of renewals. He made up his mind that if he had lost his money he would not lose his character. As the notes matured he paid them. And when the last note was taken up he could command any amount of money at any place in the city. He can be found at his bank at an early hour in the morning, and remains long after the business of the day is closed. There is no clerk in the bank who works as many hours as does the president.

STOUT AND DICKENSON.

This is a young firm. Mr. Stout is the son of the gentleman I have just mentioned. The father of his partner is also a bank president. Young Stout was offered $10,000 a year to remain in the Shoe and Leather bank, which he refused. He opened an office in Broad street to buy and sell stocks. The great trouble with stock brokers is that they will speculate, and money is not safe in their hands. This firm started to do simply a commission business and never dabble in stocks. Ben Holliway came into their office one day and said: "Mr. Stout, I wish you to buy me —— shares of Hudson." "Do you wish us to carry it?" asked Mr. Stout. "Yes," said Holliway. "Then you must put up a margin," was the reply. "I am good for fifty times that amount," said Holliway. "I have no doubt of it," said Mr. Stout, "but we have but one rule for rich or poor. We would not carry stock for Mr. Astor without a margin." Mr. Holliway went out as if provoked, and the firm felt that they had lost a good customer. Soon a check came up for $25,000. Soon Holliway himself came up and said: "Young men, you are right. Do business on that basis and you'll succeed. My money is safe here. You shall do my business." This young firm divided last year $60,000 profit.

THOMAS R. AGNEW.

Mr. Agnew is one of the largest wholesale and retail grocers in New York. He began business on the lowest round and penniless. He is now a millionaire. He works now as he did when struggling for bread. He goes to the store before the porter, and delivers the keys. He remains till the business is transacted, every package put up, the door locked, and then he carries the keys to his own house. He buys everything for cash, and sells for cash. He is his own cashier and bookkeeper. He sells from an ounce of tea or a pound of sugar to a ship load. No man asks if his goods are what they profess to be any more than a fashionable lady would ask Stewart if a high-priced silk was genuine. His trade sweeps a circuit of twenty miles. He takes his stand in the morning at a small desk, placed on the counter and here he stands all day receiving the cash from his business, directing his clerks, welcoming his customers, and extending courtesy to the humblest buyer. He does not leave his desk all day long. He does not even go out to purchase. Those who have goods to sell call on him. At noon his tea is made in the store by his porter, and he eats his frugal meal from a head of a barrel. He has never been in debt, never made a note, and never borrowed a dollar in money. He does not close his store till every debt is paid and all accounts balanced. He is not penurious, but liberal as he is successful. He bought and gave away not long since a church, with the land and all its appurtenances.

A man passes for a sage if he seeks for wisdom; if he thinks he has found it he is a fool.

Intelligence from Our Mission Rooms.

THE BETHEL SHIP.—This place of worship for the Scandinavians presented on Sabbath, May 17, more than ever before the appearance of a "hive" of human beings. Above one thousand Swedes arrived in our port the day before, and these, as long as there was any room in the "hold," on the deck, in the office, or in the ship-keeper's room, pressed their way to hear the Gospel's joyful sound in their own tongue in this, to them, new and strange country. The whole crowd came to be Americans, and not less than thirty were about the altar for prayer at night, in earnest to be made new creatures in Christ Jesus. Our missionaries in the South and West will soon see these strangers among them.

STILL THEY COME.—In addition to the large arrival of Swedes noticed in another article, some five hundred more followed in two or three days of last week. They have also been at the Bethel ship attending the evening meetings. A number of these people have to remain under the care of the Commissioners of Emigration until expected means from their friends in the West come to hand to defray the expense of their transportation to their future homes.

DR. DURBIN.—Our Corresponding Secretary was called home from General Conference by telegram to watch about the bed of a very sick son. We know that the mention of this painful event will elicit the sympathetic prayer of many a missionary heart at home and abroad.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.—Rev. Dr. Jacoby in a late letter writes:

"We have been lately disturbed again in several places in Wurtemberg, Switzerland, and also in Flensburgh, which belongs now to Prussia. In Bulach, Canton Zurich, the people have mobbed two of our preachers. We have instituted a suit against them. Brother Nuelsen writes that he will go there this week in company with our consul, and will see if the people will disturb him. The police of the place is in union with the mob. I shall inform you of the end of the lawsuit. In Flensburgh, Schleswig, the head of the police forbade Brother Spille to preach there. I wrote to Count Von Bismarck, and in three weeks the answer came to me that Brother Spille could preach there without interference. The Prussian government has granted religious liberty, and does not permit petty officers to interfere. May the Lord bless and prosper Prussia!"

REV. G. F. KETTELL.—The numerous friends of this estimable minister of the New York Conference, and now United States consul at Carlsruhe, Germany, will be pleased to meet with his name in the following connection from a late letter we have from Rev. Dr. Jacoby:

"Monday, April 16, I went to Carlsruhe, where the preachers of the South Germany district met for a district meeting. We have a band of intelligent young men, and our Brother Nippert is indeed a father and a friend to them, and they all love him and esteem him very highly. He is an honor and a great blessing to our work. Several of the brethren brought very good essays on several topics; and Brother Locher's "Essay on Preacher's Wives" was received with great applause, and recommended to be published without delay in the Evangelist for the benefit of whom it concerns. Our Consul, Brother Kettell, took an active part in our meeting, and several of us had the pleasure to dine in his house. Sister Kettell, though suffering, seemed to be very much pleased to see a company of Methodist preachers at her table. Tuesday night we had a missionary meeting, and the large hall was crowded. Here the students fight and dance at one time, and we preach at another time. The entrance is from a small and very dirty yard, and we can not expect that the higher classes of society will attend meetings here. The general lamentation is heard here, 'We need a chapel for the benefit of the work.' But who will give the money?"

PECULIAR NOTIONS.—Would that we had more men of peculiar notions, if they would but express them to us in brief fifty-dollar speeches, just as one who has the "peculiar notion" that something more should be done to save our North American Indians, and supports his argument with the amount we name. Write on, brethren, only argue as above for the Indians at home, or the heathen abroad, or the necessities of any for whom it is the province and work of our Missionary Society to care.

FORBIDDING THE BANS.—It is said that during the recent restoration of a church in Brighton, occupied by the advanced Ritualists, one of the workmen employed, ascending the pulpit, exclaimed, "I publish the banns of matrimony between this Church and the Church of Rome."

"And I," said another artisan, turning toward the first speaker, "forbid the banns."

"On what ground?" inquired he of the pulpit.

"'Cos the parties is too near akin," was the reply.

Rumseller, Read!

"If I don't sell it somebody else will." So said a rumseller a few days since, as he was warned of the terrible injury he was doing to his race by selling from the fountain of human woe. He admits it to be a crime by saying, "If I don't sell it somebody else will." I may as well have the profit as somebody else.

Why not the murderer attempt to palliate his crime by saying if he had spared his victim some one else would have slain him? the thief urge as an apology that if he did not steal some one else would? Could such a defense satisfy even the rumsellers? But he defends himself by saying, if I do not put poison to my neighbor's lips, cast the blight of the drunkard upon his now fond, loving, hopeful, and happy home circle somebody else will. Oh! thou misguided but most faithful and potent servant of the arch-fiend of humanity, let us reason for a while together over thy defense.

The real crime of the murderer or thief as against humanity is trifling indeed when thrown into the balance against the rumseller. The victim of the murderer is spared from the life of the ceaseless and unimaginable torture of a brain frenzied by the tremens, and from the sentence of the Most High, which declares that "No drunkard shall enter the kingdom of heaven," while his family and friends are spared the terrible degradation of being for life associated with a drunkard. The thief, in relieving his victim from his property, destroys not his humanity or his energy and ability, but leaves him with character unimpaired and full power to repair his loss. His family is not called to weep over a poor fallen wreck of humanity.

The rumseller not only murders, but disgraces the widow and orphans of him whom he has murdered. He steals not only the substance, but the manhood and virtue of his victim, and blights the hope and happiness of his entire social circle. For every loaf of bread taken to the home of the rumseller as the earnings of his wicked traffic, ten loaves are withheld from the hungry mouths of the drunkard's children. Every garment put upon the back of the rumseller's child, is bare feet and almost naked and shivering bodies to ten children of the inebriate.

For every home paid for by the earnings of rum selling, one hundred poor human beings are cursed, ruined, and made homeless.

We think it entirely safe to estimate that each year of a rumseller's life gives to the grave two victims; to the poorhouse, three inmates; to the asylums, four orphans; to the world two widows and six bankrupts; and ruined families with broken hearts and woes as immeasurable as they are unutterable.

Then, after thirty years in the business the rumseller's account would run thus: Thirty years of profitable business, a large fortune made, for which I have committed sixty murders, sent ninety of my fellows to the poorhouse, made one hundred and twenty orphans, one hundred and eighty bankrupts, sixty degraded, despised and broken-hearted widows, while under the head of sundries are contention, strife, tears, woes, heart aches, crime, misery, and degradation as measureless as the ocean.

At the close of the account we should expect the following indorsement from the arch fiend and fell destroyer of the human race: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant. What I have failed to accomplish with all my superhuman agencies thou hast done nobly. Enter thou as a prince into the realms of thy most grateful master."—State League.

The Caged Bird.

A shopkeeper showed me yesterday an imprisoned lark. The poor bird was inclosed within a narrow cage. His panting breast, his ruffled plumage, his eager thrusts at the wire walls of his prison told how ardently he longed for liberty. But the door was fast, the cage was strong, and the bird whose very name was a synonym for aspiration could only look skyward, and struggle to be free. I thought of, and was almost ready to imitate the English sailor who, returning from a foreign prison, where in cruel confinement he had languished for years, and seeing a number of caged birds on London bridge, laid down the price of each in gold, and one by one set each and all at liberty.

Turning uneasily away, I thought, too, what a picture this was of the struggles which a heart full of holy longings has with the infirmities of the flesh which hamper, and the limitations of mind and soul that fetter its heavenward progress. But, unlike the caged bird that pines away its little life, the believer, in the exercise of faith and hope, "in earnest expectation waiteth" for release, "to wit, the redemption of the body." The pierced hand has paid the price, and will soon open the doors. Then the glad soul will begin its heavenly soarings without limit and without end.—Rev. E. P. Thwing.

The Louisville Journal says water reddens the rose, whisky the nose, and Jack Frost the toes.

Into the composition of every happiness enters the thought of having deserved it.

An American Watch Factory.

One of the greatest mechanical triumphs of modern times is the manufacture of watches by machinery, as it has been carried on for several years in Waltham, Massachusetts. Here, the use of steam and machinery has entirely taken the place of the slow, laborious processes by which watches were formerly made by hand, and, as a result, we have not only economy of human labor, but a higher degree of excellence in the article produced. Machinery, when once perfected, can work with an exactness to which human muscles can never attain. So perfect are the Waltham watches that if any part is broken or injured, a new piece can be procured which will take its place. Everything, including the finest steel tools and machinery, is made on the premises. The steel screws used on some parts of these watches are so fine that, to the naked eye, the thread is invisible. It takes 300,000 of them to make a pound, and the iron, which at first may have been worth two or three cents, is thus converted into a value of $4000.

The preparation of the jewels for these watches forms of itself a most interesting department. At first they used to be imported from Europe, where they were made by hand, but now they are all cut, shaped, polished, and drilled in the establishment, and by machinery. The sapphire and the beryl are used where the hardest and best stones are required. To bore with the point of a diamond the pivot-holes, first half way through on one side, and then from the other side the other half, till both meet smoothly in the middle and form a microscopic tunnel through the jewel, in which the pivots may run smooth and frictionless, is a work which the delicate fingers of only two or three of the girls employed in the whole establishment, guided by the jeweler's glass can, with all the aid of machinery, accomplish with sufficient exactness. Twenty thousand of these jewels per month are sometimes used.

Brass wheels and steel cogs have all to be cut with a perfection of accuracy which nothing but machinery such as this, and the most skilled and practiced workers, can insure. Most of the finest work seems to be done by females, each devoting her whole time to one process. A single part of the watch will often involve from twenty to seventy of these processes. When it is all done and tempered and polished the parts are put together, made to run, and regulated. After this it is all taken to pieces and the brass is all gold-washed by the electrotyping process, and then put together again. But so accurately do all the parts and screws fit that this last work of putting together seems hardly to take five minutes.

A Single Worm Killed the Tree.

During the summer of 1853 I was staying at Sudbrook Park, near Richmond, in Surrey. One day I was walking with some friends through the "wilderness," when Dr. Ellis drew our attention to a large sycamore tree, decayed to the core.

"That fine tree," said he, "was killed by a single worm."

In answer to our inquiries we found that about two years previously the tree was as healthy as any in the park, when a wood-worm, about three inches long, was observed to be forcing its way under the bark of the trunk. It caught the eye of a naturalist who was staying here, and he remarked, "Let that worm alone, and it will kill the tree." This seemed very improbable, but it was agreed that the black-headed worm should not be disturbed.

After a time it was discovered that the worm had tunneled its way a considerable distance under the bark. The next summer the leaves of the tree dropped off very early, and in the succeeding year it was a dead, rotten thing, and the hole made by the worm might be seen in the very heart of the once noble trunk.

"Ah!" said one who was present, "let us learn a lesson from that single tree. How many who once promised fair for usefulness in the world and the church have been ruined by a single sin."

Not Generally Known.

Martin Van Buren is the only man who held the offices of President, Vice-President, minister to England, governor of his own State, and member of both houses of Congress. Thomas H. Benton is the only man who held a seat in the United States for thirty consecutive years. The only instance of father and son in the United States Senate at the same time is that of Hon. Henry Dodge, Senator from Wisconsin, and his son, Augustus C. Dodge, Senator from Iowa. General James Shields is the only man who ever represented two States in the United States Senate. At one time he was Senator from Illinois, and subsequently from Minnesota. John Quincy Adams held positions under the government during every administration from that of Washington to that of Polk, during which he died. He had been minister to England, member of both houses of Congress, Secretary of State, and President of the United States. He died while a member of the House of Representatives.

Perpetual Presence of Christ.

A Christain should make his Savior a perpetual companion—every where, and on every day of the week. Christ offers to walk with him in every day's journey of life. What companionship so enlivening and so purifying as His? who else can so "make our hearts burn within us" by the way?

Christ's presence with believers is one of the best preventives from sin; one of the best stimulators to duty. Jesus is "made unto us sanctification" as well as redemption. That is—His is a spirit of holiness. And when we live in hourly communion with Jesus it has a tendency to make us holy.

The sense of Christ's immediate presence is a perpetual check upon our lusts—a perpetual spur to our self-indolence. Are we provoked to cutting words or irritating retorts? One look from the gentle, all forgiving Jesus should be enough to seal the lip, and to smooth the ruffled brow. Are we ever tempted to keen bargains and overreaching in business? Selfishness says, "All is fair—others do it—it is the custom of our trade." But what will the pure and holy Jesus say?

How will our account books look to him when he "audits" them? And so on all through the calendar of duties and the circle of daily temptations. With my Savior beside me, how will I dare to play the coward or the cheat or the trifler or the sensualist or the trickster?

Nowhere will Christ's presence be more cheering and sustaining than in the weariness of a sick room, or under the silent shadows of a great bereavement. "Christ comes to me in the watches of the night," said the bedridden saint Halyburton. "He draws aside the curtains and says, 'It is I,' be of good cheer; be not afraid. Here I lie pained with pain; without strength and yet strong." And when the last farewells have been spoken through the sobs of the dying hour, this never failing friend will sweetly whisper, "Fear not, I am with thee. Where I am ye shall be also. Having loved my own, I will love them unto the end."—Cuyler.

"Negro Supremacy."

"A good cry"—a plausible motto—is indispensable to a party; therefore the lying mouthpieces of the slave power call upon their followers to unite against a projected "supremacy of the negro."

The Abolitionists have always received from their opponents one involuntary tribute to the justice and soundness of their ideas, namely, it was found necessary to misrepresent and caricature those ideas before arguing against them—before even attempting to make out a case against them. If a man claimed the right of every human being to marriage, as against the concubinage enforced by the planter upon his slaves, he was called "an amalgamationist." If a Republican claimed that the people in United States territories ought all to be free, he was stigmatized as "a Black Republican." If any one affirmed that negroes were men, and had the rights of men, he was called "nigger-worshiper." If an Abolitionist protected a fugitive slave on the ground of his natural right to freedom it was assumed forthwith that he wanted that slave to marry his sister. And now, when suffrage is demanded for black people as for white, on the ground stated as an axiom by the Declaration of Independence, namely, that the right of the ruler depends on the "consent of the governed," an outcry is immediately raised against "negro supremacy."

Well, good people, if you insist on stating the matter in that way, let us make a bargain. We will join you in opposing negro supremacy if you will join us in maintaining negro equality; the equal rights of black people and white under the law. What say you? Don't hesitate.

The very idea of being ruled by negroes, by a different race, is shocking to you. Think, then, what it must have been to negroes, for a century past, the idea and the reality of the rule of a different race, a rule made harsh by law, custom, and prejudice, a rule enforced under the impulse of caprice and passion, a rule from which there was no appeal, a rule which held its ground against reason, right, humanity, republicanism, and religion, a rule which could be overthrown only by a revolution that shook the continent!

You have heard of "poetic justice." You have sometimes been pleased at seeing a specimen of it—the bad man getting from his intended victim, not what he sought for, but "what he deserves." Suppose the great Superintending Power had so ordered it in this case! Suppose that for a hundred years following 1862, it had been appointed that the black men should be masters and the white men slaves! Shocking thought, is it not? But consider a little. Would the case have been much worse than it was before. Do you think that blacks, in such a case would look out any more for No. 1, or any less for No. 2, than the whites did before them? Of course they would scorn the idea of working, and would see that all the necessary work was done by the whites; of course they would take for granted that whites had no rights which black people were bound to respect! But then they would be humane to their slaves; it would be their interest, you know, to take good care of their own property.

The very statement of reasons like this in behalf of a real supremacy of the blacks shows how flimsy, how hollow, how hypocritical was all that men were accustomed to say in defense of a supremacy of the whites, and also how flimsy, hollow, and hypocritical are the complaints now made against the voting of negroes, and the epithets used to describe that state of things. Under the reconstruction acts most favorable to the blacks they will have, and can possibly have only so much political power as the proportion of their number to that of the whole population fairly entitles them to. They will have only what we claim for ourselves as natural justice, the inherent "rights of man." Why should they not have these rights? How weak must be the cause which feels unable to oppose negro equality without first calling it "negro supremacy!"

What is the actual position of the Southern blacks in regard to the realization of an improvement in their condition? A national edict has proclaimed that they are no longer slaves. Is it strange that they aspire to be men and citizens? Wicked and shameful laws, enacted by slaveholders, depriving them of the rights of free locomotion, property, marriage, education, the power of contract, and a voice in the election of the rulers who were to govern them—these relics of the old system are null and void, broken by the rebellion that was designed to enforce them. Is it strange that the black man now claims to use such civil and political rights as the nation has conceded to him? Is it strange that he is disposed to vote, and to send his children to school, and to get a fair price for his work, and to take counsel with the friends of freedom rather than with those who seek the re-establishment of slavery?

The moderation which the colored people of the South have shown in moving forward toward the possession of these rights—rights but lately granted them by us, though our most venerate standards declare them the inherent and inalienable rights of all men—is truly wonderful. They modestly and quietly venture to take what the new laws and customs offer to them. They buy small patches of land when they have money and opportunity. They send their children to school when there is a school. They are ready to accept any fair contract for labor. When election day comes, they go to the polls and offer their vote. And they hold meetings to consider the best modes of making these new opportunities available. The whole demeanor of the colored man, under the improved conditions of the past five years, has been such as to show him worthy of them.

Strange to say, it is the continuance of the colored people in a quiet course of improvement like this which has brought out from the white people of the South the frantic scream with which their newspapers are now filled about the danger of "negro supremacy." Five millions of people having entered simply and naturally upon the discharge of the plainest duties of citizenship, twelve millions of other people cry out in alarm that they are threatened, that they are assailed, that they are about to be ruined! Non constat. It does not appear. The whites have the majority. The schools, the polls, and all the occupations of life are as free to the twelve millions as to the five millions; most of the land and the whole of the press is in their hands; they have the habit of organization, and they have always been accustomed to govern. Where is the danger? The pretense of danger is at once a falsehood and an absurdity.—Standard.

Good, Wholesome Advice.

If a wife wishes to be happy and have peace in the family, she should never reprove her husband in company, even if the reproof be ever so slight. If he be irritated, speak not an angry word. Indifference will sometimes produce unhappy consequences. Always feel an interest in what your husband undertakes, and, if he be perplexed or discouraged, assist him by your smiles and happy words to persevere. If a wife is careful how she conducts, speaks, and looks, a thousand happy hearts would cheer and brighten our existence where now there are nothing but gloom, sorrow, and discontent. The wife, above all others, should strive to please her husband, and to make home attractive. In a great many respects these remarks apply as well to husbands.

CAUTIOUS MEN.—Some men use words as riflemen do bullets. They say but little. The words used go right to the mark. They let you talk, and guide with their eye and face on and on till what you say can be answered in a word or two, and then they lance out a sentence, pierce the matter to the quick, and are done. You never know where you stand with them. Your conversation falls into their mind as rivers into a deep chasm, and is lost.

A patient is undoubtedly in a bad way when his disease is acute and his doctor isn't.

Governor Warmoth.

The numerous friends of this distinguished standard-bearer of Republicanism were glad to welcome him back to his home this week.

He enjoyed the enviable honor of standing in the National Convention as the first Governor elect of the reconstructed and repentant States.

It was at that one of the young and gallant soldiers of the Union, whose sturdy blows had knocked treason out of place and power in the South, should be chosen as the chief representatives of the State thus reconquered to liberty and Union.

The loyal sons of Louisiana are proud of their representative as of the cause he so gallantly represents.

Personal.

We have had the pleasure in the past week of welcoming in our sanctum the Hons. L. O. Hare, A. R. Whitney, A. W. Faulkner, F. C. Antoine, W. G. Wren, and J. B. Lewis, members elect of the General Assembly. These gentlemen are tried Republicans, and their presence in the General Assembly is fortunate for the State and the party. We were present with our personal friend Mr. O. Hare during his canvass of part of his parish. He is extremely popular with his party, and will represent his constituents nobly and manfully.

Postage on the Advocate.

Inquiries come to us from subscribers wishing to know the regular rate of postage on a weekly paper. Some of these inform us what the postmasters are charging them, and we find it to be three or four times the lawful rate. We state for their information that the postage is only twenty cents a year, or five cents a quarter, payable in advance, and no postmaster has a right to charge more than this.

Rev. Anthony Ross and Rev. Evans Green left this city on last Monday evening via the Jackson railroad, to visit their relatives in Baltimore, Maryland, from whom they have been separated for more than thirty years, and whom they have not seen during that time. Father Ross goes to visit his parents, who are still alive, and Brother Green an elder brother.

To their friends it will seem as they come up from "Egypt's Land" after a third of a century's absence like receiving them again from the dead. They went out bondmen, they return freemen. They went out despised chattles with none to acknowledge their manhood. They return citizens of their country, with all the rights thereof, and ordained ministers of the Church of God.

May the prayers of the churches whom they serve go with them, that they may have a pleasant and prosperous journey, and return renewed physically and spiritually to enter on their work of preaching the gospel of Christ.

Dentistry.—We take great pleasure in recommending all who wish an excellent job of dentistry done to Dr. B. F. Wright, 153 Customhouse street, between Dauphine and Burgundy streets. Dr. Wright expects to start North soon to spend the summer, and up to the time of his departure will attend to the work of all who call on him at one half of his heretofore moderate rates, if paid in greenbacks. As he is a workman of the best order, we do not see why his rooms should not be crowded during the time he remains in the city, even though it is hard times.

American Politics.

We hear a great deal of nonsense nowadays about the decadence of American politics. Bemoaning over the decline of statesmanship, prophecies of the "man on horseback," vaticinations of "imperialism," and different modes of a "strong government," and disparaging comparisons between the statesmen of this and former periods form the staple of innumerable political jeremiads. Of many of them it can truly be said "The wish is father to the thought," while others are born of disappointment and resentment.

That there are some facts at the foundation of these complaints is true. Some of them are well known. There are others not so well known. Take them altogether and we believe the conclusions drawn from them will be very different from those so constantly dinned in our ears by these prophets of evil.

For instance, the facts that political managers and wire-workers are becoming every year more unscrupulous and corrupt, that politics as a business or profession is falling more and more into disrepute, that our system of caucuses and conventions is notoriously imperfect and is tending more and more to exclude the people from a real participation in the choice of their public servants, are all well known to the public.

The fact also that eminent and esteemed public men, who have made politics the profession of a lifetime are being more frequently every day superseded by men who have won the popular favor in some other arena than that of politics, is also well known; but the reasons of this popular tendency have not been so well studied, and it has been made the ground for much declamation about military popularity, and the incompetency of the people to judge correctly of the qualifications of their rulers.

When carefully considered, however, we apprehend it will be found that the popular judgment is the wise and true one.

The sum and substance of the popular judgment in this matter, so far, appears to us to be this, that the men who have won distinction, and accomplished large results, indicative of the possession of some great and good qualities of mind and heart, in some line of life unconnected with politics, and not having political distinction in view as an end or reward, are greater favorites with the people than men who have labored directly for political advancement, and have made politics a business. The lesson to be learned is the old-time, world-wide one, written in the poetry and the gospels of all ages; one of the expressions which embodies it is this: "He who humbleth himself shall be exalted." The practical application of it to American politics is this, that the man who in any of the useful walks of life does something, achieves marked success, and couples with a character for integrity love of country, and fidelity to the duty of the hour, and who will make use of the opportunities and powers which he obtains to advance the public good, will at any time outstrip in public favor the men who make politics a profession and political distinction the aim of their lives.

The New York World on General Grant.

It affords us pleasure to reprint the following truthful and appreciative tribute to General Grant from an opponent. We commend it to the attention of the Times, Crescent, La Crosse Democrat, et al.:

LIEUTENANT GENERAL GRANT.

[From the World, April 11, 1865.]

General Grant's history should teach us to discriminate better than we Americans are apt to do between glitter and solid work. Our proneness to run after demagogues and spouters may find a wholesome corrective in the study of such a character as his. The qualities by which great things are accomplished are here seen to have no necessary connection with showy and superficial accomplishments. When the mass of men look upon such a character they may learn a truer respect for themselves and each other: they are taught by it that high qualities and great abilities are consistent with the simplicity of taste, contempt for parade, and plainness of manners with which direct and earnest men have a strong natural sympathy. Ulysses Grant, the tanner, Ulysses Grant, the unsuccessful applicant for the post of city surveyor of St. Louis, Ulysses Grant, the driver into that city of his two-horse team with a load of wood to sell, had within him every manly quality which will cause the name of Lieutenant General Grant to live forever in history. His career is a lesson in practical democracy; it is a quiet satire on the dandyism, the puppyism, and the shallow affectation of our fashionable exquisites as well as upon the swagger of our plausible, glib-tongued demagogues. Not by any means that great qualities are inconsistent with cultivated manners and a fluent elocution; but that such superficial accomplishments are no measure of worth or ability.

General Grant's last brilliant campaign sets the final seal upon his reputation. It stamps him as the superior of his able antagonist as well as of all the commanders who have served with or under him in the great campaigns of the last year. It is not necessary to sacrifice any part of their well-earned reputations to his. Sherman and Sheridan deserve all that has ever been said in their praise; but there has never been a time since Grant was made lieutenant general when anybody but Sherman on our side could have been classed with him. Since Sherman's bold march through Georgia, and his capture of Savannah and Charleston, there have been many who in their strong admiration of his great achievements inclined to rank him as the greater general of the two. That judgment, we take it, is now reversed by the court of final appeal; not by dwarfing the reputation of Sherman, which suffers no just abatement, but by the expansion into grander proportions of that of Grant.

Grant stands pre-eminent among all the generals who have led our armies in the late war, in that he has exhibited the utmost strength of will of which the highest type of manhood is capable. The defenses of Vicksburg and the defenses of Richmond were both deemed impregnable, and were defended with a proportionable confidence and obstinacy; but they both yielded at last to Grant's matchless persistence and unequaled strategy. And in both cases he not only took the long-contested positions, but compelled the surrender of the whole force defending them. Nothing could be more clean and complete, even in imagination, than General Grant's masterly execution. He did not merely in each case acquire a position which was the key of a wide theatre of operations; he did not merely beat or disable the opposing force; he left no fragment of it in existence except as prisoners of war subject to his disposal.

If anybody is so obtuse or so wrong-headed as to see nothing great in General Grant beyond his marvelous tenacity of will, let that doubter explain, if he can, how it has happened that, since Grant rose to high command, this quality has always been exerted in conspicuous energy precisely at the point on which everything in his whole sphere of operations hinged. There has been no display of great qualities on small occasions; no expenditure of herculean efforts to accomplish the objects not of the first magnitude. It is only a very clear-sighted and a very comprehensive mind that could always thus have laid the whole emphasis of an indomitable soul so precisely on the emphatic place. How, if he be not a general of the first order of intellect, as well as of the most heroic determination, does it happen that in assigning great and brilliant parts to his subordinate commanders he has never, when the results of his strategy were fully unfolded, appeared in the picture except as the central figure? However it may seem during the progress of one of his great combined campaigns, it always turns out at last, when it reaches that completeness and finish in which he contrives to have his campaigns end, that we see him standing in the foreground, and that the grouping is always such that the glory of the other generals instead of eclipsing his own gives it additional luster. It is this sureness of judgment which sees precisely where lies the turning point, which sees precisely what are the objects that justify the utmost stretch of persistence; it is this ability to take in the whole field of view in just perspective and due subordination of parts that is the mark of a superior mind. General Grant has taken out of the hands of all critics the question whether it belongs to him. He has won his greatest triumph over the most skillful and accomplished general on the other side: over a general who foiled him long enough to prove his great mastery of the art of war; and the completeness of whose defeat is a testimony to Grant's genius such as a victory over any other general of the Confederacy, or even an earlier victory over Lee himself, could not have given. Apply to General Grant what test you will; measure him by the magnitude of the obstacles he has surmounted, by the value of the positions he has gained, by the fame of the antagonist over whom he has triumphed, by the achievements of his most illustrious co-workers, by the sureness with which he directs his indomitable energy to the vital point which is the key of a vast field of operations, or by that supreme test of consummate ability, the absolute completeness of his results, and he vindicates his claim to stand next after Napoleon and Wellington among the great soldiers of this century, if not on a level with the latter.

The Bolters.

Some of the bolters, forgetful of their late terrific rebuke by the people, are already offering themselves as candidates before the Legislature which they opposed, and pursuing their old game of bargain and sale with the rebels.

We advise these gentlemen to be modest.

Some men, elected by Radical constituencies, are so far forgetting their constituents and their manhood as to talk very openly about money, and boast of its influence in the election of high officials.

We advise these gentlemen to look before they leap.

There are some rebels who are bragging about their ability and intention to buy up the General Assembly.

We advise these gentlemen to insist upon delivery before payment. There is such a thing as obtaining money under false pretences, you know.

To all, we say, gentlemen, your coustituents are watching you, and what they don't know we'll tell them.

Hon. Thomas J. Durant.

The numerous friends and admirers of this distinguished gentleman will be glad to hear of his arrival in the city. He was met and welcomed at the cars by a large deputation of citizens. We learn from the Republican that he is now stopping on Rampart street, between Canal and Common.

Editorial Correspondence.

CHICAGO, May 30, 1868.

OUR SOUTHERN WORK.

The Committee on the State of the Church made the following report on our work in the South, and which was adopted:

God has thrust upon us as a Church new and vast responsibilities by the wonderful success which has crowned our movements in the South.

Four years ago when this work was in embryo the most far-seeing and sanguine dared not anticipate the astonishing results we this day behold. Conferences have sprung into being in such number and with such vigor that their net-work of districts, circuits, and stations covers the entire States lately traversed by our armies, and wasted by red-handed war. Schools, academies, colleges, and asylumns for colored and white persons have been organized and set in successful incipient operation. The general statistics, as furnished in the bishop's address, seem rather like a fairy dream than sober facts. Yet there they are, plain, thrilling, undeniable, and here are the representatives who have participated in this marvelous growth, and shared in these grand triumphs, to attest the entire accuracy of those statistics.

Necessarily, a growth so sudden, extensive, and surprising would lack the stability, coherence, and efficiency which might reasonably be expected under other conditions. Then, also, it has occured amidst and in spite of peculiar difficulties. The passions and sectionalisms born of the war survived it. The Churches in the South which committed themselves to the twin wrongs—slavery and rebellion—came back to reassert themselves; to repeat their mischievous dogmas; to rebuild on the old foundations, and, it is to be feared, with similar untempered mortar, the shattered fabrics of their several ecclesiastical systems; to resist with every possible appliance—and theirs are neither few nor small—and, also, to the bitter end, the introduction and establishment of our system upon that soil. Nor are their appliances by any means few or impotent. It deserves to be known that some of our preachers and teachers in the South have been driven from their work, and others of them have been brutally murdered while peacefully pursuing their chosen labor among the people of their care. Prejudice and sectional proscription are formidable weapons in the hands of men rendered earnest and desperate by defeat and disaster.

The new relations resulting from emancipation, involving questions of great delicacy and difficulty, and upon which an extreme sensitiveness pervades the public mind North and South, but especially South, render comparatively easy the effort to disunite our charges there, and so to distract and paralyze our energies in that field. Great wisdom and sagacity are needed to trace the line of right in the most safe and useful manner.

The existing churches in the South have potent agencies and allies in their press, secular and religious, which are wielded with vigor and effect, constantly plying the public with reasons why we should be scorned and spurned, why our cause can not permanently succeed in that region, and why, on the contrary, they are the rightful occupants of that ground.

So far as the Methodist Episcopal Church in the South is concerned, she has been almost entirely unknown for the last quarter of a century, except to be misrepresented and misapprehended.

In that section, also, there is an almost total absence of any general system of education, happily so prevalent among us. This lack of educational advantages for the masses prevailed among the poor whites before the war. It still exists. As to the colored people, numbering millions, it is well known that slavery denied them the lowest rudiments of education. Improvement as to both these classes of the people is going forward; yet the work is one of great extent and of slow achievement. Until it is accomplished our permanent, complete success is not assured. When all these and other kindred facts are considered, they exalt the heroism of our true and tried brethren who, in the face of these formidable obstacles and amid perils which can hardly be conceived, have extended our lines and maintained our banners to the gulf on the South and to the Rio Grande on the West; and they also heighten our gratitude to God for the wonderful degree of success he has given.

The honor God has thus put upon us is only equaled by the greatness of our responsibilities. Shall we be found measuring up to their magnitude?

If it was wise to extend our work, as it has been extended over the Southern States, and of this who can doubt? is it not equally the dictate of a sound policy to foster, strengthen, and conserve it by all appropriate and available means?

The influence of a local religious press is demanded. The erection of suitable churches in all the great centres of population and influence is important. The traveling ministry of the conferences, already existing and to be formed, these should be reinforced from time to time by the transfer of our ablest and best ministers.

The educational interests of the white and colored people should be promoted by liberal and timely aid, and especially by the education of teachers on the grounds for the work.

While our bishops have displayed great energy and wisdom in organizing our Church in that region, yet its growing importance demands that our episcopacy should make itself officially and pastorally felt in all the South.

Your committee recommend the adoption of the following resolutions, viz:

1. Resolved, That there shall be established and published by the book agents at New York, on or before the first day of January, A. D. 1869, a weekly religious journal at Knoxville, Atlanta, or Nashville, the place to be determined by the amount of local advertising and subscription patronage which either of these places shall offer beyond the others.

2. Resolved, That in the judgment of this committee, the New Orleans Christian Advocate, at New Orleans, and the Charleston Christian Advocate, at Charleston, South Carolina, ought to be published as official papers.

3. Resolved, That the Missionary and Church Extension Societies be requested to render such special aid to church building enterprises in leading Southern cities as the bishops and the said societies shall find practicable.

4. Resolved, That a liberal system of transfers as suitable ministers to our work in the South is hereby recommended.

5. Resolved, That the maintenance of training and theological schools in the South for the preparation of persons for the work of teaching and preaching in that region deserves the sympathy and co-operation of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and we, therefore, hereby commend said object to the liberality of our people, and specifically to the generous aid of our missionary and educational societies.

6. Resolved, That the Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church be recommended to issue a series of tracts suited to our Southern work for circulation in that part of our connection.

Respectfully,
L. D. BARROWS, Chairman.

LAY DELEGATION.

This great question has been thoroughly discussed during the present session, and a plan adopted which refers the final settlement thereof to the people and to the Annual Conferences. The debate was lengthy and exhaustive, and several characteristic speeches were made. Old Dr. Cartwright represented the opposition; and the man, not his speech, had a telling effect. He reviewed the history of our Church since 1824, and thanked God that he had lived through two of the three revolutions on this subject, and he expected to live through this, the third. He attributed the secession in '44 to the overbearing demands of the slaveholding laymen of the South, and in his peculiar style declared that the "devil was in those Southern Methodists crossways." (Great laughter.) This old thunderer of the West was followed by Rev. Gilbert Haven, who read the most carefully prepared argument for lay delegation delivered during the debate. But the chief contestants were S. M. Morrill and Dr. M'Clintock. The former presented an exhaustive argument against the admission of laymen to our General and Annual Conferences, and which was not answered by any of his opponents. Dr. McClintock made the attempt, but failed; and this statement is made notwithstanding our admiration for the Doctor's brilliant parts. He ignored the wholesome maxim of logic, "Never underrate your opponent." We do not doubt the Doctor's ability to form a logical and triumphant reply to Mr. Morrill's argument, but he attempted to substitute wit for logic, which was too patent to succeed with Methodist preachers, and this we regret the more as the effect can not be otherwise than injurious to the cause of lay delegation. But we are glad say to that the Conference with great unanimity adopted the following compromise plan:

Whereas, The General Conference of 1860 expressed its willingness to admit lay delegates to the General Conference whenever the people should desire it; and

Whereas, The General Conference of 1864 concurred in that action, therefore

Resolved, That we also concur in the same, and recommend the following plan to the godly consideration of our ministers and people.

Change the Discipline, p. 45, part 2, chapter I, section 1, so that it shall read as follows:

Question—Who shall compose the General Conference, and what are the regulations and powers belonging to it?

Answer 1—The General Conference shall be composed of ministerial and lay delegates. The ministerial delegates shall consist of one member for every thirty members of each Annual Conference, to be appointed either by seniority or choice, at the discretion of such Annual Conference; yet so that representatives shall have traveled at least four full calendar years from the time that they were received on trial by an Annual Conference, and are in full connection at the time of holding the Conference.

The lay delegates shall consist of two laymen for each annual conference, except such conferences as have but one ministerial delegate, which conferences shall be entitled to one lay delegate. The lay delegates shall be chosen by an electoral conference of laymen, which shall assemble for the purpose on the third day of the session of the annual conference, at the place of its meeting at its session immediately preceding the general conference.

The electoral conference shall be composed of one layman from each circuit or station within the bounds of the annual conference, and on assembling the electoral conference shall organize by electing a chairman and secretary of their own number, such laymen to be chosen by the last quarterly conference preceding the time of its assembling:

Provided, That no layman shall be chosen a delegate either to the Electoral or General Conference who shall be under twenty-five years of age, or who shall not have been a member of the Church in full connection for five years preceding the election.

Also answer 3, as follows, page 46:

Answer 3. At all times when the General Conference is met it shall take two-thirds of the whole number of ministerial and lay delegates to form a quorum for transacting business.

The ministerial and lay delegates shall sit and deliberate together as one body, but they shall vote separately whenever such separate vote shall be demanded by one-third of either order, and in such cases the concurrent vote of both orders shall be necessary to complete an action.

Resolved, That during the month of June, 1869, on any day except the Sabbath, at such time as shall be determined upon by the pastor and two laymen appointed by the Quarterly Conference, there shall be held a general election in the several places of worship of the M. E. Church, at which all members in full connection, and not less than twenty-one years of age, shall be invited to vote by ballot "for lay delegation," or "against lay delegation."

This election shall be held under the direction of the preacher in charge and two laymen appointed for the purpose by the Quarterly Conference, who shall see that due notice shall be given thereof, for at least twenty days before the election, and who shall superintend all the details of the election. They shall report the result within ten days after the election to the Presiding Elder of the district, who shall report the same to the Bishop at the ensuing Annual Conference, to be entered upon the Conference journals.

It shall be the duty of the bishops presiding at the several Annual Conferences at their first session after the above elections to lay before these bodies the following proposed amendment to the second restrictive rule, so that as amended it shall read: "They shall not allow of more than one ministeral member for every fourteen members of the Annual Conferences, nor a less number than one for every forty-five, nor more than two lay delegates for any Annual Conference."

Resolved, That should a majority of the votes cast by the people be in favor of lay delegation, and should three-fourths of all the members of the Annual Conferences present and voting thereon vote in favor of the above proposed change in the Church, then the General Conference meeting in 1872, by the requisite two-thirds vote, may complete the change, and the lay delegates previously elected may then be admitted.

General Cyrus Bussey.

The many friends of the general are glad to met him on our streets again after his trip North. General Bussey attended the Soldiers' and Sailors' Convention and the National Republican Convention as a delegate, where he had the pleasure of helping to nominate the men of his personal choice for President and Vice-President. Having served under General Grant personally as chief of a large body of cavalry to which important duties were assigned in several of his most important campaigns, he had formed the highest estimate of General Grant's great qualities of head and heart. We should like to see General Bussey's extensive acquaintance and influence North, and his splendid business qualifications, brought into requisition in the work of obtaining for Louisiana that material aid which she so much needs.

The Memorial of the Finance Committees to General Buchanan.

We ask the special attention of our business men to this very able document. It is, we think, the clearest and most comprehensive resume of the financial situation of this city, its causes, and the remedy, which has emanated from any source. It is perfectly unanswerable in argument, admirable in style, and faultless in taste.

Messrs. Sullivan and Burbank, chairmen of the committees, and their colleagues deserve the thanks of the business men of the city for the energy and ability with which they have devoted themselves to this important subject.

General Grant's Letter of Acceptance.

We ask sensible men of all parties to peruse this letter impartially, and ask themselves if it does not express the sentiments of a patriot, a statesman, and a noble man:

WASHINGTON, May 29, 1868.

General Joseph R. Hawley, President of the National Union Republican Convention:

In formally accepting the nomination of the National Union Republican Convention of the twenty first of May, it seems proper that some statement of views beyond the mere acceptance of the nomination should be expressed. The proceedings of the Convention were marked with wisdom, moderation, and patriotism, and I believe express the feelings of the great mass of those who sustained the country through its recent trials. I indorse their resolutions.

If elected to the office of President of the United States it will be my endeavor to administer all the laws in good faith, with economy, and with a view of giving peace, quiet, and protection everywhere. At times like the present it is impossible, or at least eminently improper, to lay down a policy to be adhered to, right or wrong, through an administration of four years. New political issues not foreseen are constantly arising; the views of the public on old ones are constantly changing. A purely administrative officer should always be left free to execute the will of the people. I have always respected that will, and always shall. Peace, and universal prosperity, its sequence, with economy of administration will lighten the burdens of taxation while it constantly reduces the national debt. Let us have peace.

With great respect, your obedient servant,
U. S. GRANT.

Book Notices.

"A Suggestive Commentary on St. Luke," by Rev. W. H. Van Doren, two volumes; published by D. Appleton & Co., 445 Broadway, New York. This is just what its name indicates, a suggestive commentary, suggesting many thoughts in as a few words as possible on each verse of the Gospel of St. Luke. It is, therefore, an excellent work for ministers, Sunday school teachers, and Bible students generally. Its careful preparation is the work of nearly eight years of the author. The information given and the thoughts suggested therein will well repay the cost thereof. For sale by Krull & Dickey, 106 Canal street, New Orleans.

"Pendergast's Masterly Series." This is a small but valuable work for learning to speak languages idiomatically. Instead of starting the learner in the grammar immediately, a new and simpler plan is pursued of learning and transposing easy sentences, in fact starting out to learn the language more as a little child would learn it, that is idiomatically. It is a good work, and will be found a great help to those learning either the French or German languages. We do not know that he has prepared works on any languages besides these. There is also a hand-book accompanying these works explaining the principle, etc. For sale by Krull & Dickey, 106 Canal street, New Orleans.

"A Lost Name." A novel by J. Sheridan Le Fanu, author of "Uncle Silas," "The Tenants of Malory," "All in the Dark," etc. Published by Harper & Brothers, New York. For sale by Krull & Dickey, 106 Canal street, New Orleans.

The centre of the struggle in the ensuing presidential campaign will embrace three States, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Indiana. The Republicans hold all three now. To win the fight but one is necessary to them. The Democrats to win must carry all three, and lose none of their doubtful States, so we may look to see both sides put forth most tremendous efforts in these three States.

We have, however, one great advantage. The Democrats are divided. The La Crosse Democrat and the anti-war Democrats are making more bitter war upon the New York World and the more respectable portion of their party than upon the Republicans. The same hand that took the wheels off Pharaoh's chariots so that they drove heavily seems to be similarly confusing the modern Egyptians.

Death Not a Misfortune.

We are accustomed to speak of death as a misfortune; we almost never reflect that dying is a great benefit. The most of men get through when they are sixty and seventy years old. They get through; there is nothing left for them to be or to do. And although they do not want to die, there is no conceivable reason in most instances why they should live. They cumber the ground. Here and there is an exceptional case. The beauty of a ripe old age is the very thing that puts to shame an ordinary old age—useless, cumbrous.

For many other reasons it would be unfortunate if men lived in the full possession of their powers to an exceeding great age. Suppose that some men in New York whose names are familiar, who have the power of making and amassing money and property, and who wield the great administrative influence which accompanies great wealth suppose that they instead of passing away in a few years and making room for others should live five hundred years, already having scores of millions in their hands, and already wielding a mighty influence through their wealth and experience, nothing on earth could prevent their being despotic in the commercial world. What a disparity would there be! If, with the tone and temper of modern manhood, men lived five hundred years, what chance would there be for a man of fifty to cope with a man of four hundred years? How would one end of society, the upper end, by its position, by its experience, by its knowledge, by its wealth—if these were held selfishly or despotically—weigh down and oppress the other side! There was a divine mercy manifested in the measurement of the duration of human life in this respect; so that a man lives long enough to develop his forces and to accomplish a certain amount, but not long enough to use that accomplishment as a means of obstruction to others, or as a means of despotism. When men, therefore, are wicked and are holding high sway, we comfort ourselves by saying, "Well, they can't live forever!" And they can not. The shortening of human life, and the dying of men in this economy of life, is very often the best event of their lives. Even of men that are quite useful, it is their duty to die, and when they die they frequently, as Sampson did, accomplish a great work of deliverance. In life they have done, it may be, very much of good or evil; now let them take themselves out of the way and they will do something more. When a great tree is cut down in the forest you will see that around it are twenty trees that before had been overshadowed and had no chance to get the sun; all now begin to lift their tops up and to drink at the fountain of life and start up. Now that the old umbrageous monarch is gone there is a chance for many more. So there are many consolations in the death of men—if the right ones only would die.

BEAUTIFUL ZION.

Beautiful Zion, built above,
Beautiful city that I love,
Beautiful gates of pearly white,
Beautiful temple—God is light;
He who was slain on Calvary,
Opens those pearly gates to me.

Beautiful heaven, where all is light,
Beautiful angels, clothed in white,
Beautiful strains that never tire,
Beautiful harps thro' all the choir;
There shall I join the chorus sweet,
Worshiping at the Savior's feet.

Beautiful crowns on every brow
Beautiful palms the conquerors show,
Beautiful robes the ransomed wear,
Beautiful all who enter there;
Thither I press with eager feet,
There shall my rest be long and sweet.

Beautiful throne of Christ our King,
Beautiful songs the angels sing,
Beautiful rest, all wanderings cease,
Beautiful home of perfect peace;
There shall my eyes the Savior see,
Haste to this heavenly home with me.

The Boy That Was Wanted.

Dr. Bartram wanted an eraand boy. George Wayland heard of it. "I will offer myself," said George, glad of a chance to do something to help his poor mother. He was a small, chubby little fellow, but he was strong and willing-hearted.

When he went to see the doctor, "I am afraid you are not big enough," said the doctor.

"Only try me, sir," said George, "I am older than you take me for: I am eleven."

The doctor was surprised.

"And I can read," said George, "and write small hand as well as big, and I can do sums. Do try me, sir; please do."

"Are you a good walker?" said the doctor.

"Oh, yes, sir."

"You may be a first-rate walker," said the doctor, "and be able to read and write and do sums, and you may be very strong, and yet you may not be the boy I want."

It was now George's turn to look surprised.

"I want an honest, truth-telling, industrious boy; one who would feel that if he idled away his time when he ought to be doing his work, he was robbing me; one who would ask God to help him to be faithful, and who would try to act when I am away just as he would do if I were present. Would you try to be such a boy to me as that, George?"

"Yes, sir," said George, as if his whole heart was in the answer, "yes, sir."

That is the kind of boy every man who hires a boy wants, as well as Dr Bartram; and no boy or girl that answers to it will ever have to remain idle or complain that they find nothing to do.

Dr. Bartram took George into his employment.

The Journey of Life.

Ten thousand human beings set forth together on their journey. After ten years one-third at least have disappeared. At the middle point of the common measure of life but half are still upon the road. Faster and faster as the ranks grow thinner they that remain till now become weary, and lie down and rise no more. At three-score and ten a band of some four hundred yet struggle on. At ninety these have been reduced to a handful of thirty trembling patriarchs. Year after year they fall in diminishing numbers. One lingers, perhaps, a lonely marvel, till the century is over. We look again, and the work of death is finished.—Bishop Burgess.

THE GERMANS.—It is noticed that the Germans have settled in almost every part of the world. Besides being found in all parts of Europe, and forming a large and valuable portion of the population of every State of the Union, a large German society is flourishing in Hong-Kong, China; and Rio de Janeiro, in Brazil, has a population of fifty thousand Germans. They have penetrated to the most remote regions of Africa, and in Abyssinia have a very flourishing colony, which controls the manufacture of gunpowder, and is regarded by the king of that country as a valuable addition to his people. Industrious and energetic wherever they go, the Germans in all parts of the world are held up as examples of thrift and prosperity.

AMERICAN PREACHING.—Newman Hall says of American preaching: "The sermons are too precise, too elaborate, too argumentative, too essay-like, too much like books, and too little like earnest talk. Moreover, they are too often read with strict adherence to the prepared manuscript, and thus, though if reported verbatim, they would be read as finished treatises, as heard, they are frequently unimpressive."

People seldom improve when they set up no other models than themselves to copy after.

A German emperor took for his motto: "Better please one good man than a crowd of bad ones."

ONE OF THE BOYS.—In a Western village a charming, well-preserved widow had been courted and won by a physician. She had children; among them was a crippled boy, who had been petted, and if not spoiled certainly allowed great "freedom in debate." The wedding day was approaching, and it was time the children should know they were to have a new father. Calling the crippled boy, she said:

"Georgie I am going to do something before long that I would like to talk about with you."

"Well, ma, what is it?"

"I am intended to marry Dr. Jones in a few days, and—"

"Bully for you, ma! Does Dr. Jones know it?"

Ma caught her breath, but failed to articulate a response.

A MEXICAN TRAIN—Curious Spectacle.—The San Antonio Express says: "A large train of Mexican wagons and carratons arrived in our city on Saturday loaded with flour. The carratons were even curiosities at San Antonio, being a simple cart with a lofty covering, and drawn by a team of five mules. The teams were all matched, and the finest lot ever brought to this city from Mexico. The owner, a large, fine-looking specimen of the Mexican, accompanied the train, mounted on a splendid mule, caparisoned with elegant Mexican saddlery. The train expects to take back cotton if it can be bought. Considering that this train comes from Leon, in the State of Guanajuata, at least a thousand miles from this city, the animals look in fine condition. The return of Mexican trade to this city will cause an increase of our prosperity, and a railroad to the gulf would do much to secure this desired result.

HONORS TO THE BRAVE.

Interesting and Impressive Ceremonies.

DECORATING THE TOMBS OF UNION SOLDIERS,

A View of Monument Cemetery.

THE RESTING PLACE OF TWELVE THOUSAND PATRIOTS.

THE SPEECHES ON THE OCCASION.

In accordance with a request of the Commander-in-Chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, General John A. Logan, Saturday was devoted to the pious duty of decorating the graves of our patriotic dead with flowers, and commemorating their deeds and glorious death in suitable speeches and other ceremonies.

Two steamers were kindly placed at the disposal of the public—the revenue cutter Wilderness by Collector W. P. Kellogg, and the Ella Morse by Colonel R. N. Batchelder. Both boats started with passengers, leaving first at twelve o'clock, noon, and returning immediately for another load. The last boat left the foot of Canal street about half past two, pretty well crowded with people. A large number of ladies went down each trip.

The number of visitors during the day was very large. On arriving at the cemeteries the people laid their offerings at the head of the tombs, and afterward inspected the grounds with feelings of deep and mournful interest. They stood within a small city of the dead; around them were the remains of twelve thousand true men who had braved the perils of the battle-field, and exposed themselves to the many dangers of a soldier's life. They now sleep in peace after having so nobly performed the highest duty they owed to their country.

Of the number buried in the cemetery only about six thousand five hundred are known by name. The rest have never been identified.

Captain Barnard, Captain Hyatt, and Captain Gray are entitled to the special thanks of the visitors for the courtesies which they extended to all. These gentlemen have charge of the cemetery, and the perfection of its arrangement is a lasting evidence of the fidelity with which they have discharged their duties.

When the task of strewing the graves with flowers was completed the people assembled upon and around a canvas-covered platform, and to listen to the speeches. Captain W. B. Armstrong was chosen chairman. He stated the objects for which they had been called together in a brief and forcible speech, after which he introduced Rev. N.L. Brakeman, who addressed a prayer to the Throne of Grace, and then read general orders No. 11 of General Logan, and commented upon it in appropriate terms.

The chairman then introduced General L. A. Sheldon, who was to speak on behalf of the Army and Navy Union. The General spoke as follows:

Speech of General L. A. Sheldon.

FELLOW CITIZENS AND FRIENDS: The profoundest sorrow is said often to be manifested by muteness. Therefore, on this occasion it is perhaps not becoming to indulge in any elaborate speech. It will be of little use to us and of no service to those who are here interred.

I can not help remarking the appropriateness of establishing a national cemetery upon this historic field. It has been the custom of all civilized nations to respect the dead; more often it arises from relationship, personal acquaintance, or other ties. From the earliest times nations have been in the habit of perpetuating the memories of their heroes in history and in song. Many who sleep here are nameless. But their virtues, and the cause in which they fought, entitle them to go down to posterity by the side of the most honored in history.

We all remember well the feelings with which we were impressed at the time of our enlistment, when we took the contract of death. When we swore fealty to our government we but recognized that principle which was instilled into the minds of the Spartan youths when they went out to war, to return only with or upon their shields. Those of us who survive returned with our shields, while those who are buried here returned upon their shields to mother earth. (Applause.) They were actuated by the same spirit that moved Regulus to choose imprisonment, torture, and death rather than advise his country to a disadvantageous peace. There was in them the same self-abnegation that characterized the Decii when they devoted themselves for the good of Rome. The same love of country which actuated Jasper in risking and losing his life to prevent the flag of his country from remaining in the hands of its enemies. The same absence of all venality that actuated the bosom of Colonel Morris of the Revolution, who when offered power and possessions to turn against his country, replied that he was not worth purchasing, but such as he was King George had not money enough to buy him. The same pertinacious courage which charterized the dying Lawrence when he said, "Don't give up the ship!" The same spirit which actuated that brave Philadelphia general whose name I can not now recollect, who when dying of wounds, said to his physician, "Doctor turn me over that I may die with my face to the foe." The same spirit was manifested by an officer of my command who when pierced through the body with a rebel bullet, said to his men by him, "Boys, fight on to the last. I have lost one life for my country, I wish I had another to lose." The same spirit that actuated a young soldier whom I had on the twenty-seventh day of April, 1863, made a sergeant for gallantry, and who on the first day of May following fell mortally wounded, and when being carried past me desired to speak with me. Seeing the pallor of death upon his countenance, I asked: "Gray, are you wounded?" He replied: "Yes, badly, and I can not survive." Said I, "Don't despair: men sometimes die for want of the will to live." He replied, "I can not live, but I want to ask one question. Colonel, have I been a good soldier?" To which I replied: "Yes, you have been a good soldier, Gray." He then said, "That is all I desire to know. Boys, carry me on!" The same spirit that characterized another soldier of my command who, after receiving a fatal wound in battle, said: "It is as I expected when I enlisted—to die; but I have lived the life of a Christian. Tell my grandfather that I have tried to do my duty as a soldier."

It is too affecting to continue a recital of these occurrences. They may be carried so far as to become tedious. These illustrate the general feeling that pervaded all minds; and when I think of the death and suffering which have fallen under my observation it so harrows up my soul that I could almost wish that treason and all its supporters had shared the fate of Satan when he was cast from the battlements of heaven. But it does not become us, victors in the late war, to indulge in feelings of unkindness. It will not restore the dead to us, nor will it heal the wounds that have been made. We should now labor for the peace, happiness, and welfare of our common country. We should manifest a spirit of charity, and cultivate the kindest relationships possible.

Every soldier remembers the delight with which he was filled when the flag of our country was borne onward to victory. We remembered that it was the flag which Jasper lost his life in attempting to save; that it floated over Porter on the "Essex," and over Grant at Vicksburg, Chattanooga, the Wilderness, and Spottsylvania. Two millions of men bore that flag to victory, and among them were our fellow comrades here. They fought not alone for union, not alone for nationality, but like the patriot fathers of the revolution, they contended for the rights of human nature.

White men, remember that you stand here to-day in the enjoyment of the great constitutional principle of free speech undisturbed, that you are now relieved from the fear of a grasping and intolerant aristocracy.

Black men, you are redeemed and disenthralled, not alone by the irresistible genius of universal emancipation. You stand here with the hopes and privileges of men, because the soil of the country has been bounteously saturated with the blood of patriots, and because their bones whiten upon six hundred battle-fields.

Let us now and here resolve that we will stand by our country in war and in peace, and that we are the certain and eternal enemies of treason under all circumstances. We were permitted to survive to aid in achieving the victories of peace. Let us now, in the presence of these graves of our dead comrades, resolve that we will conduct ourselves in all future time, both in war and peace, in such manner as shall leave these sheeted regiments no occasion to rise up and rebuke us. (Prolonged applause.)

Captain Armstrong then reminded the audience that they had often heard of a man who had one foot in the grave, taken in a figurative sense, but he had the honor of introducing one who had literally buried one leg in his country's cause, Henry C. Dibble, Esq., who would speak on behalf of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. Dibble then delivered the following address:

Speech of Henry C. Dibble, Esq.

COMRADES AND FRIENDS: It is made my duty to address you on behalf of the Grand Army of the Republic, under whose auspices this day was "designated for the purpose of strewing with flowers or otherwise decorating the graves of comrades who died in defense of their country during the late rebellion, and whose bodies now lie in almost every city, village, and hamlet churchyard in the land."

It seems eminently proper that the day should be designated, and the ceremonies conducted by the organization to which we belong. The dead were our comrades and friends. We cherish the same principles for which they died. We are united by recollections the most sacred and lasting. We are gathered together by a common impulse to cherish the memory of the dead, to cultivate those ties of friendship among ourselves which were formed in the bivouac, in the camp, or upon the battle-field, and to care for the widows and orphans of those who lie around us to day. But there is in our organization something more than these elements of strength and unity. We are bound together for the purpose, and sworn to "see that no harm come to the State," as the Roman Senate decreed to their consuls in the hour of sedition and danger. And so it has been said that we are a political organization. In the sense of party preference for men, it is not true. But the war for the Union was a struggle for the ascendency of political ideas. Our armies were raised, our battles were fought, our comrades died, and our victory was won that the nation might live, that liberty might prevail, and that the vestiges of slavery might disappear from the face of the land. These were the political ideas for which our comrades fought, and suffered, and died. Here they lie buried around us now. Do you expect that the Grand Army will prove recreant to those principles, political though they may be called? No, comrades, our organization is looked upon by the nation with that confidence and hope which our people cherished towards their soldiers in the days of war. We will deserve that confidence, and warrant that hope, for we swerve not one step from that line of duty in which

> Four hundred thousand men,
> The brave the good, the true;
> On battle-field, in swamp, and glen,
> Have died for me and you.

This later May day is about the only time in the year when all over our broad land the flowers are in full bloom. Upon the far borders of the North the chill of winter has but just passed away, and

> The verdure of the meadow lands
> Is creeping to the hills:
> The sweet blue-bosomed violets
> Are blooming by the rills.

An earlier day would not have found the flowers there for the graves. Here in the South the spring flowers are fast passing away, and a later day might find a stint of those emblems of affection which we bring with us.

Comrades and friends, pause one moment and think that to-day, aye! at this hour, in the ten thousand burial grounds throughout the land, more than a million men and women are strewing flowers upon the graves of fallen heroes. Fathers, brothers, and sons; mothers, widows, and daughters; friends severed; lovers heart-broken, have met, bearing sweet tokens of remembrance to the graves of those but for whose death our country would not have lived. How when we dwell upon the thought it expands; the recollections of individuals parting and suffering and death; the story of a thousand battle-fields; the history of a nation's struggle; the ransom of a race from bondage.

If we could only hear the story of each one of these graves we would know nearly all that is good in human nature. How the old man left his grandchildren and came away with his son to lie down here in a grave marked "Unknown." How the young man whose quickened mind was all aglow with thought, and whose heart was throbbing with virtuous ambition, left his wife of a month, she who dared not bid him stay for his honor's sake, to meet death with less of sorrow than hope, and with no feelings of disappointed ambition, but rather the sense of glory achieved. How the middle aged man gave up the pursuits of business, severed himself from an affectionate family, and concentrated those engergies which he had developed in an active life to his country's good; how he gave up all to perform a duty which he deemed paramount, and at length gave his life which he could spare in such a cause without a sigh.

When among the dead we usually experience a sense of gloomy sorrow; but some how it seems to me to-day, when I remember how these heroes fell—died that a victory might be won for the right—that this is not the most gloomy place on earth, for I only think that each grave is surrounded by a halo of glory not to be likened to gloom.

"It is the purpose of the commander-in-chief to inaugurate this observance with the hope that it will be kept up from year to year while a survivor of the war remains to honor the memory of his departed comrades." And so we have come to-day to perform this sacred duty for the first time, but let us hope not for the last time. We meet here under circumstances differing from those which surround our friends in the distant North who are decorating the graves of those comrades who lie in the churchyards of their native villages. There every heart is alive with sympathy and there are many attendants at every tombs; here we are but a small band comparatively in one of the nation's burial places, and the graves far outnumber the hands that strew the flowers. Ah, comrades, we recollect to-day how we came away from our Northern homes, many of us marching side by side with those who lie beneath these garlands. Does it not almost seem that it is our duty to remain here in the South, if for no other purpose than to watch over this sacred spot, and come to it and bring tokens of remembrance from year to year?

In conclusion, comrades and friends, let us learn the lesson of the hour. It has been said that we come to honor the nation's dead. In one sense of the term that were impossible. Their honor and glory is transcendent. We come rather to be reminded that we must live for the cause for which they died. They gave up their lives that the Union might not perish. Let us see that they died not in vain, and in passing away ourselves let us leave as a dying wish the charge to our children. These fallen heroes fought the good battle against slavery, whose policy was to teach that ignorance is the mother of virtue and bondage the basis of strength. If we forget to struggle on and perfect the work which they began we are recreant to the cause in whose behalf they fell. We are here met in the midst of the scenes of the conflict—in the heart of the South—which was saved to the Union and regenerated by the sacrifice of these lives. Our people are kneeling today along the northern lakes, upon the shores of the Atlantic, and far inland at the graves of those comrades who are buried there. Let us, in unison with them, dedicate our lives anew to our country and to the work of Christian civilization.

General Hobart, of Wisconsin, one of the members of the Army of the Gulf in 1862, responded to the call of the chairman in a short and effective speech, which we regret our inability to present this morning.

At the request of the chairman Mayor Heath then read the following description of the cemetery:

Description of the Monument Cemetery

Monument National Cemetery is situated at Chalmette, in the parish of St. Bernard, Louisiana; is six miles below the city of New Orleans, and one mile below the United States (Jackson) barracks.

It contains thirteen and a third acres, was purchased by the city of New Orleans from its original owner, Mr. Charles Resner, in 1861, and has since been ceded by the city to the United States.

It was commenced by Captain N. Constable, Assistant Quartermaster, in May 1864, and will probably be completed by the latter end of the present summer.

It has a frontage of 250 feet on the Mississippi river, and a depth of 2317 feet.

Young cedar, arbor vitæ, and other trees and shrubbery have been obtained with some difficulty, and planted about half way on each side of the main avenue. The government made no appropriation for the purchase of shrubbery, and the only means of obtaining it was by procuring shrubs and trees from the woods, and by donation. The first plan has been carried out until the supply is about exhausted, and a large quantity is still required to beautify and decorate the cemetery.

If the loyal citizens of Louisiana who are known to have at heart the beautifying and decorating of this cemetery, where so many brave defenders of the Union from almost every State and territory therein are interred, would take into consideration the great want of shrubbery for this purpose, and furnish as much as possible, it would be one of the most acceptable offerings in the way of decoration, and it would besides be a lasting memorial of their generosity, and would permanently beautify and decorate the cemetery.

About 12,000 bodies of deceased Union soldiers are now interred in this cemetery, of which number about 6500 are "known," and the remainder "unknown." About 1000 more bodies scattered over the Teche country are yet to be removed and interred herein.

Fifteen thousand eight hundred and eight graves is the entire capacity of this cemetery. There were formerly about 7000 bodies of colored civilians interred in it, but they have all been removed to the Freedmen's cemetery adjoining.

The ground on which we now stand, on which this national cemetery is located, will ever be memorable in the annals of the country, it being the scene of General Jackson's greatest triumph, recorded in the history of the United States as the "Battle of New Orleans."

Six hundred and eleven yards northwest stands Jackson's monument, from which the cemetery derives its name, and eight hundred and eighty yards east stands a venerable live oak, under which General Packenham lay mortally wounded during a portion of that memorable engagement; this incident gained it the cognomen of the "Packenham Oak," and cannon balls are still imbedded in its trunk.

The associations and memories connected with this spot render it the best location that could have been selected in the whole of Louisiana, for the ashes of our brave dead who fell in the late rebellion probably mingles with that of the heroes of 1815. It is replete with memories of self-sacrifice and patriotism; the receptacle of the dust of two generations of heroes; and every effort has been made to render it worthy of the holy purpose to which it has been consecrated.

Captain Sheridan, one of the participators in the struggle for the Union, was then called on, and responded as follows:

Speech of Captain Sheridan.

So much has been said here to-day, and so well said, in praise of the silent battalions of the Union whose green graves spread out here before us, that to add anything of interest I feel almost a hopeless task. I hold, in common with all here, and with the loyal millions of the North, the memory of our dead sacred, and the ground where they slumber hallowed. And here, as elsewhere, my tongue refuses to keep silence when a word is asked of me in remembrance of comrades whose blood flowed freely that the flag we loved might not go down in disaster and defeat, that the nation our fathers founded, purified of its great wrong against humanity, might endure for all ages to come, and prove by its power and stability the falsity of all who say man is incapable of self government. I believe that America is the battle ground designed by God for the overthrow of all forms of wrong and oppression. A land where the broadest liberty shall exist, the only test of a man's right to citizenship, loyalty to the government, a devotion to his principles which impels him when they are assailed to stand boldly forward, and if need be, give up his life as freely as the quiet sleepers around us yielded up theirs. Standing to-day in the presence of our dead, memory is busy, and the scenes of the few years past crowd thick upon us. We live over again the stormy days of the war. By doing this we more fully realize the deep-seated love of country, the strong conviction of duty, and the lofty courage that animated the soldiers of the Union when summoned from their quiet homes by the thunder of hostile guns they took up their line of march, and never paused before the flag of rebellion went down before their advancing columns. And who to-day will say humanity did not breathe freer when the smoke of the mighty conflict passed away, and their straining eyes caught sight of freedom's flag waving over every foot of America? Thank God, we all in some capacity or other helped on the grand struggle. Thank God so many of us are permitted to come here to-day, and pay tribute to the memory of our departed ones. I come not sadly here to-day, but rather with a feeling of joy and pride. I am proud of the valor which won for us the right to speak and act as men wherever the flag of the republic floats; proud that under this Southern sky, within the shadow of yonder mighty city which our dead heroes helped to win, we can come and crown their graves with flowers; proud to feel that America, through the efforts of the quiet sleepers here, stands the mightiest republic in the world; proud to look upon these graves and say they are the mute but eloquent index of how well our armies fought and how lavishly they poured out their blood when called upon to stand by their God and nation. There is no soldier here to-day who can not recall some glorious recollections of the war. And as the picture flashes into view how the heart thrills. Proudly, yet with moist eye and trembling lip, we recall the forms of those who fell by our side on some battle-field of the rebellion. We hear again the stern commands, "Close up," "Steady on the right," "Guide centre," "Forward, march." "Charge bayonets" falls on our ear with the olden power. We see the glistening steel come down, guns grasped in strong hands, teeth shut close, eyes of flame, every chest heaving as the mighty line sweeps forward over ditch and parapets up to the very muzzle of the thundering guns, the solid earth reeling beneath our tread, the air throbbing with the mighty shout that burst from our victorious ranks when high over the stronghold our valor won the banner we bore flashed out its stars of glory. The picture fades only to give place to others, in each and all of which the fallen ones stand out bold and clear. There are friendships beautiful and lasting in almost every walk of life. But there are none more sincere than those formed upon the weary march and knit close in the shock of battle. When we clasp hands with one who stood side by side with us on many a field we feel toward him as we feel toward none other. And when we look upon the graves of comrades there steals over the heart a thousand recollections that make their memory dearer than that of others and invest the spot where they sleep with an interest no other in the world can have. That we come here to-day is but one evidence of how fondly we love the memory of our dead. Lying here upon the banks of the mighty river their strong arms wrested from a race of warriors are the representatives of nearly every State in the Union. Many graves are nameless. We only know that some one lies there who fell for America, and we crown his grave with our tribute of respect. Many a mother's darling lies in an unknown grave; all she knows is that somewhere her boy lies buried. When to-morrow the news flashes over the country that we have here decorated the graves of loyal soldiers many a heart will throb with joy to think that others have done for their dead what they themselves have longed to do. Many a soul will be stronger for the knowledge that we have visited the nation's dead, struck palms across their green graves, and pledged anew our fidelity to the country they laid down their lives to maintain. But not alone to our army is all the praise due. Brave men are sleeping here who maintained the honor of our flag upon the seas. Some, perhaps, who sailed through storm of shot and shell with grand old Farragut to the conquest of the empire city of the South. The army spares not in praise when the deeds of our sailors are mentioned. We remember proudly the wondrous circle of fire in which our navy sailed at Port Royal, we bless the hardy tars who manned the Monitor, our hearts swell with exultation when the Cumberland is mentioned, and we thank God that America had sons to stand by the ship, and fight her till she sunk beneath the waves of the Chesapeake, thundering her own requiem. We glory in Winslow, who near the sunny coast of France taught all Europe to respect our navy, and in presence of the continent covered our flag with glory. We remember the bay of Mobile, where, lashed to the mast, America's great admiral led his fleet to victory, and added new laurels to our navy. A thousand other recollections cluster around it, dear to the hearts of the army. The glory of the war belongs alike to each. The war is over, the old drum stands silent, the bugle has sounded its last charge and pealed its last recall. The sword hangs idly in its scabbard, the musket leans unused by the fireside, the banners that gleamed so proudly in the front of battle have folded their riven stars, and now stand mementoes of glories passed. Our armies have taken their tents and silently gone; the fields where they struggled gleam with the glory of peace, and another than death gathers the rich harvest that springs from their fruitful bosom. We are often asked, now that the war is over why not let the dead rest in the graves their valor won? I would not crush one flower that grows on the graves of the Southern dead. I only ask that the graves of our dead be sacred—free from censure and unmanly reproach. The duties we owe the living must not blind us to the duties we owe to the dead. Let us yearly crown their graves with flowers. Thus shall we show the world we never let the memory of valor perish. Thus shall we perform a duty, and feel that when we are gone we shall have a right to claim a wreath of flowers from companions left behind us.

Speech of Captain Jordan B. Noble.

Captain Noble having been introduced as the "Drummer Boy of Chalmette," said:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN AND BROTHER SOLDIERS: Though last, I hope I am not the least to address you on this memorial occasion. So much has been said by the gentlemen who have preceded me, it is unnecessary for me to say anything concerning the great war and rebellion that was concluded by the surrender of General Lee to General Grant.

I hope it will not be out of place to make a few remarks respecting this sacred ground.

On this spot and not far from here fifty-three years ago I had the honor to be present under our great commander, Major General Andrew Jackson. There stands the old house where he made his headquarters, and where I often served him as orderly during the encampment of American troops. Here we met and beat back one of the proudest and most daring enemies that ever invaded this continent.

Here Captain Noble gave his hearers a vivid and interesting description of the battle of the eighth of January, 1815, and proceeded:

Governor Claiborne then came to the camp in person, and was with the General almost every day until the enemy retired. Then you see that over half a century ago the poor drummer boy who this day stands before you in this honored place, surrounded by the honored dead, now stands the only living being that can be found of his regiment. There are many of the old veterans still here that belonged to the different battalions too old and feeble to be present on this occasion, among whom I will name the honored Anthony Fernandez, and a number of the colored battalion, too numerous to mention at present. The roll of the Seventh regiment was called on the eighth of January, 1867 and 1868, and there were none to answer to their names except the poor drummer boy of the regiment.

I would here remark that I hope you will not attribute to personal vanity the mention of my services to my country. Enlisted in 1813 in the Seventh regiment as drummer during the war, discharged on the eighth of May, 1816, re-enlisted the same day for five years, and honorably discharged at Baton Rouge; again re-enlisted in the First United States infantry and served as a substitute four years four months and fourteen days. I was then honorably discharged from the United States army in 1825; I came to New Orleans and made this my home till 1836. On that year, at the time Major Dade was massacred with his troops in Florida, the call was made by General Gaines for volunteers to go there. I then volunteered for that service, under command of General Persifer F. Smith, and was present at the burial of the murdered men of Major Dade. Major General Buchanan, the present commander of this department, was then adjutant of the Fourth infantry, commanded by Major Twiggs. To him was assigned the duty of collecting the dead bodies and reporting their numbers. He did this by counting the skulls of the dead soldiers.

I returned to New Orleans after three months' service in Florida, and was placed under the command of Colonel Cross in the recruiting service, where I served two years, and was honorably discharged.

The speaker then related some interesting reminiscences of the Mexican war, in which he was an active participant, and concluded as follows:

So you see, my friends, that the poor drummer boy who stands before you, did serve his country honorably and faithfully in three wars, and up to the last year was never permitted to enjoy the rights and privileges of a citizen of the United States. In conclusion, while I thank you for your patience, I can not close without paying a tribute of respect to the colored battalions that served under Major General Andrew Jackson on this very field, under command of General Lacoste and Major Savory. They do not need my feeble voice to add to their fame and glory. General Jackson in his official report to the Secretary of War spoke too highly of them for me to attempt their praise.

Ladies and gentlemen, I thank you for your patience, and brother soldiers, I hope the day will soon come when in this State, and all the Union our friends, and those who have been opposed to each other in this great rebellion may forget the past, shake hands, and make friends. Then, and not until then, will our country prosper, and all of us be happy once more. This day will then be often commemorated by the strewing of flowers over the graves of the honored dead. A few years more, and I must join the ranks where now my comrades lie, and my name name like many of theirs be a forgotten blank on the tombstone, and in its place written "unknown."

Let no hostile foot tread upon this sacred ground, but let the honored dead, the brave soldier rest in peace, his memory honored. Then will after ages read—yes children unborn in time to come will read of their deeds with admiration, and respect their graves. Again, Mr. President, ladies, and gentlemen, I thank you.

Remarks of Colonel Case.

The chairman then introduced Colonel Charles Case, remarking that he would read an original poem written for the occasion, and precede it by a few remarks.

Colonel Case said that in consideration of the many things which had been said, and well said, he should not detain them long. He confined his remarks to a single point: whether the immense sacrifices in valuable lives and millions of treasure we had given for the Union our country did not outweigh its real value. He had considered the matter seriously, and had no hesitation in declaring that the honor, integrity, and glory of our beloved country were beyond price, and more than worth all the sacrifices the nation had made for it. In regard to the poem he was about to read he would only remark that it had been written since twelve o'clock, and must not be considered a thoughtful production. He then read the poem as follows:

HYMN.

Tune—"Old Hundred."

All honor to the patriot dead,
Who fell that freedom's cause might live;
We strew above each grassy bed
The sweetest flowers our hands can give.

And thus beside each hallowed grave
We tell how recollection still
Warms with those memories of the brave
Which lapsing years shall never chill.

And here above their sleeping dust
We call their shades from spirit land,
To seal our pledges that the trust
For which they died for aye shall stand,

Dearer than aught on earth beside,
Sacred as all our hopes of heaven—
That for the flag, whate'er betide,
Our lives are pledged, and shall be given.

So on the field where long ago
Brave warriors stayed invasion's tread,
We swear afresh, come weal or woe,
We will be faithful to the dead.

A few remarks from the chairman and a prayer by Rev. Mr. Plumb closed the interesting ceremonies.

The thanks of the participators are due to the ladies of the fourth district for their very liberal donation of flowers.

The occasion was of the most impressive and satisfactory character. Those who were present at Chalmette Saturday will long have reason to be proud of their participation in the patriotic ceremonies there witnessed.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION IN BIENVILLE.

An Ex-Federal Soldier Shot—He Receives Eight Wounds—Dangers of Being a Republican.

A private letter received by a gentleman in this city from Captain W. M. Twitchell, dated Pine Bluff, Bienville parish, May 29, says:

W. H. Honneus was shot last night about 11 o'clock, at his gate. I am with him. Have sent for a doctor. Don't know how his wounds will terminate. He has six or eight wounds, not, however, in dangerous parts. I will write you again.

Mr. Honneus was the Republican candidate for sheriff of Bienville parish, at the late election. He was a sergeant in the Sixth Massachusetts battery during the war, and a native of Roxbury, Massachusetts. His advocacy of the Republican cause, and his speeches during the election undoubtedly led to this result: that the enemies whom he had fought on the battle-field endeavored to assassinate him now that the war is over.

VOTES FOR STATE OFFICERS.

For the information of our readers we publish a correct list of the votes for the various candidates for State officers at the recent election. It will be seen that Governor Warmoth's majority is 26,955, and Lieutenant Governor Dunn's majority 38,027. The majority of the other candidates on the Republican State ticket is as follows: Bovee, Secretary of State, 36,790; Belden, Attorney General, 38,912; Wickliffe, State Auditor, 37,817; Dubuclet, State Treasurer, 38,491; Conway, Superintendent of Education, 37,929. It will be seen that Governor Baker received 3509 votes, and that Major Damas, for Lieutenant Governor, obtained 7722 votes, or 57,044 less than were given for Hon. Oscar J. Dunn. We present the figures:

When the Pacific railroad is finished the tour of the world can be made in two months and a half. From New York to San Francisco will take seven days; from San Francisco to Hong Kong, by way of Yokohama, twenty days; from Hong Kong by steamer to Suez, thirty-two days; from Suez to Paris, six days; from Paris to New York, ten days; in all, seventy-five days. This can only be done, however, by continuous traveling and successful connections everywhere; and the adventurous voyager who attempts to accomplish the whole distance in the time we have mentioned will be pretty well used up when he gets back to New York again. We advise him rather to make his arrangements so that he can stop awhile at the chief points of interest on his way, such as Yokohama, Hong Kong, Manilla, Bombay, Cairo, Malta, Leghorn, Marseilles, Paris, and London. This will require about twice as much time as he will spend in actual traveling, and ten times as much money; but he will be well repaid for his outlay, and in after days can tell his children of the wondrous sights and strange people he saw in his famous journey around the globe.

SUCCESSFUL PUBLISHERS.—Boston has two new hotels built out of the profits of cheap literature—the St. James and the Waverley. The latter, indeed, is just over the bridge in Charlestown, but it is close to the back door of the business quarter of Boston. Mr. Dow, who built the Waverley, is the conductor of a magazine of the same name of extremely cheap writing, for the million and by the million. At one time, after securing a large circulation, Mr. Dow procured an editor and undertook to sift his wares and elevate his magazine. The result was fatal to his circulation. Discharging his editor, and resuming his old practice of printing about everything sent him, fortune smiled again. All the small writers in the country are ardent friends of the Waverley Magazine, and all their friends take it. Hence the hotel. The palatial St. James, with its front of two hundred and fifty feet, which would have been the width of a whole block if the site could have been bought, is bought by Ballou out of the profits of the Dollar Monthly, and other cheap publications.

A gentleman who recently journeyed from Waxahachie to Fort Worth writes from the latter named place to the Argus as follows: "The country lying on and contiguous to Mountain creek is generally rich, and sufficiently rolling to drain itself. This country, as I descended the mountain, presented quite a picturesque appearance. Sharp topped peaks covered with a thick growth of low timber, with now and then a lonely cedar shooting its spire-like top several feet above the rest, are seen jutting out on either side."

The Savannah News speaks of some prisoners sent to the Dry Tortugas as "Alabamians chained like dogs." It was no uncommon occurrence for natives of Alabama to be chained like dogs in former days, but as they happened to be only niggers it was "of no consequence." The complexion makes all the difference, it would seem.

The heats, hates, and passions of the hour pass away, but its records remain. Andrew Johnson, by the votes of three-fourths of the Representatives and nearly two-thirds of the Senate, will stand on the historic page charged with high crimes and misdemeanors. No ruler was ever thus rebuked.

FURTHER EXTENSION OF TIME FOR COLLECTION OF THE CONVENTION TAX.

BOARD OF REGISTRATION,
State of Louisiana, New Orleans, May 26, 1868.

AT A REGULAR MEETING OF THE BOARD, held on TUESDAY, May 26, 1868, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the time for the final settlement of the Convention taxes by the Tax Collectors and Sheriffs throughout the State with the Auditor of Public Accounts be and is hereby extended to the first day of July, 1868.

By virtue of the foregoing resolution I hereby notify all Tax Collectors and Sheriffs throughout the State to continue to collect the Convention tax up to the first day of July, 1868.

The Tax Collectors and Sheriffs are further instructed that they will be held responsible for a rigid enforcement of the ordinance adopted by the Convention, January 4, 1868, (which is hereinafter published for the information of all concerned), exacting a penalty for non-payment of said tax.

The Convention remitted all penalties up to the twentieth day of March, 1868, and from that time the penalty will be exacted in all the parishes where the taxrolls were ready at that date, and thirty days after the taxrolls were completed in the other parishes, the penalty will be exacted.

S. B. PACKARD, Chairman.

R. C. RICHARDSON, Secretary.
